We are in favor of the remonetization of silver in the true sense of the word because—in the language of J. C. News: "There will be no wrong committed upon the rights of any one by doing it. There was no popular demand for its demonetization, and the people were not consulted in the act. If there was by this act a change of contract, the people were not parties to it. More than three quarters of the people of the world use silver as coin, and more than half use it exclusively. This is the silver producing country of the world, and we should foster our own productions. The 412½ grain dollar is equal to the silver standard in any country, and therefor, good enough for us, a debtor nation and a debtor people. Until its demonetization the silver dollar was worth as much as the gold dollar, and when remonetized will again be. I have paid at the mint in Philadelphia before the war, 8 per cent. premium for silver dollars, in gold coin minted in the same building, and there was an established premium for silver dollars for years at the mint and at the treasury, and yet, no one then said gold was at a discount. The resumption of specie payment is a practical question as well as one of theoretical finance, and with all the aid we can get from silver will find it difficult to maintain.

At a county special election in South Carolina, last week, the colored republicans elected their whole ticket by the usual majorities. Let such free elections become general throughout the south, and there will be little cause of complaint. Fair play and free ballots is the essence of repulicanism.—Lagrange Standard.

But this acknowledgment is in striking contrast with the assertion so general among republican papers that the poor negroes could not and dare not exercise the liberty of the elective franchise among the southern whites. Democrats knew they were lying all the the time. "The essence of republicanism" down south is found in such as Chandler (Hayes' agent to help on with the Florida count) lately confessed as being perpetrated in Louisiana, as follows:

"IN LOUISIANA, HOWEVER, THERE HAD BEEN THROWN INTO THE BALLOT BOXES OVER 7,000 MORE VOTES FOR THE TILDEN THAN FOR THE HAYES ELECTORS, AND TO MAKE HAYES PRESIDENT IT BECAME NECESSARY FOR THE RETURNING BOARD, ACTING UNDER PECULIAR LOCAL LAWS, TO THROW OUT MORE THAN 17,000 TILDEN VOTES TO PERFORM THIS EXTRAORDINARY, EVEN IF JUSTIFIABLE, WORK," etc.

This is W. E. Chandler's open confession—one of the conspiratiors who helped rob Americans of their right to rule through a majority ballot. What does the Standard think of this specimen of the quaint essence of republicanism?—Goshen Democrat.

Too Muches Jawes.

The San Antonio (Tex.) Express promises to stand good for the following:

A tall, angular woman in a sunbonnet, with a stride like a man late for a train, came into the Recorder's office yesterday morning, and took a seat on the end of a bench near where the city marshal was at work at his desk. She removed her bonnet, laid it across her knees, removed her spectacles, and after snapping her eyes a couple of times at the city marshal asked in a voice sounding like sharpening a cross-cut-saw:

"Be you the man the locks people up?'

"Sometimes I find it requisite to appeal to that extreme measure,' replied the official.

"I know all that, but be you the man?'

"Yes, madame.'

"Well, why didn't you say so when I ask you?'

"I did.'

"I say you didn't'

"What do you want, madame?' asked the city marshal.

"I want that good-for-nothing skunk that was married to my daughter locked up.'

"What has he done?'

"Yes, phat's he done, the vile wretch? and she breathed hard, glared about and gritted her teeth, until the officer felt in his pocket for his police whistle.

"Be calm, madame, compose your feelings,' argued the marshal.

"He told me—if I just had him alone for five minutes—what a picture he would make?'

"Continue, madame.'

"I overheard him telling my darter he'd give 320 acres of land with a gold mine on it to anybody who would amputate my jaw with a boot-jack,' said she.

"What in the world could have induced him to say that?' observed the official.

"I got him by the hair and drawed him across the kitchen table with one hand, and had only hit him a time or so with the long handled skillet, and he was callin' me 'mother dear' and all that sort of nonsense——'

"You let up on him—you felt sorry for him, observed the marshal.

"Yes, I felt sorter sorry at his har givin' way. It looked like Providence was agin me. Mebbe I'll never get to lay my hands on him no more. It would be just my luck never to fetch him another clip,' and for the first time she seemed depressed.

"What could have induced him to talk in that absurd way?' asked the city mars'ial, feeling uncomfortable.

"But after all it makes me feel good to talk about it. It calls up old recollections, you know. It brings to mind about Matildy's husband. His har didn't give worth a cent. What a time they had holding that inquest. There was some of him in one corner, and some hanging on the fence, and right smart of him was wrapped about that ax handle. It makes me feel bad about these things, and then to think how that miserable little skunk got clear off excepting a few pounds of har——'

"What do you want to do?' asked the officer.

"If you can catch him just lock him up, and send for me; that's all. I'm a law abiding woman. I've notified the civil authorities to catch him for me. You will know him by the place whar I hit him with a skillet, the little, worthless shanked, goggle eyed, brassy whelp. Wanted to amputate my jaw, did he?'

"I really can't imagine what he meant be that remark,' observed the officer of the law, as she went out; it's perfectly incomprehensible."

A COLORED SKEPTIC.—When schools were established in the South for the education of the negro, they were eagerly patronized by the colored folks of all ages. Coy maidens of thirty and bashful lads equally as old gayly trudged to school with diminutive primers in their hands, while the small fry swarmed in the school-houses, and were entusiastic on the education question. Of Pete, the subject of our anecdote, it might be truly writen that "ne'er did pencil trace a whiter eye or blacker face." His former master, Dr. H——, had taken great pains with him, instructing him daily in reading and writing. In the fall Peter was to go to school, and anxiously looked forward to it. This was in 1869, when the sun was in total eclipse in August. There were all sorts of rumor among the colored people about calamities which would happen at the time of this phenomenon. A few days before it occurred the following conversation took place between Peter and a friend:

"Peter, did you know dar was gwine to be a 'clips of de sun next week?'

"Yes,' said Peter, "I heard de folks talkin' 'bout it.'

"Peter, I hear dat awful things is gwine to happen when it comes. Dey say dat de world is gwine to come to an end.'

Curling his lip in scorn, and fixing his big white eyes on him, Peter answered, with contempt, "Go 'way, niggah. Dont you know dat school opens in September? How, den, can de world come to an end in August?"

Influence of Benjamin Franklin.

"See here, old woman,' Henry observed with his eyes intently fixed on a "Poor Will's Almanac,' of 1807.

"Now, what is it?' said Mrs. Archibald, without removing her hands from the pie dough.

"Why, that great and good man, Benjamin Franklin, who writ into this almanac afore you was born, says:

"Never argue at home."

"Of course not. Any fool might know that.'

"But it's a good idea of him, notwithstanding.'

"No, 'taint. I know that much afore your old Ben Franklin was ever thought of.

"Then why don't you try it on once in a while?'

"Try what on?"

"Not arguing at home.'

"Who's arguing, I should like to know?'

'Why, you are,'

"I arn't.'

"You are.'

"I ain't; you are; ain't; yar; ain't; yar; hain't-yar; ain't-yar; hain't.'

"You. Martha,' she screamed, 'where's that poker? What on the face of the arth's the reason everything in the house is out of the road when it can do the most good?'

Henry made a brake for the door, but she saw the movement, and grabbed up a lump of dough as big as a water-melon and she brought it down on his head and gave it a twist around his neck, as though she was putting the finishing touches on an apple dumpling, while Henry blinded by the involuntary mask, fled across the front room only to fall out of the open window, breaking the eggs he had for breakfast, across the sill, and dropping through the open cellar door into the coal pile, where the old woman held him at bay with a soft pumkin pie, while Martha scrubbed the dough out of his ears and the smut off his nose with the stove brush she had been using up stairs.

When Henry got out he confidentially buttonholed Oxtoby and remarked with a cautious look over his shoulder:

"I always thought Ben Franklin was a fool, and now I am convinced of it."

A RECEIPT FOR MUFFINS.

As we all know, there are some women who are natural cooks. The natural depravity of inanimate objects seemed charmed away when they got hold of a bowl and spoon. Their ovens always bake on both top and bottom. Soups never scorch, nor biscuits sour. They always carry their receipts in their heads. With what exasperating indefiniteness do they answer you when you ask them how they make any particular thing—muffins for instance.

"Dear me, I never have much of a rule about such things.'

"But can't you give me a little idea? John has so often spoken of your muffins since we took tea with you, and I really should like to learn how to make them.'

"Well, I stir up a pretty stiff batter; depends something on how many folks I have to tea,'

"Do you use milk?,

"Yes, if I have it; if not, I take water.'

"Any eggs?'

"Well, if eggs are cheap, I break in a couple, if they are dear, I don't always.'

"You use some butter?'

"Oh yes! a piece about as big as an egg.'

She pauses, as if that were all. You timidly suggest—

"Cream tartar or soda?'

A look of surprise creeps over her face, as if she would say, 'What does the woman mean by asking so many questions?' but she says—

Well, if I have sour milk, I don't use cream tartar; if the milk is sweet, I put in a couple of spoonfuls of cream tartar and one of soda

You wish you dared ask whether it's table or tea spoonfuls she means, but if you are a novice, think it must be table-spoonfuls, the muffins are so very light.

She evidently now considers the thing complete.

"You haven't said anything about the flour?' you inquire—with inward trembling; but you really do wish to please John.

The look of surprise changes to wide-eyed amazement.

"Flour? Why, I supposed any goose would know about that. A good bowlful, of course. I always use my own judgment about the flour.'

You retire from the field discomfited, but not being discouraged, try to follow these "directions." The result is something very different from Mrs. Handy's delicate Muffins. John brakes one open very suspiciouly, and, after a minute's inspection, pushes back his plate—with that expression of huge patience which men assume when they want to say something severe but don't—and says:

"Haven't you any bread, Mary? Don't let the children touch these. They are as tough as leather. Why don't you ask Mrs. Handy how she makes her muffins? They're something like.'

You nerve yourself and pleasantly ask if he would like a slice of dry toast. (Such circumstances!) In a week or two, after a series of experiments, you finally evolve from your "inner consciousness,' and flour and eggs, some very creditable muffins—but you don't call your experience judgment.—Mary Blake, in Scribner for February.

Sampson Jones' Astonishment.

The other afternoon Sampson Jones, a boy of fourteen, was coming down Lafayette street, wondering if he would get a bowie-knife in his New-year's stocking, when a young man of pleasing [illegible] encountered him and said,

"Bub, do you want to earn a quarter?'

"You've hit me dead-center—I do!' replied Sampson.

"Well, now, you see that third house on the right hand side, don't you?' continued the young man.

"I see.'

"Well, I live there with my dear sister Amelia. We are all alone in this cold world, and although we love each other dearly we occasionally quarrel. We had a word or two this noon, and I left the house declaring that I never would return. I, however, got ashamed of myself in a short time, and wrote this note to her to evince my contriteness of spirit. If you'll hand it in she'll read it, forgive me. write an answer telling me that all is forgiven. And as you return I'll pay you and rush to her kisses of sisterly gladness.'

"That's a purty long story, but if your sister don't own a dog, I think I can earn that quarter.'

"Go up the front steps kind o' softly,' cautioned the young man, "and if our big, fat hired girl opens the door say to her that you want to see Amelia. You understand?'

"I t-u-m tum, b-l-e bul, tumble,' and Sampson winked as he took the note and started off.

He went up the steps softly, pulled the bell the same way, and in about a minute a portly matron of forty opened the door, glared down on him and asked:

"What do you want around here?'

"Put'n on a heap o' dig for a hired girl, aren't you?' he sneeringly answered, as he tried to look into the parlor.

"What! What's that?' she exclaimed, as she seized his collar.

"See here, ole gal, don't try to put on any nickle-plate for my benefit. You kin deceive the kitties and spiders, 'cause they haint traveled, but don't bang my hair—not for Joseph!

"You unmitigated villian—you impudent wretch—you—you———

But she didn't waste her strength in words. She sort o' picked Sampson up and sort o' shook the breath out of him, and dropped him over the fence on the walk before he could figure that two cats at seven dollars each would cost fourteen dollars. As he got up a young lady came running to the door and cried out:

"Mother! mother! What is it? What's the matter?'

"Come here Amelia, till we catch him again!' answered the mother.

But they couldn't. Sampson got across the street like a thirsty camel running for water, and as he turned and surveyed the house and the two females, and then looked down the street and saw the young man flying around the corner, he soliloquized:

"Dearest Amelia—darling brother—fat hired girl—waiting to rush, and so on—I t-a-i-k talk, and I'd have bet a hencoop to a cent that no living man could have put that 'ere job on me. Lordy! but didn't that old lady criss-cross all the ribs in my body by that one shake! 'Our big fat hired girl!' I s-e-e! 'My sister Amelia'—I c-o-n con, s-t-r-e-w strew,—constrew!"—Detroit Free Press.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitas, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for general debility and all nervous complaints, after having thouroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1878.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

An order has been issued by the New York Supreme Court postponing for sixty days the sale of the Erie railway. Simultaneously, another suit has been commenced by a number of stockholders, who wish to oust Mr. Jewett, the receiver, upon allegations of improvidence and mismanagement.... A grand banquet was given to [illegible] in Boston last week.

At Lynn, Mass., Mayor Bubier, who furnishes steam-power to forty or fifty shoe factories, stopped his engines, and the factories had to suspend operations, Bubier claiming that the engines required repairs. On the other hand, it was said that the most of these factories did not join in the crusade against the Crispins, and Bubier's action in stopping their motive-power was regarded as a strategic movement to compel them to suspend. He was hooted by large crowds in the streets, and induced to start his engines again.... A Boston dispatch says: "From 6,000 to 10,000 unemployed laboring men met on the Common to-day, and, after listening to speeches by their leaders, paraded the streets and waited upon the Mayor at the City Hall and demanded work. The were not an ill-natured or vindictive set, and exhibited very little of a riotous spirit—a fact due in no small degree to the large number of police on duty. The speeches were declamatory rather than incendiary, and the turn-out made such a favorable impression that doubtless all will be done that is possible in the way of furnishing employment by the City Government. At the close a vote of thanks was passed to Mayor Pierce."

Waterhouse Bros., woolen manufacturers, of Passaic, N. J., have failed. Liabilities thought to be $160,000; nominal assets, $60,000. Depression of business and shrinkage of values are assigned as the causes.

J. H. Schenck & Son, the well-known manufacturers of patent medicines (Philadelphia), have failed.... Jacob and John Huntzeger, late President and Cashier of the Miners' Trust Company, at Pottsville, Pa., have been sentenced to two years' solitary confinement and to pay a fine of $500, and to refund to Thomas Kerns, prosecutor, $24,000, with costs.

William H. Vanderbilt, the railway millionaire, while driving one of his fast teams, last November, ran over and knocked down one Matthew Riley. The latter has just died of his injuries, and Vanderbilt has been held in $2,000 bail. The family of the deceased intends to bring suit for heavy damages against Vanderbilt.

The thresher manufactory of Stevens, Sons & Co., at Genoa, N. Y., has been burned. Loss $200,000. Small insurance.... True bills have been found against Jacob H. Freeze, Harry C. Freeze, and Louis K. Freeze, for conspiracy to defraud the depositors of the State Savings Bank, of Trenton, N. J.

THE WEST.

Mark R. Parmer's private banking house at Yankton, D. T., has closed its doors. Liabilities $60,000, which Mr. Parmer claims can be fully met by the assets.... A Virginia City (Nev.) dispatch says that the threatened hostilities at Atlanta and Justice mines were stopped by the Miners' Union, which visited both mines in a body and ordered the miners to quit work on the disputed ground, and disarmed and removed the hired fighters.

A bill has been introduced in the Minnesota Legislature prohibiting card-playing and dice-throwing in saloons.... The Humiston House, at Idaho, Col., has been totally destroyed by fire.

Ex-State Senator Ochmig Bird, of Fort Wayne, Ind., died recently, aged 65. He had resided in that city forty-three years, and was one of the leading Democratic politicians of Indiana. He was largely identified with the construction and management of the Wabash and Erie canal, and had been heavily engaged in railway contracting. He had filled many important offices, including ten years' service in the Legislature.

At the Adelphi Theater, Chicago, Mr. F. S. Chanfrau, the popular and versatile comedian and character actor, is playing an engagement this week in his celebrated play of "Kit, the Arkansas Traveler," which is being produced with new scenery and mechanical effects, and with a selected company.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune telegraphs from Bismarck, D. T.: "A communication from Gen. Miles, at Post Fort Keogh, this evening, says: 'We have received Indian news which is really of the most startling character,' and accompanying is a private to your correspondent which says this news is official. It comes from an officer of Gen. Miles' command, and is as follows: 'Sitting Bull is now camped on Frenchman's creek with over a thousand lodges, including the escaped Nez Perces and the recent deserters from the agencies, numbering 280 lodges, with 800 warriors. Sitting Bull's own camp numbers 2,000 warriors and 5,000 women and children. They are splendidly mounted and armed.'".... Gen. August Willich, who entered the war as a private in the Ninth Ohio regiment, and served with distinction in a number of battles, died at St. Mary's, Ohio, last week, aged 68 years.

Look out for counterfeit $5 notes on the Farmers' National Bank of Virginia, Ill. They are well executed and calculated to deceive the unwary.

THE SOUTH.

The Deputy United States Marshal, Goodwin and five assistants have returned to Huntsville, North Alabama, from a revenue raid there. The Baisdens, the well-known desperadoes, who have been running a distillery in open defiance of the law for two years, were captured, and their apparatus destroyed. In Franklin county, adjoining, the officers destroyed a distillery owned by Green Holland and William Stanfield. Holland and five other distillers were captured. The same parties destroyed six large distilleries in Lawrence county. Six prisoners were secured.

A recent dispatch from Nashville, Tenn., says: "Collector Woodcock is systematically weeding out illicit distilleries in this district of forty counties, having since Nov. 20 suppressed twenty-four, destroying all their contents, and had forty men bound over to the Federal court. Legalized concerns are now starting in the depleted districts, distillers asserting that it is cheaper to operate them than wildcat concerns."

A great panic was produced in the Holliday Street Theater, Baltimore, the other evening, by the explosion of a gas cylinder. Several persons were injured by the explosion.... A decision of the South Carolina Supreme Court, to the effect that Circuit Judges must be elected by ballot, instead of viva voce, ousts all Circuit Judges elected in that State, prior to 1877, by the Republican Legislature, and retains Kershaw and Wallace, elected last year by the Democrats. It was a constitutional question involving the construction of the word "ballot."

Deputy Revenue Collector Davis has just returned to Nashville, Tenn., from a successful raid on illicit distillers in Smith, Putnam and Sumner counties, destroying three distilleries and arresting twelve men engaged in the traffic. They were shot into at one point, and returned the fire, shooting R. S. Moody through the wrist and through the side, producing perhaps a fatal wound.

GENERAL.

In the case of Edward Tatro, the Highgate murderer, the Supreme Court overruled the exceptions, and sentenced him to be hanged on the first Friday of April, 1880.... Commodore George N. Hollins died recently at Baltimore, Md., of paralysis, aged 79 years. He was in command of the sloop-of-war Cyane, which bombarded Greytown, Nicaragua, in 1854. At the commencement of the late civil war he entered the Confederate service.... A correspondent writing from the Black Hills region says that capital, the one thing needful to thoroughly develop the hidden treasures of the country, has found its way thither to an extent that would scarcely be thought possible within the two years that have elapsed since the inception of the Black Hills settlement.

Col. Wagner writes to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from Greenville, S. C., that the breechloading rifles sent by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for use by officers of the revenue in their raids on the illicit whisky distillers have been of great assistance. In a recent raid made by the officers under the Collector, in which they captured an eighty-gallon still and arrested the owners, they were assailed by nine moonshiners with shotguns and rifles. They responded with their breechloaders, and charged up a hill upon their assailants, driving them back, chasing them until they were dispersed.

The "stone man" recently unearthed in Colorado, like its prototype the "Cardiff giant," proves to be no stone man at all, but a grand fraud, conceived and executed by a man named Hull, of Tioga county, Pa. According to the statement of a citizen of that county, Hull, in February, 1877, molded the figure out of different kinds of dust, principally bone, and baked it in a lime-kiln. It is stated that he spent $10,000 or $12,000, and exhausted his money. Then Barnum saw that it was good, and came forward and breathed the breath of life into the enterprise, the giant being immediately shipped to Colorado, and its age set back several millions of years by plenary indulgence. Hull is the same genius that perpetrated the "Cardiff giant" hoax.... Business failures: Rhodes & Server, produce, New York, liabilities $100,000; J. M. Brainard, notions, Cleveland, Ohio, liabilities, unknown; Wood & Co., brass founders, Philadelphia, liabilities, $70,000, assets $45,000; J. J. Wrightman & Co., wholesale liquors, Cleveland, Ohio; Dovall & Co., general shipping business, South street, New York, liabilities, $150,000.

WASHINGTON.

The long dispute over the office of Collector of New Orleans has been terminated. The President has sent to the Senate the name of George Williamson, at present Minister-Resident at Guatemala City, Central America.

An organization has been formed among the members of the House of Representatives at Washington, composed of members of both political parties, the object of which is indicated by the following resolution passed at its first meeting:

Resolved, That the purpose of the organization now about to be made shall be confined to the remonetization of the silver dollar and the repeal of the Resumption act.

It has been agreed by the House Committee on Indian Affairs to report a bill for the abolition of the Indian Bureau, and the transfer of the business to the War Department.... Capt. A. K. Long, Commissary of Subsistence at Washington, committed suicide last week.

The President, it is reported, will soon communicate to Congress a special message on Chinese immigration. He will urge, it is represented, that the treaty obligations of the Government toward the Chinese must be strictly obeyed, but will recommend that authority be given to open negotiations with China looking to a limitation of the importation of Chinese, or a discontinuance of immigration altogether.... The President entertained ex-Secretary Bristow and a number of distinguished acquaintances at the Executive Mansion one night last week.

POLITICAL.

Ex-Speaker Galusha A. Grow is announced as a probable Republican candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania.

President Hayes has addressed a note to Congressman Glover, who introduced the investigation resolutions in the House, in which he says he will be glad to co-operate with the committees in the proposed investigations, and to that end promises to issue such directions to the heads of departments as may be required to secure an effective assistance in the conduct of the investigations.... The United States Senate, in executive session, has rejected the nomination of M. J. Waldron to be Marshal for the District of West Tennessee.

Senator Plumb, of Kansas, has addressed a letter to the President on the subject of civil service. The Senator believes that the terms of service of all employes, except of the judiciary, should be limited to four years; that selections should be governed by character and efficiency; and that apportionments should be made according to population. Mr. Plumb thinks that members of Congress should not be permitted to dictate appointments to the Executive or heads of departments.... A resolution has been introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature approving the course of Senators Hoar and Dawes in defending the commonwealth against the attacks of Mr. Blaine.... Hon. William B. Allison has been re-elected to the United States Senate by the Iowa Legislature.

Federal appointments: Benjamin B. Murray, United States Marshal for Maine; Nathan Webb, United States Attorney, Maine; Philip T. Van Zile, United States Attorney, Utah; John H. Hammond, of Illinois, Indian Inspector; Thomas Boles, Receiver of Public Moneys at Dardanelles, Ark.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

Two squadrons of Cossacks having arrived at Tirnova-Semenli to escort the Turkish peace delegates to Kezanlik, the Turkish commander at the former place believed an attack was intended, and blew up the railway bridge.... The London Times' Pera correspondent says: "Queen Victoria telegraphed the Sultan he was already acquainted with the action of the British Government, and that she had herself urged the Czar to make prompt and honorable peace.".... A Russian official dispatch announces that Gen. Skobeleff entered Philippopolis and extinguished the flames in the Bulgarian dwellings fired by retreating Turks.... A Shumla dispatch says that the Turks have evacuated Kazan, south of Osman Bazar. The Russians hereby secure the head of another Balkan pass. All the war material, etc., has been removed from Osman Bazar to Eski Djuma.... The Turkish delegates met the Grand Duke Nicholas at Tirnova-Semenli, and preliminary notes were exchanged. The Grand Duke then announced that he had decided to treat only at Adrianople, which should be immediately evacuated. The delegates having assented, orders were telegraphed to Djemil Pasha to evacuate Adrianople. Upon this decision being communicated to the foreign Consuls, they telegraphed their Ambassadors for instructions, and were ordered to remain and protect their countrymen.

The Agence Russe repels the idea that Russia intends to refuse European participation in the treaty of peace.... A Turkish irade has been issued, ordering the enrollment of all free males.

The London Times' Bucharest correspondent telegraphs from Giurgevo as follows: "The mortality among the Turkish prisoners at Fratesti is fearful. The station of Fratesti is becoming a terror to travelers between Bucharest and the Danube. Even if there is nothing worse than ordinary typhus, the mortality evidenced by the numerous graves in the plain surrounding the prisoners' camp justifies the apprehensions of travelers. I saw Russian soldiers digging huge graves, and near them, fifty Turkish corpses lying in confused heaps as they were emptied from dead-carts. Their ragged, half-clothed forms, and the frost-bites visible on their naked limbs, gave evidence of the hardships they had suffered on their dreadful march from Nikopolis." It is reported from Constantinople that, in consequence of decisions taken at the Great Council of the 17th, Izzed Bey was sent to the Russian headquarters with fresh instructions to the Turkish Plenipotentiaries, giving them full powers to sign, whereas they, at first, were instructed to refer conditions to the Porte. It is said that this resolve was taken in consequence of the pacific tone of England at the opening of the British Parliament, and also because Russia has given notice that she will insist on an immediate acceptance or rejection of the terms.... Mukhtar Pasha, notwithstanding the defeats which he suffered in Armenia, has been appointed to the chief command of the Turkish forces at Constantinople.

The Governor of Salonica telegraphed the Porte that 300 sick and wounded from Suleiman Pasha's army had arrived at Drama.... A Pera correspondent understands that Suleiman Pasha had with him at Drama 108 battalions and 115 guns.... Queen Victoria has recently addressed a personal letter to the Czar, and the question was asked in the House of Commons as to the tenor of this letter, but the information was refused by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Cable dispatches of Jan. 23 report that Gourko attacked Suleiman on the 15th, and kept up a continuous battle until the 18th, killing 4,000 Turks and taking 2,000 prisoners and a number of cannon. The remnant of the defeated army escaped into the defiles of the Rhodope mountains.

The flight of the Turks from Northern Roumelia has been the cause of incalculable misery to themselves. Open cattle-trucks were the only means of transportation available on the railroad, and into these the fugitives packed themselves in hundreds. Snow fell heavily, the cold was intense, and the swarms on the trucks were starving. One night fifteen poor wretches died on the cars from cold and hunger. Multitudes of the refugees at Constantinople are wholly without shelter, while the weather is severe almost beyond precedent. The English relief agents and the Turkish Government are doing something for the alleviation of the terrible mass of misery in Constantinople, but their means are wholly inadequate.

A London dispatch of Jan. 25 says: "War is England's decision. In the House of Commons last night the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that, on Monday, the Government would ask supplementary supplies for army and navy. The hopes of the peace party are wholly crushed by the evident determination of Lord Beaconsfield for war, and yesterday Lord Derby, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Lord Carnarvon, Colonial Minister, resigned their places in the Cabinet. Orders have been sent to the British Mediterranean fleet to land a force of marines and sailors at Boulair, covering the approach to Gallipoli, and six of the largest ships have been ordered to bring up a garrison from Malta. It is no longer a conditional neutrality that England maintains, but, on the contrary, active participation in the war.".... A Vienna correspondent says that, in spite of the negotiations, preparations for defending the lines of Constantinople are being carried on with great activity. According to trustworthy data, some 60,000 men are available for this purpose.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

A London dispatch says the Arctic steam yacht Pandora has been bought by James Gordon Bennett. It is stated that the vessel is to be used for another Arctic expedition.... The weekly statement of the Imperial Bank of Germany shows an increase in specie of 7,200,000 marks.... Alexandre Reno Dethou, republican member of the French Chamber of Deputies, is dead.... The budget of the Russian empire shows an exact balance between the revenue and expenditures, both amounting to 600,308,425 silver roubles.

The Geographical Society banquet at Paris, in honor of Henry M. Stanley, was a magnificent affair. Two hundred and seventy guests were present, including leading members of the society, James Gordon Bennett, and a representative of President MacMahon. Vice Admiral De La Ronciere le Noury presided. In reply to a toast, Stanley proposed that the river Congo bear the name of Livingstone. The Minister of Public Instruction entered the room, and handed to Stanley the decoration of the Academical Palm. The President announced that the Geographical Society had awarded a gold medal to Stanley, who was overwhelmed with congratulations.... Henri Regnault and Antoine Becquerel, distinguished French physicians are dead.... A telegram from the Hague states that marriage is contemplated between the Prince of Orange and the Princess Beatrice, of England.

A Dublin dispatch of Jan. 20 says: "The funeral of the Fenian McCarthy took place to-day. It is estimated that 60,000 persons followed the remains to the cemetery. There were forty bands in the procession, which was the largest since the burial of Daniel O'Connell. The other Fenian convicts recently released were among the principal mourners." .... Cleopatra's Needle has crossed the Bay of Biscay, and been safely conveyed into the Thames river.

The French Chamber of Deputies, like the Congress of the United States, is the sole judge of the qualifications of its own members, and the Republican majority has, of late, exercised very freely its power by unseating Deputies of the Right whose election is claimed to have been attended with irregularities. An attempt was recently made by the minority to impose a check upon what is asserted to be an abuse of numerical supremacy by moving the adoption of a rule requiring that hereafter a two-thirds vote shall be necessary to invalidate an election. The measure was violently opposed by Gambetta, who moved the previous question in order to put an end to the debate, and it was ordered by a vote of 312 to 186.... The Northumberland (Eng.) miners have decided to appoint a committee to settle the dispute with the masters, 4,875 voting in favor of this course and 2,096 for a continuance of the strike.... The Argentine republic and Chili have determined to submit their dispute about the Patagonian frontier to arbitration.... The Royal Geographical Society has resolved to give a banquet at London, in honor of Henry M. Stanley, and to invite him to read a paper on his explorations.

The Vatican, replying to inquiries of Nuncios abroad, states that the situation has not been changed by the accession of Prince Humbert to the throne of Italy.... The complete subjugation of Kashgar by the Chinese is reported in cable dispatches. The deposed Emir escaped from the country, and has appealed to the Russians for assistance in recovering his throne.... A dispatch from the City of Mexico says the Mexican authorities will endeavor to learn what officers of the Mexican army invited Lieut. Ward, of the United States forces, to cross into Mexico. The Government has determined to oppose the crossing of the boundary by American troops.

The great trial of the Russian Nihilists, which commenced at St. Petersburg on the 30th of last October, has ended. Of the 109 prisoners accused, the actual offense was proved only against twenty. The remaining eighty-nine were liberated on bail.... The nuptials of King Alphonso of Spain and his cousin, Princess Mercedes, were celebrated at Madrid on the 23d of January. The Duke de Montpensier, father of the bride, gave her 25,000,000 francs, in addition to a great quantity of diamonds.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

An Exciting Debate in the Senate.

A literal mad bull plunging about in the traditional china shop, says a Washington correspondent, could not have created greater havoc than did Mr. Blaine in the Senate to-day. Hamlin took the floor with a written speech upon the life and virtues of William King, the first Governor of Maine, whose statue was to be unveiled in the national memorial gallery. Immediately a calm settled upon the Senate. Every Senator was in his seat and the galleries were densely crowded. Hamlin's speech was a plain one, dwelling upon the life and virtues of Mr. King, and the reasons which prompted Maine to select him as the most fitting representative whose marble statue was to adorn the memorial gallery of the nation. When Hamlin had finished Blaine arose, and at once there was a general commotion in the galleries, and the throng of spectators bent their heads in all directions to catch a glimpse of the orator. Blaine's speech was a masterpiece of elocution. It lasted over thirty minutes. It was an analytical review of Maine's greatest men, and a selection of William King as the greatest. He spoke of the powers of leadership of this hero, and, in doing so, placed him as foremost in the movement which separated the district of Maine from the commonwealth of Massachusetts and made it a separate State. In this connection he dwelt upon the circumstances of this separation, told of the rancor and hate engendered between the people of the two sections, and which, to some extent, still exists, and how Maine was unable to bear the tyrannical domination of Massachusetts. He spoke with great warmth, and was very severe on Massachusetts people. He even referred to the part which Massachusetts had taken in the war of 1812, and gave it some pretty hard raps, several times making ridiculous comparisons, and producing general laughter at the expense of Massachusetts. All throughout the speech a whisper might have been heard in the Senate, and, when he ended, the Senate sat motionless as Vice President Wheeler was about to put the question upon the adoption of appropriate resolutions. The scene was at this point suddenly changed by the rising of Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts. He said that he did not desire to interfere with the formal arrangements of the occasion by presuming to make a speech when it was only intended that the two Senators from Maine should speak, but he felt that he could not allow the occasion to pass without some remarks from him. Then he even outdid Blaine's want of decency by indulging in a most partisan attack upon the people of Maine, a defense of Massachusetts, and a bitter charge upon Blaine for having dragged from the ashes of the past events which the respectable element of Massachusetts had long repudiated.

After Dawes came Hoar. His speech was very severe upon Blaine. Indeed, Hoar's main forte is his venomous tongue, and when he wishes he can turn himself into a bag of the bitterest gall. He grew very excited as he addressed himself almost exclusively to Blaine, and walking in the direction of the latter, with flashing eyes, compressed lips, and his finger shaking at the rate of forty motions to the second, he told Blaine that if there was a heart that cherished such sentiments as he had to-day expressed that heart did not beat in Massachusetts. He defended his people and defended their valor and patriotism in the war of 1812, saying that the only naval battle that had occurred off the coast of Maine was victoriously won by a Boston crew. At this point Blaine, with nervous excitement, shouted out, "No, sir! that was a Portland crew." This sudden outburst was the occasion of laughter and applause, during which Hoar's voice was completely drowned. He went on, however, and said that Blaine's attempt at ridicule of his State was done only for the purpose of ingratiating himself with a certain class of Senators upon the floor who may not feel over-kindly to Massachusetts. He even went further, and charged that Blaine's grievance against Massachusetts was the outgrowth, not of the war of 1812, but of more recent events. By this he referred to the failure of Blaine to secure the votes of the Massachusetts delegation in the Cincinnati Convention, and everybody understood it. Subsequently Dawes spoke again, and made the same point, only with greater force. Blaine quietly replied to Hoar that he had no desire to enter into a controversy upon the subject on this occasion, but went on to criticise Massachusetts' course in the war of 1812.

Dawes undertook to get in a little more abuse of Blaine, when the latter, as if unable to restrain himself, arose very excitedly, and, addressing himself to both his antagonists, asked if the Senators from Massachusetts could stand there to-day and say that their State had not bristled with acts of cowardice that bordered nigh upon treason. "Certainly," said he, "such acts of bravery as are recounted here to-day would have been better if done in war." Dawes tried to interrupt Blaine here to say something about the promptness of Massachusetts soldiers to respond to the call to arms, but Blaine laughed to derision this statement, and, walking up and down in the greatest excitement imaginable, said that it was not true, but that Maine volunteers had first crossed the line. Hoar took another hand and made a personal onslaught upon Blaine, charging prostitution of his office as Speaker of the House to accomplish party ends, when Blaine suddenly interrupted him and asked him what he meant. "I mean," said Hoar, "the Ku-Klux legislation of 1871." Blaine retorted that whatever were his acts then, Hoar, who was then a member of the House, was always his closest adviser. Blaine then fired another long-range volley of canister at his adversaries, and especially at Hoar. He repudiated the charge that he (Blaine) was trying to ingratiate himself with the Southern Senators, and said the remark came with bad taste from Hoar, who was one of those anxious for reconciliation and was willing to embrace every wayward brother in the land. This disregard of dignity and personal and political abuse of each other continued for some time. Several times during this scene the galleries became very noisy, and loud applause came forth unrebuked by the chair.

Regular Proceedings.

Friday, Jan. 18.—Senate.—Mr. Voorhees, by request, introduced a bill reviving and continuing the Court of Commissioners of the Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award. Referred to the Committee on Judiciary.... Mr. Ferry presented a memorial from the Michigan State Grange in favor of the construction of a ship canal across the lower peninsula of that State. Referred.... Mr. Cameron presented a resolution of the Wisconsin Legislature in favor of the improvement of the St. Croix river. Referred.... Mr. Christiancy, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on the Senate bill to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and it was indefinitely postponed.... At the expiration of the morning hour the Senate resumed consideration of unfinished business, being the resolution of Mr. Matthews declaring the right of the Government to pay the interest and principal of the bonds in silver, and Mr. Merrimon and Mr. Maxey spoke in favor thereof.... The Vice President laid before the Senate a report of the Attorney General that he found no authority in present laws for the President to oblige the Union Pacific railroad to prorate with the Kansas Pacific, and that additional legislation is necessary. Referred.... After executive session the Senate adjourned till Monday.

House.—Mr. Durham reported the Military Academy Appropriation bill, appropriating $272,183, and it was made the special order for Tuesday next.... Mr. Singleton introduced a bill extending the jurisdiction of the Southern Claims Commission. Referred.... Mr. Springer, from the Election Committee, presented a report in regard to the contested-election case for the Fourth District of California. The report declares that Peter D. Wigginton is entitled to the seat. Mr. Hiscock submitted a minority report, declaring Romualdo Pacheco entitled to a seat. Printed and recommitted.... Mr. Mills, of Texas, introduced a bill donating lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the education of females. Referred.... The House went into committee of the whole on private bills.... Afterward, Mr. Hanna called up the Senate resolutions in regard to the death of Senator O. P. Morton, and eulogies on the life and public services of the dead Senator were pronounced by Messrs. Hanna, Browne, Hunter, Calkins, Wilson, Hardenbergh, Garfield, Dunnell, Williams of Wisconsin, and Hazleton. The resolutions were adopted, and the House adjourned till Monday.

Monday, Jan. 21.—Senate.—A bill having been reported to the Senate, Mr. Beck submitted a concurrent resolution declaring that it is unnecessary and inexpedient to impose the taxes at this time asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury to provide $37,000,000 for a sinking fund, and directing the Secretary not to purchase any more bonds for the liquidation of the public debt until directed to do so by Congress. Laid over and printed.... Bills were introduced and referred as follows: By Mr. McDonald, to establish a mint for the coinage of gold and silver at Indianapolis, Ind.; by Mr. Cameron, authorizing the coinage of a standard silver dollar, and providing that gold and silver jointly, and not otherwise, shall be a legal tender; by Mr. Eustis, to authorize the establishment of mail steamship service between the United States and the empire of Brazil.... At the expiration of the morning hour, the Senate resumed consideration of the resolution of Mr. Matthews, declaring the right of the Government to pay its bonds in silver, and Mr. Jones, of Florida, and Mr. Cockrell spoke in favor thereof.... Executive business was then transacted, and the Senate adjourned.

House.—Bills were introduced: Proposing an amendment to the constitution providing that no claim against the United States shall ever be paid unless the claim shall have been presented to the proper tribunal within ten years from the time the claim shall have accrued; authorizing the coinage of the silver dollar, and declaring gold and silver jointly, and not otherwise, to be full legal tender; to regulate inter-State commerce, and prohibit unjust discrimination by common carriers; for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department; restricting the admission of cadets at West Point; to prevent the further destruction, or retirement of the United States treasury notes; declaring the sense of Congress in regard to subsidies; to suspend for five years the operation of the law requiring the purchase annually of 1 per cent. of the debt of the United States.... Mr. Southard moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill authorizing the payment of customs duties in legal-tender notes after the 1st of January, 1879. The motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was defeated—yeas, 164; nays, 96—not two-thirds in the affirmative.... The House then adjourned.

Tuesday, Jan. 22.—Senate.—Mr. Morrill, from the Finance Committee, reported a bill to remit taxes on insolvent savings banks.... A few unimportant bills were introduced.... The statue of William King, once Governor of Maine, contributed by that State to the National Statuary Hall, was accepted, after a sharp debate between Messrs. Blaine, Hoar and Dawes.

House.—Mr. Willis, of New York, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill authorizing Rear Admiral John J. Almy to receive a decoration from the King of the Hawaiian islands. Passed.... The House spent a considerable portion of the day in considering a bill to amend the existing laws concerning commerce and navigation.... The joint resolution accepting the statue of William King was passed.

Wednesday, Jan. 23.—Senate.—Mr. Blaine introduced a bill to coin a silver dollar of so many grains as the Director of the Mint shall from time to time prescribe, to be a legal-tender in common with gold coin up to and including $5, and for all sums exceeding $5 the debtor shall have the right to tender, and the creditor to demand, one-half of the amount in gold coin and one-half in silver coin.... Mr. Ferry introduced a bill to regulate the compensation of Postmasters and for other purposes. Referred. It provides, as its main feature, that the compensation for fourth-class Postmasters shall be based upon the stamps canceled in their offices instead of stamps sold.... The Senate then resumed consideration of unfinished business—the resolution of Mr. Matthews to pay the interest and principal of bonds in silver—and Mr. Cockrell continued his remarks in favor of the resolution. Mr. Randolph spoke in opposition to the resolution, and in favor of gold as the single standard of value.

House.—The proceedings in the House were exceedingly tame, the greater portion of the day's session being devoted to the consideration of the Steamboat bill.

Thursday, Jan. 24.—Senate.—Messrs. Howe and Cameron, of Wisconsin, presented resolutions from the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce in favor of extending the time for completing the Northern Pacific railroad on certain conditions. Referred.... At the expiration of the morning hour, the Senate resumed consideration of the resolution of Mr. Matthews to pay the interest and principal of bonds in silver, and Mr. Lamar spoke in regard thereto. He opposed the remonetization of silver, and advocated the single gold standard.

House.—The House spent another day in discussing the Steamboat bill.

The Victim of a Double.

"My father," said Edwin Booth, the tragedian, "was charged with a good many excesses which ought not to have been laid at his door. He was the victim of a double. I do not mean to say that he was wholly free from faults, or that he was not given to occasional indulgences and some strange eccentricities; but he was followed about by a man who bore a striking personal resemblance to him, and who was a worthless vagabond. This fellow crawled out of a good many scrapes by assuming my father's name. On one occasion my father disappointed a Baltimore manager. On the evening that he was to appear the audience assembled, and the manager, hoping against hope that Booth would come, waited and waited. When it was almost time for the curtain to go up, this vagabond came into the green-room. The manager arose and greeted him as Mr. Booth. 'I am not Booth,' he said, 'but am perfectly familiar with his part!' A hurried consultation was held, and it was decided to let the stranger essay the role. He went on the stage and played it through without a break, and the people went away saying: 'Booth was not at his best to-night.' But of those who listened not one in a hundred had a suspicion of the deception practiced upon them."

"How did your father treat this double?"

"He didn't treat him at all. He very seldom saw him. The fellow kept out of his way. But while he was assuming my father's character, he would stand on the street corners half drunk, and recite long soliloquies from Shakspeare. Then he would pass around the hat and take up a collection, and the people, thinking Booth was indulging in some foolish pastime, would drop money into the hat. One day my brother, Junius Brutus, who was then a stout, lusty young fellow, came along and found this man personating Booth, and telling the street-corner crowd that he was the actor. My brother's anger outran his discretion, and he knocked the vagabond down. But the people, still believing that the stroller was really Booth, took sides with him and threatened to mob Junius for striking his father. He came to the conclusion that it was rather dangerous business to vindicate the family name."—Interview with Edwin Booth.

Schuyler Colfax as a Hotel Clerk.

The Dubuque Herald tells a good story about Mr. Colfax and a landlord at Warren, Iowa. Mr. Colfax was traveling in Iowa lately, and arrived at the latter station at 9 a. m., and had to wait several hours for a train. As the guest decided to remain in the waiting-room till daylight, the landlord, not knowing who Mr. Colfax was, and wanting an hour's rest, asked the ex-Vice President if he wouldn't wake the porter at a certain hour, and also tap at the room-doors of the female "help," and make himself generally useful. Mr. Colfax readily assented, and began by polishing the stove, sweeping the floors, and doing what any other handy and industrious citizen would have done. The porter was awakened, the girls were rapped up, and a roaring fire greeted "mine host," who on rising complimented Mr. Colfax on his efficiency. When the train arrived, some one stepped on to the platform and saluted Mr. Colfax with, "God bless you, Schuyler Colfax; what in the world are you doing here?" The landlord was amazed, and was just able to ask: "Are you Schuyler Colfax?" And when the inn-keeper left, "you could have played marbles on his coat-tails."

Lieut. Bullis, the hero of the Mexican raids, is a man of 30, with jetty hair and mustache, about five feet eight inches in height, and a model of physical strength and endurance. He has served on the Texas frontier for the last eleven years, and is now in command of an effective company of Seminole scouts.

Two or three officers from the Japanese War Department will shortly be sent to the seat of war in Europe; a man-of-war will likewise be sent from the Navy Department to the Black sea.

Stanley at Rome.

A correspondent in Rome writes that Henry M. Stanley was presented with a splendid gold medal, the gift of the late Victor Emmanuel, in recognition of his great services as an African explorer. The King had been greatly struck with the brilliancy of Stanley's achievements, and on all occasions expressed the highest admiration for him. It was his intention to present the medal personally to Stanley, but, feeling his end approaching, he was determined that the gift should be accompanied by a personal communication.

The medal, which is of beautiful workmanship, bears the simple inscription, "Henry M. Stanley, the intrepid African explorer," and it was accompanied with a letter from the dead King containing the most flattering compliments, marking Victor Emmanuel's appreciation of Stanley's numerous geographical discoveries and the great services he has rendered to humanity and civilization. The medal was presented by Signor Carrenti, President of the Italian Geographical Society, who made a short address containing many handsome compliments, and assuring Mr. Stanley of the high appreciation in which his great work was held by the savants of Italy.

Mr. Stanley made a short and suitable reply, returning thanks for the honor done him, and expressing his gratitude in a particular manner to the late King for the handsome medal and the kind and flattering compliments contained in the letter, which he would treasure through life as one of his happiest souvenirs. After the presentation, Mr. Stanley, the members of the Geographical Society, and other distinguished gentlemen, were entertained at a banquet by Baron Telfener. At the conclusion of the dinner, which was splendidly served, many speeches were made, showing appreciation of Mr. Stanley's great work, and passing encomiums on his courage, enterprise, and devotion.

The death of the King lent a certain gravity to the occasion, and was referred to as a national calamity. Mr. Stanley made a short speech, acknowledging the high compliments paid him.

A Large Steamer.

The largest vessel afloat, the Great Eastern excepted, is now lying in the Alfred dock at Birkenhead. The Hooper, the property of the Hooper Telegraph Company, of London, was built at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1873, is an iron steamer between 360 feet and 370 feet long, is sixty feet across, and has a depth of hold of about forty feet. She was principally constructed for purposes of cable-laying, and, between the year in which left the stocks and 1876, she successfully deposited eight submarine telegraph lines upon the sea-bottom, between Cuba and Santiago, Santa Cruz and Porto Rico, Demerara and Para, and various other points. Built from a model designed to unite great spaciousness with seagoing capacity, the Hooper is flat-bottomed, and has large iron storage cylinders of great depth and width; while it is claimed for her that she exceeds the Great Eastern in carrying capacity, and is able "to go down to the sea" with a dead weight of cargo of something like 12,000 tons. —London Times.

The Syndicate Contract Revoked.

At a recent Cabinet meeting Secretary Sherman informed the Cabinet he had notified the syndicate that the contract with them for placing the 4-per-cent. bonds would be considered annulled on the 24th inst., that being the end of the ten days' notice by the terms of contract. The skeleton of an advertisement sent to the newspapers was read, offering to the public the 4-per-cent. bonds for gold at par, and notifying the public that gold could be obtained for purchase at any bank at the market rates. A circular will be sent to banks and bankers offering them a discount of one-half of 1 per cent. for disposing of these bonds, and announcing that the Government will sell gold sufficient for purposes of exchange in placing them upon the market.

The treasury of Nevada has a balance of $176,606, and the Comptroller thinks that the State tax for 1878 can be safely reduced to 40 cents on each $100.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

Raising a Motherless Colt.—The best thing for a motherless colt is cow's milk diluted with about twenty-five per centum of water and with a little sugar added. The milk, if possible, should be from a newly-calved cow. In addition, the colt might have thin gruel made of oatmeal and linseed meal equal parts, the linseed being reduced or increased according as it is found that the bowels are relaxed or constipated. The addition of a few raw eggs to the gruel will improve it.—Toronto Globe.

Water-Proof Finish for Raw-Hide.—As raw hide contains a large amount of gelatine, or glue, which is very soluble in water, it will certainly be softened by wet weather. One of the best materials to make gelatine insoluble is tannin, hence the tanning of leather, which makes hide water-proof; however, it spoils the finish of raw-hide. We would therefore suggest the use of a saturated hot solution of bichromate of potash. Hide covered repeatedly with this and exposed to the sunlight (which is an essential condition to make it effective) will have its gelatine made insoluble without injuring its finished appearance, and wet weather will not affect it much. —Manufacturer and Builder.

Packing Eggs for Shipment.—It is only through careless packing that eggs get spoiled for hatching during carriage. They must be packed so that there will be no jarring. A good way is to have a box made of half or three-quarter inch pine, of such a size that the eggs can be packed, leaving at least an inch space around them. Then wrap up the egg in soft paper, leaving a good-sized bunch of paper at the end. Pack the egg in oat chaff or some substance that will not shift and let the egg touch the side of the box. Bran is frequently recommended, but it has the objection that it shifts, and the egg is thus jarred and killed. Fine, uncut hay is a good thing for packing. The top of the box should be screwed, not nailed, on.—Toronto Globe.

Exposing manure to air, either in the farm-yard, or, still worse, in small heaps in the open field, causes the loss of a considerable amount of its beneficial properties, owing to the evaporation or escape of some of its fertilizing gases into the surrounding air. By sowing a bushel or two of gypsum over the surface of these heaps, however, and then superimposing a layer of loam, the deterioration, unless the weather be very wet, will be extremely slight. This, as it readily absorbs the volatile gases that are ever striving to escape into the atmosphere, will itself become rich, and may be advantageously applied to crops requiring animal or vegetable manure. The gypsum also arrests the ammonia which freely escapes from animal excrement, and retains it for the sustenance of the crops to which it may be applied.

Rules for the Care of Sheep.—1. Keep sheep dry under foot with clean litter. This is more necessary than roofing them. Never let them stand or lie in mud or snow. 2. If a ewe loses her lamb, milk her daily for a few days and mix a little alum with her salt. 3. Never frighten sheep if possible to avoid it. 4. Separate all weak, thin or sick sheep in the fall from those that are strong, and give them special care. 5. If any sheep is hurt, catch it at once and wash the wound with a healing lotion. If a leg is broken, bind it with splinters tightly, loosening as the limb swells. 6. If a sheep is lame, examine its foot, clean out between the hoofs if unsound, and apply tobacco, with blue vitriol boiled in a little water. 7. Shear at once any sheep commencing to shed its wool, unless the weather is too severe. 8. Keep none but the best and see that they are properly attended to.—Exchange.

The best time to sell, as a rule, is as soon as the farmer can obtain a fair profit on the amount of time and money expended in raising his crops. Experience everywhere has proved conclusively that it seldom pays the producer to become a speculator. By selling early the mind is relieved from anxiety, and can turn the more earnestly to the season's legitimate duties; shrinkage and loss from vermin and other causes are avoided; the money in hand often prevents the necessity for running into debt, for which a heavy interest is always charged either under its proper name, or in an increase of price on the goods purchased; the farmer has the means for buying manures, stock, implements and machinery at the best time and figures, and of pushing necessary work, and making improvements on his land or homestead. Calculate, therefore, what your products have cost you in money and its equivalent, time, add a moderate profit, and sell promptly so soon as you can realize the total, taking, of course, as much more as you can get, and leaving to others the anxieties and risks of speculation.

About the House.

Washing Brown Prints.—In answer to the inquiry, "What will prevent a brown print from fading in washing," I send the following: Get 3 cents' worth of sugar of lead and dissolve in as much water as will wet the dress. Do this before the dress is washed, and it will set the color.—Correspondent.

Rolled Jelly Cake.—One cupful sugar, one cupful flour, four eggs, whites and yelks beaten separately, two teaspoonfuls baking powder. Bake in a dripping-pan; when done, turn the cake out upside down on a towel. Spread with jelly or icing, and roll up carefully. It will not break.

To Feed Young Birds.—When canary birds are first hatched, and until they are able to leave the nest, they should have every day hard-boiled egg chopped fine and mixed with a little cracker crumbs; about twice a week a piece of baker's bread dipped in sweet milk, and twice a week a little stale sponge-cake.

Pea Soup.—Soak one quart of split peas over night; boil tender in just enough water to prevent scorching; when tender pass through a wire sieve and add two quarts of good stock; add pepper, salt, and a little parsley; simmer gently for one-half hour, and just before serving stir in a table-spoonful of butter, in which has been rubbed a teaspoonful of corn-starch.

Damp Closets.—In damp closets and cupboards generating mildew, a trayful of quicklime will be found to absorb the moisture and render the air pure; of course it is necessary to renew the lime from time to time as it becomes fully slaked. This remedy will be found useful in safes and strong rooms, the damp air of which acts frequently most injuriously on the valuable deeds and documents which they contain.—Maine Farmer.

Making Biscuit Without Soda.—One quart of flour, two teaspoonfuls yeast powder, one heaping teaspoonful lard, and one level teaspoonful of salt; milk and water mixed, half each, about two-thirds of a pint; mix the flour and yeast powder together, then rub the lard well in until no particles of lard can be seen; add the milk and water, mixing all together with a spoon, turn out and knead until smooth, the dough should be as soft as it can conveniently be rolled out. Roll out about an inch thick, cut with a round, smooth cutter, then fold over in the center like a turnover, having first dampened the upper side to make the folds stick together. Allow plenty of room in the pan so they will not run together.

English Plum Pudding.—One pound of raisins, stoned and minced fine; two pounds of currants, well dried; one pound of brown sugar, half pound of citron, cut fine; three nutmegs, one table-spoonful cinnamon, half table-spoonful ground cloves, one small teaspoonful allspice, one small teaspoonful mace, one large teacupful molasses; put these ingredients in a crock, rub well together, mix the spices all together, then add gradually to the fruit, pour the molasses over the top of the mixture, also a teacupful of good Madeira, a pint of strong brandy; cover with the lid of the crock and let it stand twenty-four hours; add, the morning when you make the pudding, one pound of beef suet chopped very finely, one pound of sifted flour, well dried; one pound of grated bread crumbs, and the yelks only of eight eggs, put in your pudding-mold and boil steadily for five hours, pour brandy over the pudding plentifully before taking to table, and set fire to it. Hard sauce.

Cabinet Officers in Congress.

It is stated on good authority that the President, in a forthcoming message to Congress on the civil service, will recommend that the members of the Cabinet be allowed seats on the floor of the House of Representatives and the privilege of participating in the debates on questions relating to their departments. This is a proposition to adopt as far as practicable under our constitution and laws the theory of direct, personal responsibility of the Cabinet to the representative branch of Congress. Materially the same proposition was introduced during the Thirty-eighth Congress (1864-65) by Mr. George H. Pendleton, then a member of the House from Ohio. His bill, reported favorably by the committee to which it was referred, was in the following terms:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, and the Postmaster General shall be entitled to occupy seats on the floor of the House of Representatives, with the right to participate in debate upon matters relating to the business of the respective departments, under such rules as may be prescribed by the House.
> Sec. 2 And be it further enacted, That the said Secretaries, Attorney General and the Postmaster General shall attend the sessions of the House of Representatives immediately on the openings of the sittings on Mondays and Thursdays of each week, to give information in reply to questions which may be propounded to them under the rules of the House.

There was also a draft of rules submitted for carrying out the intentions of the proposed bill, which provided that members should give notice of an inquiry for information from any of the heads of the departments; that such notice should be conveyed to the proper Cabinet officer; that the inquiries should be first in order of business Mondays and Thursdays, and that there should be no debate or statements in the questions and answers further than should be necessary to a clear understanding of the same. No vote was ever taken on the proposed bill, but it was widely discussed pro and con in the closing days of the session. The most elaborate arguments were made by Messrs. Pendleton and Garfield in favor of the proposition, and by Messrs. Morrill (of Vermont) and Cox, opposed to it.—Chicago Tribune.

Latest Fashion Notes.

Moss trimming is used for heading fringes.

Coronet bonnets are more popular than ever.

One of the novelties is the brocaded ribbon.

New fichus are of crepe lisse, and have long square fronts.

Ivory-linted or ecru antique damasked table linen is sought for.

The latest seal-skin jackets are in the shape of the English cut-away coats.

The Carrick capes are growing in favor, and are seen on nearly all the new suits.

Very low-necked dresses cut in a V at the back, are in fashion for ball dresses.

Short dresses are slowly but surely gaining ground. The kilt plaited skirt is the favorite.

Velvet sacques are more fashionable this winter than they have been for a number of years.

A pretty new fraise has pendant flowers and is fastened in front with long loops and ends of ribbon.

Scarf-pins, with the enamelling in very bright colors, and representing Chinese pictures, are in great demand.

Sensible women have adopted the short, round skirt for walking. Trained dresses are only worn in the house.

Traveling pocket cases for ladies contain tongs for crimping the hair; also an apparatus for heating the tongs.

Dress sleeves are made tighter than ever before and without trimming, the wide linen and lace cuffs taking its place.

Woolen stockings come in the long English shape, in drab colors, and are far handsomer in finish this winter than ever before.

Square cards, with the name of the writer engraved on the left-hand corner, with envelopes to correspond, are the most stylish.

JUSTICE.

Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, Makes a Demand for It.

Justice for the People as Well as for the Bondholders.

An Exhaustive Review of the Whole Subject.

In the Senate, a few days since, Mr. Matthews gave way to Senator Voorhees in order that he might address that body on a resolution submitted by him before the holidays, declaring it of the highest importance that the financial credit of the Government be maintained. In order to be so, the Government itself, in all its departments, should, in good faith, keep all its contracts and obligations entered into with its own citizens.

Mr. Voorhees said the agitation of the question of finance will never cease until the people are satisfied that the vast debt is in process of extinction on principles of justice to tax-paying labor, or until, on the other hand, they are subjugated into silent submission, and the Government itself becomes a moneyed aristocracy. Denunciation is now the principal weapon used by those who are ranged on the side of grasping wealth. There is no epithet, however base, that is not in daily use against all who venture to believe, as I do, that to a great extent our whole financial system is organized crime against the laboring, tax-paying men and women of the United States. The great plea of the present hour for the continuation of wrong and injustice is that good faith requires it. Those who, finding a monstrous evil imbedded in the laws of their country, seek to eradicate it by peaceful legislation, are at once, and with the utmost fury, assaulted as violators of public faith, enemies of the national honor, and worse, if possible, than common swindlers. This plea, so loud now in our ears, has been invoked in behalf of every wickedness that has ever cursed the world. The usurper invokes it to protect the throne he has stolen as soon as he is seated. The tyrant invokes it to shelter his prerogative, and his nobility in turn invoke it in order to live in ease and splendor off the labor of others.

Mr. Voorhees reviewed the financial legislation since 1862, and said experience had shown the legal tender to be the best money that ever circulated. Every Government bond which did not on its face stipulate payment in coin was made payable by the express words of the law in legal-tender notes. This enactment guaranteed to the American people the right to pay three-fourths of the national debt in national currency. It was the law of contract when all the 5-20 bonds, amounting to over $1,500,000,000, were purchased from the Government by bondholders and paid for in this currency at par, when it was quoted at from 40 to 60 per cent. below par in coin. Every one understood the law to be as I have stated it at the time of its passage; in fact, the great struggle then was whether even the interest on the bonds I have mentioned should be paid in coin. No one in debate made the slightest pretense or intimation that the principal of the bonds was payable in coin. During the full term of seven eventful years that followed there is not a platform of either political party in any State in the Union which makes such an assertion.

Mr. Voorhees alluded to Secretary Sherman's letter of 1868, favoring the payment of bonds in the same kind of money as bought them, and his subsequent action in procuring the passage of an act for the payment of bonds in coin, which he said was open repudiation of a solemn contract, and fastened an extortion of not less than $500,000,000 on the staggering industries of the country as the speculative profits of the operation. In the whole financial history of the civilized world no parallel can be found to this audacious deed of broken faith, deliberate treachery to the people, and national dishonesty. It stands out by itself, towering high above all common frauds, and dwarfing them in comparison with its own vast proportions. It will bear the names of those who enacted it to distant generations amidst the groans, curses, and lamentations of those who toil on land and on sea, and more deeply engraven than any other name will be forever found that of the Secretary of the Treasury, as the author of what he himself said constituted the twofold crime of repudiation and extortion.

Mr. Voorhees, in support of his position, quoted the language of Senator Morton in 1869, as follows: "A combination of stock-jobbers, as destitute of conscience as pirates, and inspired alone by greed for money, successfully thundered at these doors, and finally drove this Government into the most stupendous act of bad faith and legalized robbery ever practiced upon any people since the dawn of history."

He next took up the Funding act of 1870, charging it was the offspring of an apprehension that the work of repudiating the contract for the payment of the 5-20 bonds might not be quite complete. Thus it was provided that an issue of new coin bonds should be made in place of the original ones. The amount saved in interest is trifling when compared with the loss by the whole transaction.

Mr. Voorhees then argued that by the laws of March, 1869, and July, 1870, bonds outstanding and afterwards to be issued were payable in coin, not in gold alone, nor in silver alone, but in coin. He quoted Mr. Sherman in 1869 as explicitly favoring this view.

Mr. Voorhees commented at some length on the passage of the law of Feb. 12, 1873, which he said doomed the dollar of our fathers, and its enactment was as completely unknown to the people, and indeed to four-fifths of Congress itself, as the presence of a burglar in a house at midnight to its sleeping inmates. The silver dollar was eliminated from our money system under the cover of false pretense.

Mr. Voorhees proceeded to show that, of the entire trading and commercial populations of the earth, more than four times as many people have chosen silver as have chosen gold, and more than five times as many have chosen silver as have chosen gold and silver together. The laboring classes desire money to be plentiful, while those who wish to fasten their idle wealth on productions of labor clamor for scarce and dear money. It was in the interest of the latter powerful class that silver was demonetized.

He referred to the act of Jan. 14, 1875, for the resumption of specie payments, and said the law of February, 1873, taking away silver money from the people, and the law of January, 1875, fixing the day now less than a year in advance, when greenbacks shall also perish, are twin monsters of evil, born of the same parentage, and linked together for the destruction of all money save gold. He vividly portrayed the affect of such legislation upon business and labor. He spoke of the impossibility of resuming January, 1879, and attributed the vast shrinkage in the value of property and universal distress to the policy of contraction, and said during the four years when the volume of currency averaged $1,000,000,000 the business failures of the entire country reached only 2,167, less in number than occurred in any three months of the year just closed. During the period which is now stigmatized as one of inflation, the windows of business houses were not darkened, and business men did not go as mourners about the streets. The laborer did not go home without bread to his wife and children. Helpless millions did not cower and tremble at the approach of winter for lack of food and shelter. The public peace was not broken by riots in resistance to starvation wages. The courts were not principally occupied in enforcing collections, foreclosing mortgages, ordering Sheriff's sales, or in punishing the destitute outcast.

The speaker next turned his attention to the national banks, and said the system of national banking now in use is the most elaborate and complete scheme for making people pay tribute to wealth, in order to obtain a circulating medium, ever known in the financial history of the world. There is not a dollar in the hands of the people on which they have not paid a tax for the privilege of having it put in circulation by the Government. The national bank is the middle-man between the Government and the people, and is enormously paid for doing what the Government ought directly to do itself. On Oct. 1, 1877, there were 2,080 national banks, with resources of $1,741,000,000, and on these resources the interest paid by the people was $130,000,000 per annum.

Mr. Voorhees said he represented those who demanded—

1. The restoration of the silver dollar exactly as it stood before it was touched by the act of February, 1873. They desire that it shall have unlimited coinage, not fearing that it will become too plenty for their wants, and that it be made a full legal tender, believing that it is as good now with which to pay all debts, public and private, as it was during eighty-one years of American history.

2. The repeal unconditionally of the act of Jan. 14, 1875, compelling the resumption of specie payments on Jan. 1, 1879, holding that the question of a return to a specie basis for our currency should be controlled entirely by the business interests of the country. They do not believe that the country should be dragged through the depths of ruin, wretchedness, and degradation in order to reach a gold standard for the benefit alone of the income classes.

3. That the national-banking system be removed, and a circulating medium provided by the Government for the people without taxing them for the privilege of obtaining it, and they ask that the amount thus placed in circulation shall bear a reasonable and judicious proportion to the business transactions and population of the United States.

4. That the currency authorized and circulated on the authority of the Government shall be made a legal tender in payment of all debts, public or private, including all dues to the Government, well knowing that it will then be at par with gold, or more likely at a premium over it; and,

5. That hereafter the financial policy of the country be framed permanently in their interest, that they shall not be discriminated against in future legislation, as in the past, and that their prosperity and not the mere growth of income to retired capitalists, shall be the primary duty of the Government.

In conclusion, Mr. Voorhees quoted from articles he had noticed in certain Eastern newspapers in regard to the rights of the bondholders, the duty of the laboring classes, and the policy that should be pursued by capitalists to counteract the effects of anticipated legislation on the silver question, and said: Sir, I have no word of menace to utter on this floor, but, in behalf of every laborer and every owner of soil whom I represent, I warn all such as value their investments that when these doctrines of despotism are sought to be enforced, this fair land will again be convulsed in agony, and the fires of liberty will blaze forth again as they did 100 years ago in defense of the natural rights of man. May the wisdom of our fathers and benignity of our God avert such an issue; but, if it shall come, if infatuation has seized our councils, the result will only add one more instance to the long catalogue of human crime and folly, where avarice, like ambition, overleaps itself, and in its unholy attempt to rob others of their possessions loses its own.

An Important Claim Bill.

A very important bill is now before the House Judiciary Committee, and will soon be taken up for action. It provides that all claims against the Government, of whatever nature or standing, shall be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication. This bill will take from every department of the Government claims arising out of their business, including pensions, bounties, Southern claims, and everything of that character. The bill was introduced by Mr. Frye, by request of the Washington lawyers. When the bill comes up for action in the committee, each Cabinet officer will be asked to appear before the committee and give his views. The Attorney General is strongly opposed to the proposition, but it seems to have many friends, particularly in the South. —Cor. Chicago Tribune.

THE UNIT OF VALUE.

History of the Legal American Dollar from 1771 to 1878—The Gold Dollar Born in 1849.

[From the Essex County (N. J.) Press.]

The following is the history of the "dollar" in this country from its establishment by the Colonial Government to the present time:

The Congress of the Confederation, by act passed Aug. 8, 1776, and ordinance passed Oct. 16, 1786, authorized and established as "the unit of account" a silver dollar, to consist of 375.64 grains of pure silver, but none of these coins were ever made.

The constitution of the United States was adopted Sept. 17, 1787. On the subject of money it provides as follows: "Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin; also, that 'no State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, or make anything but gold and silver coins a tender in payment of debts,'" thereby plainly reserving this latter right to Congress.

Now commences the history of the dollar under the present Government:

The act of April 2, 1792, provides for "dollars, or units," which shall contain 371.25 grains of pure, or 416 grains of standard silver. It also declares that every fifteen pounds weight of pure silver shall be of equal value in all payments with one pound weight of pure gold; that the money of account in the United States shall be expressed in "dollars, or units" and decimals thereof. It creates gold coins, which are enumerated as follows: Eagles, half eagles and quarter eagles, the value of which it expresses in "dollars or units." It does not provide for a gold dollar.

The act of Feb. 9, 1793, declares that all foreign coins, except Spanish milled dollars, shall cease to be a legal tender.

The act of April 10, 1806, establishes rates at which certain foreign gold and silver coins shall pass current as money and be a legal tender for the payment of debts.

The act of June 25, 1834, makes the silver dollar of Mexico, Peru, Chili and Central America a legal tender when weighing 415 grains each.

The act of Jan. 18, 1837, provides that "The standard for both gold and silver coins of the United States shall hereafter be such that of 1,000 parts by weight 900 shall be of pure metal, and 100 of alloy, and the alloy of silver coins shall be of copper, and the alloy of the gold coins shall be of copper and silver; provided that the silver do not exceed one-half the alloy." It then fixes the weight of the silver dollar at 412½ grains 900 fine, and subsidiary silver coins in proportion, to wit, a dime 41¼ grains. It then declares that all the silver coins, from dollars to half-dimes, shall be legal tenders of payment according to their nominal value for any sums whatever, after which it makes the same provision respecting the gold eagle, half-eagle and quarter-eagle, that they shall be a legal tender for all sums.

The act of March 3, 1849, provided for the first coinage of two new coins, the double eagle and the GOLD DOLLAR, both to be a legal tender for all sums, and to be of the respective value of "twenty dollars, or units," and "one dollar, or unit." This is the first gold dollar.

The act of March 3, 1851, created a new silver coin, to be of the legal-tender value of 3 cents, and to be a legal tender for all sums of 30 cents and under.

The act of Feb. 21, 1853, reduces the weight of the subsidiary silver coins from the half dollars down, and limits their legal-tender function to sums not exceeding $5. It also creates a new gold coin, to be of the value of "three dollars, or units."

The act of Feb. 21, 1857, repeals all former acts which made foreign gold or silver coin a legal tender.

The act of April 22, 1864, makes the 1-cent coin a legal tender to the amount of 10 cents, and the 2-cent coin for 20 cents.

The act of March 3, 1865, provides for a 3-cent piece of copper and nickel, which shall be legal tender to the amount of 60 cents, and limits the legal-tender function of the 1 and 2-cent pieces to sums not exceeding 4 cents.

The act of May 16, 1866, creates a 5-cent coin of nickel and copper, and makes it a legal tender to the amount of $1.

The act of March 3, 1871, provides "that the Secretary of the Treasury is required to redeem in lawful money all copper, bronze, copper-nickel, and base-metal coinage, of every kind hitherto authorized by law, when presented in sums of not less than $20.

The act of Feb. 12, 1873 (commonly known as the Demonetizing act), provides that "the gold dollar of the United States of twenty-five and eight tenths grains shall be the unit of value." It creates the trade dollars of 420 grains weight, 900 fine; and changes the weight of the half dollar, quarter dollar, and dime, by use of the French word "Gram," making the half dollar 12½ grams, which is said to be about 164 grains (Troy) although according to Webster a gram is one-twenty-fourth of of an ounce, is silent about the 412½-grain dollar, and the half dime; and reduces the legal-tender function of all silver coins of the United States to sums not exceeding $5.

The act of March 3, 1873, declares the legal value of the English pound sterling shall be deemed equal to $4.8665, and all contracts made after the first day of January, 1874, based on an assumed par of exchange with Great Britain of 54 pence to the dollar, or $4.44 4-9 cents to the sovereign or pound sterling, shall be null and void. The act of March 3, 1875, creates a silver coin of 20 cents, containing 5 "grams," and makes it a legal tender to the amount of $5.

The act of July 13, 1876, especially demonetizes the trade dollar of 420 grains, 900 fine, in the following words: "That the trade dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

This brings the question of what is and what was a dollar down to the present time.

The Philadelphia ministers have solemnly passed a resolution declaring that they will not go back on the old-fashioned doctrines concerning hell. The resolution does not define exactly what these doctrines are; thus each minister is left free to preach the particular shade of doctrine which has always been to him the old-fashioned one.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 31, 1878

Meeting of the Democratic Central Committe.

The Democratic Central Committee of De Kalb County, is requested to meet at Auburn, on Saturday, February 9th, 1878.

For the purpose of appointing delegates to the Democratic State Convention on February 20th, and attend to other important business. A full attendance is desired, and all others interested are cordially invited to attend. The following gentlemen compose the committee: L. L. Irons, W. S. Dancer, T. S. Murray, B. F. Blair, D. B. Bordner, Edgar Freeman, D. Y. Husselman, C. B Kagey, G. W. Row, R. J. Sawvell, B. F. Cornelius and B. D. Thomas.

J. R. Lanning, Chairman.

—Gov. Hendricks has expressed himself in favor of the remonetization of silver. Morton would have been there, too had he lived.

—Hon. John C New, of Indianapolis, had the honor of holding the office of United States Treasurer for several months. Since that time Mr. New's opinions are valuable. He believes in the silver dollar.

—Geo. H. Pendleton, of Ohio, John S. Williams, of Kentucky, and Gov. Greome, of Maryland, all Democrats, were elected to the United State Senate from their respective States during January.

—Gov. Williams has appointed Frank C. Johnson, of New Albany, and Clem Studebaker, of South Bend, commissioners to represent this state at the Paris exposition. Johnson is a Democrat, and Studebaker is a Republican.

—Silver is still the monetary standard of the densley populated countries of Asia, the Russian Empire and some other countries, and, together with gold is a legal standard money in France the Netherlands, Belgum, Italy and Switzerland.

—A call for a silver meeting has been issued in New York. The silver dollar is growing in favor in the greatest stronghold of money sharks. Senator Voorhees' great speech has awakened the minds of the people on this subject.

—When you hear these fellows talk about the depreciation of silver, you may set it all down as froth. Test them practically, and they reach for every dime you've got, honestly enough no doubt, but they will take it quite readily. And now all that is necessary is to make it a legal tender, to make it what is practically a good hard currency.

—Hon. David S. Gooding, of Greenfield, is a candidate for Secretary of State. We do not know the names of all the aspirants for that office, but we doubt whether a better one can be named than Judge Gooding. He is always reliably Democratic and is one of the foremost speakers on the stump our State can boast of. We can heartily wish he may be successful.

—The Steuben Republican says the House of Representatives in Congress is largely Democratic when they are all there. This in the face of the assertion of the Republican press only a few weeks ago, that Clerk Adams of that body had made up the rolls so as to give the Democrats a small majority is to say the least rather contradictory. The fact is, there is but a small majority in the House in about the same proportion as that of the Senate.

We are sorry it is so, but the fact can not be denied that there is a strong feeling arising among Republicans all over the country in favor of running Gen. Grant again for President.—Steuben Republican.

As Grant gave us about the worst administration ever known in this country, we would like to have him in a position where he could be punished for his many sins. As a Democrat is to be elected, it would be some satisfaction to defeat a candidate notoriously deficient in all those abilities necessary to the position.

—A Senate Committe, seized of an enquiring disposition, has examined the books of the Treasury Department. It is found that the Department has spent ninety-five millions incidentally in fastening the public debt upon the people. Since 1850 we have paid in interest more than one thousand million of dollars. It is also discovered that there was a net interest of the public debt during last year of nearly twenty-five million of dollars. The Republican party is opposed to investigations.—Enquirer.

—Sam F. Winter continues much disturbed over the calling of the Democratic State Convention at such an early date. Growl on, Samuel, the Democracy will meet, nominate and elect, notwithstanding, nevertheless.—Columbia City Post

The calling of the State Convention for February, was is our opinion a great mistake to say the least, and we believe it was brought about by the influence surrounding the Capital, so far as this district was concerned. But it is useless now to attempt to change the [illegible]

Corunna News.

—The organ question has been laid on the table for future reference and discussion, when the club are out of other subjects.

—"Ah, the snow, the beautiful snow," has put in appearance at last, and we are now made happy by the merry jingle of the sleighbells, as they glide so swiftly past. Really we have waited so long and patiently for a glimpse of the beautiful snow, that it seems as though we should join in a general note of thanksgiving, for being at last delivered from the mud and dirt, through which we have cheerfully endeavored to wade for the last three months.

—The Methodists of this place, held their quarterly meeting on last Saturday and Sabbath. The presiding Elder, Mr. Greenman of Goshen, delivered the sermon on Sabbath morning, a very practical, and by the way, a very sensible, one just such a one as the people need, and they fully appreciated its worth. The meetings we understand are to be protracted for an indifinite time.

—The township Institute of Richland township, convened on last Friday and Saturday, with Mr. Barns presiding. It was a very pleasant and instructive affair, each teacher being called upon to give his method of teaching the different branches, and give a practical illustration of the same the remainder of the teachers acting as pupils. Mr. Barns acting as judge and deciding all points of difference which came up for discussion. All of the teachers of the township were present, except one, and each went away with the feeling, that they had had an enjoyable time, as well as receiving much valuable information.

St. Joe Items.

—First sleighs of the season were on the streets to-day.

—A Leighty is getting out material for a blacksmith shop.

—A. W. Allen and Fusselman of Newville, was in town Tuesday.

—Stamen & Sumerlot are building a house for Mr. A. F. Woodcox, on the lot formerly owned by M. B. Hedge.

—W. D. Johnson has a tumor on the back of his neck which causes him to carry his head a little to one side. Brace up, Bill.

—J. S. Coulter, of Hicksville, O., is visiting O. H. Widney, of this place. I understand they intend to play the champion game of checkers, both being conceitey. We look for a lively time.

—A back line owned and operated by Abe Johnson, of Spencerville, is now running between here and the above village, headquarters at the depot where Abe or his assistant will be found on the arrival of all trains.

—Frank Draggoo had a narrow escape from a runaway team last Thursday. His team became frightened at an engine, and succeeded in getting under good headway when Wm. Leighty managed to catch one of the horses by the bridle and stopped them.

—Frank Coder, our good natured school teacher, was seen wending his way home from Kinderhook spelling school the other night, with a young lady on his arm. Some of the scholars want to know who it was. Speak up Frank.

—Those ladies who think they were given away in last week's paper, are mistaken when they think your correspondent was the cause of it. It was Old Kit.

Once A Week.

—The Supreme Court of this State, in a recent decision, made the following rulings:

The fact that a juror is not a householder or a freeholder is waived if the question if he was or was not such was not ask him when the jury was impaneled.

The fact that a person has expresed an opinion before he is called as a juror, it no objection to his sitting in the case as a juror, if the opinion he expressed was not formed on the facts of the case but from a mere rumor, and would not influence his action in the case.

A clergyman may be allowed to testify in a cause except as to confessions made by a party in course of church discipline.

Drunkenness is no excuse for crime, but if so long continued as to destroy mental power of persons as to intention is good ground of defense.

—"Defeat inflatation and hold fast to gold,' says the New York Evening Post, "and better times are ahead."—You can bet your life they are; so far ahead we will never catch 'em.—Garrett Herald.

Now, Baxter, what do you make out of that. A few weeks ago, you thought you discovered the Herald hanging to the gold hobby, by a more slender thread than the above, and you jollified and cavorted around like a yearling colt. Then you had Weamer against you, and you were happy. But things have changed. •Weamer, is doing business on the gold basis, and won't take four half dollars, for a year's subscription, nohow, while we lay the flattering unction to our soul that the Herald is for silver. We are satisfied, nay, delighted with the change

—Capt. Fisher, of Rome City, was in Kendallville Monday, looking as natural as life. He informed us that he would start operations at the woolen mill some time next month.—Kendallville Standard.

—The entire party who went on the 15th of January excursion to South Eastern Kansas, purchased farms in that locality. Another party will leave here on the 5th of February.—Kendallville News.

Spencerville Items.

—Snow last Sunday.

—Business increasing.

—Public sales quite frequent about town.

—Freeman Bishop will start for Kansas in a few days.

—A bad case of slander is slowly progressing in our town

—Bill Fales says he don't like the idea of Oregon fellows marrying our town girls.

—Ben Zimmerman and lady, have been visiting the parents of the latter, last week.

—Mort says he haint going to let the boys run off with his girl from the social at this time.

—Mark Barney was to—well we want to say where he was, but he was gone all week, and looked terrible desperate when he came home.

—At a spellingschool west of town last Thursday night, two whole families got into a fight. I guess the country boys were too many for the town lads, judging from the looks of their faces.

—Mr Henry Slates and Miss Anna Babbage, were married at the residence of the brides parents, near Hicksville, Ohio, on last Thursday evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. E W. Erick. The affair has proved to be the most complete and harmonious ever witnessed in this section of the country. A number of Spencerville folks were present.

—There is a certain class of young men in this town, who make it a practice, of attend gatherings out side of town, for the purpose of quarreling with someone not belonging to their party. Is it their loud, boistersome, unpleasant words that make them friends? Is it the spirit of roguery and hatred which they cultivate that make them popular? We think not. If those young men will only cultivate civilization and modification they will experience better appreciation.

Astonishing Success.

It is the duty of every person who has used Boschee's German Syrup to let its wonderful qualities be known to their friends in curing consumption, severe coughs, croup, asthma, pneumonia, and in fact all throat and lung diseases. No person can use it without immediate relief. Three doses will relieve any case, and we consider it the duty of all Druggists to recommend it to the poor dying consumptive, at least to try one bottle, as 40,000 dozen bottles was sold last year, and no one case where it failed was reported. Such a medicine as the German Syrup cannot be too widely known. Ask your Druggist about it. Sample bottles to try sold at 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

—Why every man you meet thinks he can say something original in reard to the weather is one thing utterly beyond our comprehension. We never saw a man who could do it, and, likewise, we never saw one who wouldn't try it every time he got a chance.

—It is a very good thing that postage stamps can be used twice. The cost, however, is a small difficulty. The first time it costs three cents, and the second time about $50.

—A new payer at Delphi, Ind. has been received in our mail. It is neatly gotten up, and is well patronized.

Do You Call This a Church.

My soul is in fetters here, its wings are earth-clipped. Things are all too fine; nobody can come in at the door, whose hat and coat and bonnet are not fashionably cut. —A man was killed at Breman last week, on the B. & O. road. The engineer reversed his engine, and could have easily stopped the train, but noticing the man deliberately getting off the track, steam was put on, and the train started at usual speed. The man stepped on the track again, and from his actions evinced a determination to get in the way of the locomotive. The train could not be stopped in time, and the man was struck and instantly killed

—Have you ever considered how much tobacco is consumed in a year in this country. From a reliable source we find there is 8,000,000 consumers who average about fifteen pounds a year. Multiplying the one by the other and have 120,000,000 the number of pounds annually consumed. To put it low say this is sold at 50 cents per pound, and we have the startling sum of $60,000,000 for an article, the use of which in the ordinary way undermines the system, debilitates the mind and furnishes the means for a filthy, often disgusting habit.

—A dray loaded with men went dashing up Main Street Saturday at a fearful rate, and shortly men, women and boys were hurrying in the same direction. Everyone at their gates would ask, "what's the matter!" "what's the rip-up!" "whose hurt!" "where's the fire!" &c., but the excited pedestrians rushed on with lightning speed until they came to the turn in the road at the residence of Jacob Grogz's when their eyes caught sight of the scene they had hurried so fast to witness. The men on the dray were removing a piano at the residence of Mr. Geo. Steele's—that's all.

—Because we have said nothing lately on the subject of gravel roads, we hope it will not be taken as an evidence that what we have said heretofore was only for pastime. We are deeply in earnest in this matter, and feel confident the citizens of this county can be benefitted by their introduction. We notice a movement in several counties in this section, to better their condition by good roads. The experience of the last six months ought to convince all that time and money yearly spent in the old way, should be used in a more intelligent and benificial manner. While other counties are making a move, let not the fair name of our own suffer by a future comparison.

—Tom Mays is down at Washington again, thinking, doubtless, that some of the Johnnies have got tired and went home, leaving him a chance.—Press.

In the language of the Butler Record, "the gross errors in language," and the indecent haste to misrepresent us in the above are "proofs of a depraved and weak understanding." Having been "schooled so long in the haunts of vice and iniquity," we do not expect to make a move to suit Charley. On the one hand we are catching thunder for being at Washington after a position, and on the other for writing obscene liturature, all at one time. Give us all the the credit for versatility you please, gentlemen, but for Heaven's sake, do not allow us to rest under the terrible charge of being ubiquitous.

—While absent at Washington week before last, our left tenant was indiscreet enough to refer to our excellent neighbor at Butler as the "Hand Bill" We regret that he was so disrespectful, as we have always entertained a high opinion of our neighbor. As a consequence, however, several columns of the Record have been devoted to our special education in the journalistic profession. For which we are thankful. We feel that we are better, and that several very able, truthful articles in that paper have not been written in vain. It has been our fate that when B and B have attempted a criticism on articles in the COURIER, said articles have not flowed from our facile pen though as editor, responsible, therefore. The "spurns that patient merit of the unworthy takes,' is one of the burdens of journalism, and we love to bear it uncomplainingly. As to our depravity and vulgarity we felt very sorry, but in the light of recent events, the editor of the Record ought to know that while it may be naughty, its awful nice. We are reminded that "there are some persons on whom their faults sit well, and others are made ungraceful by their good qualities."

GARRETT, IND., Jan. 25, 1878.

MR. EDITOR.—I noticed an attempt in your issue of the 16th, to criticise a so-called letter, written over the non-de-plume of M. L. The communication was signed an answer to M. L. Now as the writer thereof seems to be the mouth-piece through which this so-called set of Disciples of Christ speak, I would say that if the Lord did not know you, Mr. Writer, and your church or club or whatever you may be, you are gone up—you are meaner than the man—no, I will not say man—that gimblet eye'd, knock kneed squinty, that you set up to watch and swear for you in your courts. He is satisfied the church must have just such men. They have to have a hell and someone on the road to it, or they cant make out their case. They are now reinforcing anothe branch—the scenes are are lively—they have a variety of performers, some ladies who don't turn sommersaults nor stand on their heads. The proprietors are a blacksmith, an engineer and a lawyer. The great tragedy of "Hold the Fort" was played on the 16th. The bugle sounded "hold the fort," ammunition was brought in quantity, but low and behold, it was Beecher and Prof. Thomas' sermons, which they could not use, as there was no hell in them. They want help and our friend M. L. might get a job. Take in your pal, who is so easy disturbed in church. They have no use for your great law-giver. He judges too quick where the money is, inasmuch as you have a hankering to be on the popular side. C. O. D.

Garrett Items.

—Our town is beginning to assume a more lively appearance.

—Messrs. Frederick and Cowen are still in the grain business.

—There was quite a number of teams on our streets last Saturday, and the farmers that drove them in seemed to be purchasing goods quite freely, which made our merchants look pleasant.

—Our new grist mill is now in full running order, which is one of the finest in the State, and the boys say they are doing a pretty good business. Farmers bring in your wheat and give them a trial.

—It is rumored that Mr. Cowen will cease to represent the land company at this place, and Mr. H. S. Morse is reported to have authority to act as trustee of the above company. We are very sorry to have Mr. C. leave us, as he is a gentleman of enterprise and means, and has devoted his entire time and attention to the welfare and prosperity of Garrett. In every enterprise that has sprung up for the benefit of our town, Mr. Cowen has always been first to give it encouragement, and he has always been free to contribute his time and money to any enterprise that would be an advantage or importance to our town. When our present mill men came here looking up a location for a grist mill, Mr. C. was right with them, and by his liberal inducements succeeded in having erected as fine a mill as Northern Indiana can produce, which is certainly a decided improvement, and an ornament to our town, which without his influence we would have been deprived of this enterprise. No one has ever went to Mr. Cowen for assistance for any charitable purposes, but what he has contributed. We noticed a slanderous little article in Weamer's filthy sheet last week. Were it to come from any other source, it might be derogatory to Mr. Cowen's good name, but coming from Weamer it is not worth notice, as every one knows he devotes his time to slandering respectable citizens. Yet, while we regret the loss of Mr. Cowen, we can congratulate ourselves upon receiving as his successor, Mr. H. S Morse, who has identified himself, both financially and socially, with our town. We think the land company could not have made a better selection in men to represent their interests, than they did in Mr. M. No man could have been placed here who could carry the popular good will of the people like Mr. Morse. Backed up by the best wishes and co-operation of all our citizens, we see no reason why Mr. Morse should not give entire satisfaction, both to the people at large and to the company which he represents. CITIZEN.

Church Matters.

—The Sabbath Schools are largely attended and great interest is manifested by the parents and scholars.

—The protracted meetings at the M. E. Church are meeting with splendid success. There are eight or ten who have shown their desire to become christians.

—Four persons applied for membership in the M. E. church, Tuesday evening. The meetings are still growing in interest.

—Bishop Peck, of the M. E. church, will preside at the Goshen District Conference, held at Kendallville next week. This Bishop will preside at the next session of the North Ind. Annual Conference, held at Anderson, April 3d.

—There will be no services, at the churches to-night, owing to the temperance meeting, except at the Presbyterian church. They will have an early prayer meeting and adjourn in time for the lecture.

—Communion services were held at the M. E. church last Sabbath morning, and love feast was in order in the afternoon. The Presiding Elder of Fort Wayne, was present in the forenoon and administered the ceremonies.

—The Baptist denomination are still keeping up their meetings, but as yet we have not learned of any accessions to the church; however, we may anticipate a grand work in the Baptist church ere long, as Rev. Laugdon Sanders has the energy to "hold the fort" until the meetings are successful.

The Sick List.

—W. J. Austin's child is reported as being quite sick.

—Mrs. Jas. Anderson has been quite ill but now much better.

—A. C. Dawson's youngest child, who was so very low with fever, is gaining slowly.

—Mrs Gonser, wife of our efficient Treasurer, is getting along as well as could be expected, and hopes are entertained of her recovery.

—Melvin Bowers is lying in a low condition from that terrible disease consumption. He has been confined to the house for several weeks.

—There is not a great amount of sickness in the city and yet most every one we meet is complaining. What illness there is seems to be sore throats and colds.

—Reub Stevens, at the jail, is getting well rapidly, but is yet a great trouble to the family of Sheriff St. Clair, owing to the fact that he is in an up-stairs room and requires considerable attention.

—A man by the name of Isaac Fairchild died at Belleville, Ohio, on the 23th inst., after having lived his last 37 days without food, drink or stimulants, and talked to within an hour of his death. He was over 92 years old.

—We are gld to learn that H. S. Morse, Esq., of Garrett, has been appointed agent of the Land Improvement Company of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at that point. Mr. Morse will take position to-morrow.

—Gold fell lately to 101½. The agitation of the silver question has a perceptible influence on this commodity and when remonetized the avocation of the Shylocks will be gone.

—It is said that there is a couple named Smith, residing west of Corunna who have never rode on a railroad train or been inside of a car, although they are about 60 years old.

—Boys should be careful when riding horses over the rough roads. A young lad of E. Ashley's had a horse fall while running it, and it was only a miracle that he was not seriously injured.

—G. A. Porter has exchanged his grocery and bakery for a part interest in a woolen mill at Edgerton, Ohio. The parties abroad will take possession this week, and Mr. Porter in the spring.

—Billy Edgerton has started a barber shop in Mourman's old stand, and invites the public to give him a "whirl" He has everything tastily arranged and can suit all.

—John Zerbeigener, living in the direction of Spencerville, had a runaway at the Junction last saturday, and was injured so badly that he will probably not recover.

—Mr. Ground-hog will soon be poking out his nose to see whether we are going to have a late spring. We hail the second of Febru-airy as the blast-ed time.

—The temperance people are renewing their enthusiasm. We will not venture to say how much, but it is actually reviving a little.

—Mr. Culbertson and Mr. Spake have made a trade in property. The latter trading his residence for the hat and cap store of the former.

—Quite a number of boys from "up town" were present at the literary entertainment at the Junction Saturday evening.

—"A good resolve never broken is worth twenty tried." This is supposed to have originated with a man who swore off.

—Check a cough or cold at once and use an old reliable remedy such as Dr. Marshalls Lung Syrup. Price 25 cents, large size 50 cents, Sold in every drug store.

Temperance.

It was given out in the several churches last Sabbath, that Mason Long and others, of Fort Wayne, would give a temperance lecture at the Baptist church to-night (Thursday). Mace is well known here and the boys should all come out and hear what he has to say. He has been "through the mill" and perhaps will interest us beyond our expectations.

—A. Willich, a distinguished General in the army of the Cumberland, died last week at St. Marys, Ohio, of heart disease. He was Auditor of Hamilton county, for two terms, since the war. He organized the 9th Ohio, and afterwards became Colonel of the 32nd Indiana, and was known and recognized throughout the army as a brave gallant officer.

—After mature reflection, the editor of the Albion New Era has come to the conclusion that you can't make a whistle out of a pigs tail. We believe the proposition is a safe one, yet this whistle business, is even more easy of accomplishment than 'tis for the editor of the New Era to run an independent paper, and not show his ear marks as a bitter partizan.

—MARRIAGE LICENSES.—The following marriage licenses were issued by the county Clerk so far during January. W. W. Goodwin and Emma R. Shaffer, Joseph Albright and Mary Hiner, W. D. Boyle and Alma C. Boyer, Oliver J. Camp and Ida Ferner, M. K. Wilson and B. H. Thomas, David Rice and Bettie Finch, John M. Lamm and E. M. Henck, Phenis Hyeil and Isabella Shaffer, Frank Gaff and Julia A. Christoffle, Richard Freed and Katie Whetsel, Isaac M. Grube and Mary A. Dudley.

—The Angola Herald gives an account of an attempt at suicide at Metz a few days ago by one John Repp, because he was charged with swearing falsly in a law suit. He tried water water first by plunging into a shallow well and then had resort to a jack knife, which proved to dull to serve his jugular, and his connection with life. The attempt was a failure.

—Courier: "Over 12,000 bushels of grain were taken in at the Eel River Elevators on Friday." When lying is so easy, why didn't you say a million ?—Press.

Lying is easy, is it ? Well that is not our experience. In the above case it required the "devil" and a naught (y) additjon to accomplish the above case, is brought about by long continued practice, and there's where Charles has the advantage of us.

—We hear of men having the western fever. Some want to leave this county because they can't get rich here. We would say to one and all, go, and whenever you find a place in the west where men can live and get fat by doing nothing, we want you to just drop us a line back. We shall then publish it just for the benefit of all the lazy men in this county, because that is the place many have been hunting for and failed to find.

We are in favor of the remonetization of silver upon upon a proper, honest basis. But we do not want the law to oblige us to take 93 cents worth of silver for one dollar The law has no right to force such a transaction upon the people.—Steuben Republican.

We are taking two half dollars for a dollar every day, and these contain about 5 grains less pure silver than the old silver dollar, with a bullion value of 93 cents as compared with gold. We guess the Republican will take all the half dollars, too, that can be pushed at it.—Lagrange Standard.

—Eight business houses of Ft. Wayne have combined in issuing a circular, in which they make the magnanimous "liberal offer," to persons visiting, who pay $2 railroad fare, that if they will purchas $40,000 worth of goods, they will discount the bill to the amount of railroad fare. Forty thousand dollars at one trip! Liberality is no name for it.—Kendallville Standard.

If you lived in this county, C. O. Baxter would want to know why, as lying is so easy, you did not make it $40,000,000. In fact he may do so anyhow, though we think he is a little afraid of you.

—What a vast difference there is in hotels, and especially in their managers We found this out the other day while stopping at the Violet House, Goshen, Ind. Gen. M. S. Hascall, now the popular nive host, and his estimable lady, have made it one of the most home-like resorts in the country, where excellent accommodations and reasonable prices make it an exception the general rule Mr. Sam. Wise, formerly a resident of this place, is the agreeable clerk, obliging and affable, not a whit affected with self importance.

AUBURN, IND., Jan. 29, 1878.

MR. EDITOR.—In your last issue, I saw an article stating that Mr. I. O. Bachtel, of Corunna, and myself had traded mills. There is nothing of it, and you will please correct the statement of your correspondent. I have not traded, nor have I a notion to do so. I still keep the excellent patent flour on hand to accommodate all who come. Common flour, $1.30 per sack, good thrible X. for $1.50, and patent A. X. L. A., $1.60 per sack. There is a great rush for this patent flour, and still there is room for more. P. W. SILVER.

—Our young friend, M. F. Long, the popular musical dealer of this county, informs us that he is having fine success in the sale of his instruments. Mike deals squarely and fairly and sells the best instruments manufactured, which accounts in the main for his large sales.

—Our worthy Marshal has placed a crossing on Fourth street at last. He got it down right after the freeze-up, but then we won't complain, as there is a probability that we will have more mud between this and when the sprinkling wagon runs again. All the ladies appreciate it Sam, and you too.

—A lively spelling match was held in the brick school house two miles west of town last Friday evening. A champion speller from Altona was brought there expecting to carry off the prize, but he was left badly. We learn that another one will be held again next Friday evening.

—W. B. Stone & Co., lumber dealers at the Saginaw depot, have sold their stock and will not remain with us longer. The yard will continue at the same place by the new proprietors, Messrs F. N. Wright & Co., who will remove their stock in the lower yard to this one.

—There was a dance at the Junction last Thursday night. Jim Sherlock was the "orchestra," and at one time he said, "Boys, attention. I'll give you something new this time—now watch your pards,' and he be yelled out, "eight hands 'round."

—We learn that our enterprising farmer friend, C. Sheets, Esq., has bred a fine bull, now two years old, which weighed the other day 1760 pounds. The animal is from the blooded stock now owned by J. M. Brumbach, near Corunna.

—Many a sweet girl, with tender loving eyes, has swept away the moment of love's young dream, while the young man who was to tell her all about it, is pleading with the livery stable man, trying to hire four dollars' worth of horse and buggy for a dollar and a half.

—The Democracy of Whitley county, met in Convention a few day ago, and passed resolutions good and long enough for a State Convention—one favoring a reduction of the rate of interest to 6 per cent.

—The legs of a stove and several other articles were taken from a carpenter shop on North Main-st. which had better be returned to save the parties from getting into trouble.

—Mothers should take warning and stop dosing their babies with laudanum while teething. Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup answers the same purpose, and is perfectly harmless. 25 cents. Sold by F. F. Davenport.

—The Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee gives notice in another column of the the meeting of that committee on the 9th. We hope every member will be present.

—Josh Billings says he knows people who are so found of argument they will stop and "dispute with a guide board about the distance to the next town.

—We can recommend our readers to use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in all cases of cough, cold, &c. It only costs 25 cents a bottle, and is warranted to cure. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

—Now is a good time to pity the poor, and it will be appreciated if the pity finds expression in the way of donations of provisions, fuel or clothing.

THE MASQUE OF THE MONTHS.

BY AUSTIN DOBSON.

Firstly thou, churl son of Janus,
Rough for cold, in drugget clad,
Com'st with rack and rheum to pain us—
Firstly thou, churl son of Janus;
Cozened now is old Sylvanus;
Numb and chill are maid and lad.

After thee thy dripping brother;
Dank his weeds around him cling;
Mist his footsteps swathe and smother—
After thee thy dripping brother.
Heart-set couples hush each other,
Listening for the cry of spring.

Hark! for March thereto doth follow,
Blithe—a herald tabarded;
O'er him flies the shifting swallow—
Hark! for March thereto doth follow.
Swift his horn, by holt and hollow,
Wakes the flowers in winter dead.

Thou then, April, Iris' daughter,
Born between the storm and sun;
Coy as nymph ere Pan hath caught her,
Thou then, April, Iris' daughter.
Now are light, and running water;
Now are mirth and nests begun.

May the jocund cometh after,
Month of all the loves (and mine);
Month of mock and cuckoo-laughter,
May the jocund cometh after.
Beaks are gay on roof and rafter;
Luckless lovers peak and pine.

June the next, with roses scented,
Languid from a slumber-spell;
June in shade of leafage tended—
June the next, with roses scented.
Now her Itys, still lamented,
Sings the mournful Philomel.

Hot July thereafter rageth,
Dog-star smitten, wild with heat;
Fierce as pard the hunter cageth,
Hot July thereafter rageth.
Traffic now no more engageth;
Tongues are still in stall and street.

August next, with cider mellow,
Laughs from out the poppied corn;
Hook at back, a lusty fellow,
August next, with cider mellow.
Now in wains the sheafage yellow
'Twixt the hedges slow is borne.

Laden deep with fruity cluster,
Then September, ripe and hale;
Bees about his basket fluster,
Laden deep with fruity cluster.
Skies have now a softer luster;
Barns resound to flap of flail.

Thou then, too, of woodlands lover,
Dusk October, berry-stained;
Wailed about of parting plover,
Thou then, too, of woodlands lover.
Fading now are copse and cover;
Forests now are sere and waned.

Next November, limping, battered,
Blinded in a whirl of leaf;
Worn of want and travel-tattered,
Next November, limping, battered.
Now the goodly ships are shattered,
Far at sea, on rock and reef.

Last of all, the shrunk December
Cowled for age, in ashen gray;
Fading like a fading ember,
Last of all, the shrunk December.
Him regarding, men remember
Life and joy must pass away.

—Good Words.

A NIGHT ADVENTURE.

I will tell you about an affair—important as it proved to me; but you must not hurry me. I have never been in a hurry since then. Up till that time inclusive I was always in a hurry; my actions always preceded my thoughts; experience was of no use, and anybody would have supposed me destined to carry a young head upon old shoulders to the grave. However, I was brought up at last "with a round turn." I was allowed a certain space for reflection and plenty of materials, and if it did not do me good it's a pity.

My father and mother both died when I was still a great awkward boy; and I, being the only thing they had to bequeath, became the property of a distant relation. I do not know how it happened, but I had no near relations. I was a kind of waif upon the world from the beginning, and I suppose it was owing to my having no family anchorage that I acquired the habit of swaying to and fro and drifting hither and thither at the pleasure of wind and tide. Not that my guardian was inattentive or unkind—quite the reverse; but he was indolent and careless, concerning himself with providing abundantly for my schooling and my pocket, and leaving everything else to chance. He would have done the same thing to his own son, if he had had one, and he did the same thing to his own daughter. But girls somehow cling wherever they are cast—anything is an anchorage for them; and as Laura grew up she gave the care she had never found, and was the little mother to the whole house. As for the titular mother, she had not an atom of character of any kind. She might have been a picture, or a vase, or anything else that is useless, except to the taste or the affections. But mamma was indispensable. It is a vulgar error to suppose that people who have nothing in them are nobody in a house.

It is no wonder that I was always in a hurry, for I must have had an instinctive idea that I had my fortune to look for. The governor had nothing more than a genteel independence, and this would be a good deal lessened after his death by the lapse of an annuity. But sister Laura was thus provided for well enough, while I had not a shilling in actual money, although plenty of hypothetical thousands and sundry castles in the air. It was the consciousness of the latter kind of property, no doubt, that gave me so free-and-easy an air, and made me so completely the master of my own actions. How I did worry that blessed old woman! how Laura lectured and scolded! how the governor stormed! and how I was forgiven the next minute, and we were all as happy again as the day was long! But at length the time of separation came. I had grown a great hulking fellow, strong enough to make my bread as a porter, if that had been needed; and so a situation was found for me in a counting-house at Barcelona, and, after a lecture and a hearty cry from sister Laura, a blessing and a kiss from mamma, and a great sob kept down by a hurricane laugh from the governor, I went adrift.

Four years passed rapidly away. I had attained my full height, and more than my just share of inches. I already enjoyed a fair modicum of whiskers, and had even made some progress in the cultivation of a pair of mustaches, when suddenly the house which I was connected with failed. What to do? The governor insisted upon my return to England, where his interest among the mercantile class was considerable. Laura hinted mysteriously that my presence in the house would soon be a matter of great importance to her father; and mamma let out the secret by writing to me that Laura was going to "change her condition." I was glad to hear this, for I knew he would be a model of a fellow who was Laura's husband; and, gulping down my pride, which would fain have persuaded me that it was unmanly to go back again like the ill sixpence, I set out on my return home.

The family, I knew, had moved to another house; but, being well acquainted with the town, I had no difficulty in finding the place. It was a range of handsome buildings, which had sprung up in the fashionable outskirts during my absence; and, although it was far on in the evening, my accustomed eyes soon descried through the gloom the governor's old-fashioned door-plate. I was just about to knock when a temptation came into my way. One of the area windows was open, gaping as if for my reception. A quantity of plate lay upon a table close by. Why should I not enter and appear unannounced in the drawing-room, a sunburnt phantom of five feet eleven? Why should I not present the precise and careful Laura with a handful of her own spoons and forks, left so conveniently at the service of any area sneak who might chance to pass by? Why? That is only a figure of speech. I asked no questions about the matter; the idea was hardly well across my brain when my legs were across the rails. In another moment I had crept in by the window; and, chuckling at my own cleverness and the great moral lesson I was about to teach, I was stuffing my pockets with the plate.

While thus engaged the opening of a door in the hall above alarmed me, and, afraid of the failure of my plan, I stepped lightly up the stair, which was partially lighted by the hall lamp. As I was about to emerge at the top a serving-girl was coming out of a room on the opposite side. She instantly retreated, shut the door with a bang, and I could hear a half-suppressed hysterical cry. I bounded on, sprung up the drawing-room stair and entered the first door at a venture. All was dark, and I stopped for a moment to listen. Lights were hurrying across the hall, and I heard the rough voice of a man, as if scolding and taunting some person. The girl had doubtless given the alarm, although her information must have been very indistinct, for, when she saw me, I was in the shadow of the stair, and she could have had little more than a vague impression that she beheld a human figure. However this may be, the man's voice appeared to descend the stair to the area-room, and presently I heard a crashing noise, not as if he was counting the plate, but rather thrusting it aside en masse. Then I heard the window closed, the shutters bolted, and an alarm-bell hung upon them, and the man reascended the stair, half scolding, half laughing at the girl's superstition. He took care, notwithstanding, to examine the fastenings of the street-door and even to lock it and put the key in his pocket. He retired into a room and all was silence.

I began to feel decidedly queer. The governor kept no male servant that I knew of, and had never done so. It was impossible he could have introduced this change into his household without my being informed of it by sister Laura, whose letters were an exact chronicle of everything, down to the health of the cat. This was puzzling. And, now that I had time to think, the house was much too large for a family requiring only three sleeping-rooms even when I was at home. It was what is called a double house, with rooms on both sides of the hall, and the apartment, on the threshold of which I was still lingering, appeared from the dim light of the windows to be of very considerable size. I now recollected that the quantity of plate I had seen—a portion of which at this moment felt preternaturally heavy in my pockets—must have been three times greater than any the governor ever possessed, and that various pieces were of a size and massivness I had never seen in the establishment. In vain I bethought myself that had seen and recognized the well-known door-plate, and that the area from which I entered was immediately under; in vain I argued that since Laura was about to be married the extra quantity of plate might be intended to form a part of her trousseau. I could not convince myself. But the course of my thoughts suggested an idea, and pulling hastily from my pocket a table-spoon I felt, for I could not see the legend which contained my fate. But my fingers were tremulous; they seemed to have lost sensation—only I fancied I did feel something more than the governor's plain initials. There was still a light in the hall. If I could but bring that spoon within its illumination! All was silent, and I ventured to descend step after step—not as I had bounded up, but with the stealthy pace of a thief, and the plate growing heavier and heavier in my pocket. At length I was near enough to see, in spite of a dimness that had gathered over my eyes, and, with a sensation of absolute faintness, I beheld upon the spoon an engraved crest—the red right hand of a Baronet!

I crept back again, holding by the banisters, fancying every now and then that I heard a door open behind me, and yet my feet no more consented to quicken their motion than if I had been pursued by a murderer in the nightmare. I at length got into a room, groped for a chair, and sat down. No more hurry now. Oh, no! There was plenty of time, and plenty to do in it, for I had to wipe away the perspira ion that ran down my face in streams. What was to be done? What had I done? Oh, a trifle, a trifle! I had only sneaked into a gentleman's house by the area-window, and pocketed his table-spoons; and here I was, locked and barred and belled in sitting very comfortably, in the dark and alone, in his drawing-room. Very particularly comfortable. What a capital fellow, to be sure! What an amusing personage! Wouldn't the Baronet laugh in the morning? Wouldn't he ask me to stay to breakfast? And wouldn't I eat heartily out of the spoons I had stolen? But what name is that? Who calls me a housebreaker! Who gives me in charge? Who lugs me off by the neck? I will not stand it. I am innocent except of breaking into a Baronet's house. I am a gentleman, with another gentleman's spoons in my pockets. I claim the protection of the law. Police! police.

My brain was wandering. I pressed my hand upon my wet forehead to keep down the thick-coming fancies, and determined, for the first time in my life, to hold a deliberate consultation with myself. I was in an awkward predicament—it was impossible to deny the fact, but was there anything really serious in the case? I had unquestionably descended into the wrong area, the right-hand one instead of the left-hand one; but was I not unquestionably the relation—the distant relation, of the next-door neighbor? I had been four years absent from his house, and was there anything more natural than that I should desire to pay my next visit through a subterranean window? I had appropriated, it is true, a quantity of silver-plate I had found; but with what other intention could I have done this than to present it to my distant relation's daughter, to reproach her with her carelessness in leaving it next door? Finally I was snared, caged, trapped—door and window had been bolted upon me without any remonstrance on my part—and I was now some considerable time in the house, unsuspected, yet a prisoner. The position was serious; but come, suppose the worst, that I was actually laid hold of as a malefactor and commanded to give an account of myself; well, I was, as aforesaid, a distant relation of the individual next door. I belonged to nobody in the world if not to him; I bore but an indifferent reputation in regard to steadiness, and after four years' absence in a foreign country I had returned—idle, penniless and objectless—just in time to find an area-window open in the dusk of the evening and a heap of plate lying behind it, within view of the street.

This self-examination was not encouraging; the case was decidedly queer, and, as I sat thus pondering in the dark, with the spoon in my hand, I am quite sure that no malefactor in a dungeon could have envied my reflections. In fact, the evidence was so dead against me that I began to doubt my own innocence. What was I here for if my intentions were really honest? and how came it that all this silver plate had found its way into my pockets? I was angry as well as terrified. I was Judge and criminal in one, but the instincts of nature got the better of my sense of justice, and I rose suddenly up to ascertain whether it was not possible to get from the window into the street.

As I moved, however, the horrible booty I had in my pocket moved likewise, appearing to me to shriek, like a score of fiends, "Police! police!" and the next instant I heard a quick footstep ascending the stair. Now was the fatal moment come! I was on my feet; my eyes glared upon the door; my hands were clenched; the perspiration had dried suddenly upon my skin, and my tongue clave to the roof of my mouth. But the footstep, accompanied by a gleam of light, passed—passed, and from very weakness I sat down again, with a dreadful indifference to the screams of the plate in my pockets. Presently there were more footsteps along the hall; then voices; then drawing of bolts; and creaking of locks; then utter darkness; then silence—lasting, terrible, profound. The house had gone to bed; the house would quickly be asleep; it was time to be up and doing. But first and foremost I must get rid of the plate. Without that hideous corpus delicti I should have some chance. I must at all hazards creep down into the hall, find my way to the lower regions and replace the accursed thing where I found it. It required nerve to attempt this; but I was thoroughly wound up, and after allowing a reasonable time to elapse, to give my enemies a fair opportunity of falling asleep, I set out upon the adventure. The door creaked as I went out; the plate grated against my very soul as I descended the steps; but slowly, stealthily, I crept along the wall, and at length found myself upon the level floor. There was but one door on that side of the hall—the door which led to the area-room, and it was with inexpressible relief I reached it in safety and grasped the knob in my hand. The knob turned—but the door did not open; it was locked; it was my fate to be a thief, and after a moment of new dismay, I turned again doggedly, reached the stair and re-entered the appartment I had left.

It was like getting home. It was snug and private. I had a chair there waiting for me. I thought to myself that many a man would take a deal of trouble to break into such a house. I had only sneaked. I wondered how Jack Shepherd felt on such occasions. He would make nothing of getting down into the street from the window, spoons and all. I tried this. The shutters were not even closed, and the sash moving noiselessly I had no difficulty in raising it. I stepped out into the balcony and looked over. Nothing was to be seen but a black and yawning gulf beneath, guarded by the imaginary spikes of an invisible railing. Jack would have laughed at this difficulty; but then he had more experience in the craft than I, and was provided with all necessary appliances. As for me, I had stupidly forgotten even my coil of rope. The governor's house, I found, had either no balcony at all, or it was too far apart to be reached. Presently I heard a footstep on the sidewalk a little way off. It was approaching with slow, measured pace. The person was walking as calmly and gravely in the night as if it had been broad day. Suppose I hailed this philosophical stranger and confided to him, in a friendly way, the fact that the Baronet, without the slightest provocation, had locked me up in his house, with his silver spoons in my pocket? Perhaps he would take the trouble of knocking at the door or crying fire, and when the servants opened I might rush out and so make my escape. But while I was looking wistfully down to see if I could not discern the walking figure, which was now under the windows, a sudden glare from the spot dazzled my sight. It was the bull's-eye of a policeman, and, with the instinct of a predatory character, I shrunk back trembling, crept into the room and shut the window.

By this time I was sensible that there was a little confusion in my thoughts, and by way of employing them on practical and useful subjects I determined to make a tour of the room. But first it was necessary to get rid, somehow or other, of my plunder—to plant the property, as we call it; and with that view I laid it carefully, piece by piece, in the corner of the sofa, and concealed it with the cover. This was a great relief. I almost felt like the injured party—more like a captive than a robber; and I groped my way through the room with a sort of vague idea that I might perhaps stumble upon some trap door or sliding-panel which would lead into the open air, or worse, into a secret chamber, where I should be safe for any given number of years from my persecutors. But there was nothing but a few cabinets and tables, and couches and arm-chairs, devotional-chairs, footstools, lamps and statuettes, and the elaborate girandole hung around with crystal prisms, which played such an interminable tune against each other when I chanced to move them that I stumbled away as fast as I could and subsided into a fauteuil so rich and so deep that I felt myself swallowed up, as it were, it its billows of swan's down.

How long I had been in the house by this time I cannot tell. It seemed to me, when I looked back, to form a considerable portion of a lifetime. Indeed, I did not remember the more distant events of the night, although every now and then the fact occurred to me with startling distinctness that all I had gone through was only preliminary to something still to happen; that the morning was to come, the family to be astir and the housebreaker to be apprehended. My reflections were not continuous. It may be that I dozed between whiles. How else can I account for my feeling myself grasped by the throat, to the very brink of suffocation, by a hand without a body? How else can I account for my sister Laura standing over me where I reclined, pointing to the stolen plate on the sofa, and lecturing me on my horrible propensities till her voice rose to a wild, unearthly scream which pierced through my brain!

When this fancy occurred I started from my recumbent posture. A voice was actually in my ears and a living form before my eyes; a lady stood contemplating me with a half-scream on her lips and the color fading from her cheek, and as I moved she would have fallen to the ground had I not sprung up and caught her in my arms. I laid her softly down in the chair. It was the morning twilight. The silence was profound. The boundaries of the room were still dim and indistinct. Is it any wonder that I was in some considerable degree of perplexity as to whether I was not still in the land of dreams!

"Madam," said I, "if you are a vision, it is of no consequence; but if not, I wish particularly to get out."

"Offer no injury," she replied, in a tremulous voice, "and no one will molest you. Take what you have come for, and begone."

"That is sooner said than done. The doors and windows below are locked and bolted, and beneath those of this room the area is deep and the spikes sharp. I assure you I have been in very considerable perplexity the whole of last night;" and, drawing a chair, I sat down in front of her. Whether it was owing to this action, or to my complaining voice, or to the mere fact of her finding herself in a quiet tete-a-tete with a housebreaker, I can't tell; but the lady broke out in a low, hysterical laugh.

"How did you break in?" said she.

"I did not break; it is far from being my character, I assure you. But the area-window was open, and so I just thought I would come in."

"You were attracted by the plate! Take it, for Heaven's sake, desperate man, and go away!"

"I did take some of it, but with no evil intentions—only by way of amusement. Here it is;" and going to the sofa I drew off the cover and showed her the plate.

"You have been generous," said she, her voice again trembling; "for the whole must have been in your power. I will let you out so softly that no one will know. Put up in your pockets what you have risked so much to possess and follow me."

"I will follow you with pleasure," said I, "were it the world over;" for the increasing light showed me as lovely a creature as the morning sun ever shone upon; "but as for the silver, you must excuse me there; I never stole anything before, and, please Heaven, I never will again!"

"Surely you are the most extraordinary person," said the young lady, suddenly, for the light seemed to bring a revelation to her likewise; "you neither look nor talk like a robber."

"Nor am I. I am not even a robber—I am nothing, and have not property in the world to the value of these articles of plate."

"Then if you are not a robber, why are you here? Why creep in at the area-window, appropriate other people's spoons, and get locked up all night in their house?"

"For no other reason than that I was in a hurry. I had come home from Barcelona, and was going to my guardian's, next door, when your unfortunate area window caught my eye, with the plate on the window inside. In an instant I was over the rails and in through the window like a harlequin, with the intention of giving the family a pleasing surprise and my old monitress, Sister Laura, a great moral lesson on the impropriety of her leaving her plate about in so careless a manner."

"Then you are Gerald, my dear Laura's cousin, so longingly expected, so beloved by them all." Here the young lady blushed and cast down her eyes. What these two girls could have been saying to each other about me I never found out; but there was a secret, I will go my death upon it.

She let me out so quietly that neither her father nor the servants ever knew a syllable about the matter. I need not say how I was received next door. The governor swept down another sob with another blessing and another kiss; and Laura was so rejoiced that she gave me another hearty cry and forgot to give me another lecture. My next four years were spent to better purpose than the last. Being less in a hurry, I took time to build up a flourishing business in partnership with Laura's husband. As for the Baronet's daughter—for we must get everybody into the concluding tableaux—why, there she is, that lady cutting bread and butter for the children with as matronly an air as Werter's Charlotte; she is my wife; and we laugh to this day at the oddity of that first interview which led to so happy a denouement.

The Union League Club.

The Union League Club, of New York, held its annual meeting recently, and adopted resolutions favoring specie resumption Jan. 1, 1879, and the payment of the public debt in gold or its equivalent. George Cabot Ward was elected President, and prominent among the new Vice Presidents are William Cullen Bryant, William Orton, Peter Cooper, David Dows and Theodore Roosevelt.

A SHREWD fellow—A henpecked husband.

THE SHADOW OF FATE.

BY JUDGE JARVIS.

A rider was threading his way over a road which lay along the hills at the base of the Blue Ridge mountains, in the region known as the Piedmont of Virginia, about the sources of the Rappahannock river.

* * * * *

The man himself might be described in the same language, as far as it would apply. Beyond this his age was about 28, his hair brown and full in lock, his eye of a grayish blue.

* * * * *

His way quickly brought the traveler to a stream now running over its banks. Slipping easily from his saddle, he tightened the girths, slackened the crupper, and, gently patting his animal, addressed a few affectionate words to him. Remounting, he fixed himself firmly in the saddle, gathered his bridle in a manner to impart to his companion his own energy and determination, and moved into the creek.

Turning up the stream, he proceeded for about a hundred yards along the bank, and then struck boldly across in a direct line, with the horse's head slanted up current. The depth of the water did not sensibly increase in the course of eighty yards, and the stranger was congratulating himself upon the probability of getting over without a wetting, when the animal in two steps increased the depth until he could no longer hold his footing, and sprung boldly into the middle of a deep, rushing channel. In an instant the rider had seized the mane of the horse in his left hand, and slipped smoothly out of the saddle to the lower side, where he floated along.

Man and beast battled bravely with the flood for a moment, when the former was startled to feel the horse flinch and turn with a terrified snort down the current. A quick jerk upon the left rein served to procure but an instant's pause in the precipitate course of the beast, but in that instant the stranger became aware of another presence by the touch of a clammy object against his hand.

Raising his head above the neck of the charger, he saw dimly outlined upon the waving and shimmering surface a dark and undefinable object. The next moment the desperate plunges of the beast had obstructed his vision, when, with the self-command of one accustomed and nerved to the hardship of athletic sports and a soldier's danger, he swung his leg over the back of his animal and gathered himself into his saddle.

Reaching out a hand, he was about to seize the object of his horror, when it exposed the ghastly features of a woman.

For an instant only he hesitated; then, recovering from the thrill, he grasped the head firmly by the loose, flowing, tangled mass of raven tresses, and raised it above the water upon the pommel of his saddle.

Turning his head again up stream, he renewed the combat with the tide. Twice it seemed as though man, woman, and beast must all succumb, and twice the noble struggles of the animal cheated the turgid grave of its victims.

Finally, the hoofs once more crunched the firm bottom of the stream, and ten paces brought the party safely to the shore.

* * * * *

Feeling the forehead, he found it cold; the hands were also chilled, but he thought he felt a slight flutter of the pulse. Tearing open the dress, he pressed his hand against the heart and found it still warm.

His efforts to resuscitate her were soon rewarded, and, after a few moments, the woman made an attempt to speak, which resulted, however, only in a moaning cry.

At this point he began to look for other assistance, when he observed a light upon the hill above the creek. Once more raising the body to the pommel of his saddle and mounting behind it, he sought the road.

* * * * *

One stepped around to receive the woman, and another entered the house to procure the stimulant.

"What's this?" said the one who was assisting the traveler in dismounting the woman.

"Send for the nearest physician at once."

They lifted the motionless, but reviving, form into the house, and deposited it upon a sofa.

The stimulant was soon brought, and, upon a small portion of it being administered, the woman indicated an increased vitality by a broken gurgle. This, after a while, gave way to clearer articulation, in which, however, only syllables were emitted. These were in turn succeeded by one or two sharp cries of pain, which gradually subsided into a moaning chatter of wailing, incoherent sentences.

At this point the stranger, in raising his hand to her head to brush the tangled hair from her brow, noticed a clot of blood upon the wet skin of his finger; rubbing it off, he found no trace of a wound.

"She must be bleeding!" he ejaculated; "see if there is a cut anywhere."

An examination soon revealed a ghastly wound, an ugly, gaping abrasion upon the left side of the head, above the ear, and just behind the temple. The locks were matted over it, and the blood still oozed slowly from its mouth.

Pending the arrival of a doctor, the stranger clipped the hair from around the wound, and, after bathing it with feminine tenderness, he gave the patient over to the charge of the ladies of the house who were in attendance.

* * * * *

"I presume you are the host, sir," said he, at once, addressing the elder of the two. "If you will be kind enough to let me have a bed, until I can rest for an hour or so and dry my clothing, I shall resume my journey under great obligation to you. Matters of importance urge me to lose no time, and I shall only delay until my horse can recruit for the balance of my ride. In fact, but for the incident of finding the unfortunate lady in the creek, I should have continued on the road without consulting my comfort so far."

"Will you tell me how you happened upon the adventure, and how you account for the lady's wound and present condition?"

The traveler gave a brief account of the events, without, however, throwing any light upon his own identity or business.

"May I ask your name, sir?" inquired the host, whom we will introduce to the reader as Mr. Thornton, or Squire Thornton, as he was dubbed by his neighbors in honor of his being a Justice of the Peace.

* * * * * *

"I beg pardon for the misconstruction. My name is Gaspard Durer, a short while since a soldier in the French service. Do you see anything in my appearance or anything else about this case which justifies you in interrogating me officially?"

"Until one who is found with a body that has been murdered or dangerously assaulted has accounted satisfactorily for his presence there, there is a legal suspicion fixed upon him."

* * * * * *

"If I must be detained to satisfy the law, I yield to the annoyance with as little impatience as possible, where the officer of the law exercises his duties so courteously."

After a few more remarks were passed, the Squire bade his son Eddie conduct the gentleman to his room and see him well provided for the night.

After the traveler had left, the vagrant still lingered. Shifting his hat restlessly but mechanically, he seemed to resume a conversation which had probably been interrupted by the stranger's exit from the stable.

"'Pears to me now"—an expression which indicated the result of some mighty reflection for his caliber—"'Pears to me he ain't tellin' the truth. He ain't named Gasper Deray, because he'd a said so fust. 'Pears to me he looks like old Raoul Dupuy, and Gaston afore him; and, if I ain't mistaken, he's been in these parts afore."

"Who's the woman, Randy?"

"I have been lookin' at her, but 'pears to me I never seen her afore—leastways she don't come from about here."

"The resemblance of Durer to the Dupuys is striking, and I thought at first he was the son of Gaston, who has been absent so long. What think you, my son?"

"Can't say, father, but his resemblance to Mr. Dupuy at the manor would be noticed by anyone."

"Perhaps," suggested the vagrant, "he's a son of Dupuy himself; if half they bring from furrin parts about him is c'rect, 'pears to me he must have mor'n one."

"And your friend Raoul ain't too good for a fraud or lie," chirped the vagrant.

"We will dispense with your comments on the characters of my friends," retorted the Squire.

"No offense, Squire, but 'spense or no 'spense, I knows the laws, and I allers take care to have proof afore I says a libel on any man."

"What do you know of Raoul Dupuy, villain, that you dare maintain such a thing concerning his character, which is polluted by your mention of it?"

"Never mind what I know, Squire, so long as I ain't said it," answered the tramp.

* * * * *

"What is your opinion, doctor?" asked the Squire.

"It is rather early to ask an opinion about the patient, Squire. The skull is fractured, and it may be necessary to trepan it, if any portion is bearing on the brain."

"Do you think the blow will permanently affect her brain, or that she will be sound in mind should she recover?"

"If the pressure of the bone upon the brain be removed, she will doubtless recover her senses. But, until she is completely well again, and even after, no risk must be taken in the case. Absence of excitement or noise is indispensable, as the slightest mental shock might make her a raving maniac. Blows upon that region of the head have been known to deprive persons of the power of speech, and, if she is not kept perfectly quiet, she may recover only to linger out a dumb existence."

After breakfast a servant, whom the Squire had dispatched across the creek upon his first rising, returned with the information that Mr. Taylor—the gentleman whom the stranger had left at his gate on the road—would be over immediately after breakfast.

Upon the arrival of Mr. Taylor, he and the Squire retired for a consultation, to which they after a while called Randy, the vagrant. They then returned to the traveler, and after hearing his account once more, and comparing the time of his leaving Mr. Taylor with that of his arrival at the Squire's, they proceeded to the creek in company.

Upon their arrival the squire addressed the traveler:

"I have taken counsel with Mr. Taylor touching this case, which seems a deep mystery, after all the information we have been so far able to gather; the lady seems unknown even to Randy, who visits every house in this and the adjoining counties, and you are equally a stranger to us. I consider, however, that you have been fully discharged from any connection with the affair. We must first attempt to gather something from the lady herself."

At this point the doctor came out of the sick-room. He stated that the lady had greatly improved during the night, and that the wound was, in all probability, not serious; the lady had even recovered, in a measure, the control of her mental faculties and language, though she was not fully conscious or coherent as yet.

The Squire, Mr. Taylor, the traveler, and the doctor together proceeded to the bedside of the unfortunate woman, the stranger—being assured of his release by the words of the Squire—first ordering a servant to bring his horse to the door before leaving the piazza.

Upon reaching the bed the woman opened her eyes, and, seeing the kind, manly faces of the Squire and Mr. Taylor, she faintly smiled and ran her eyes over the rest of the group.

She passed the doctor without any variance of expression, and then rested them upon the face of the stranger.

The eyes became set in a horrible stare, the light forsook them, the pupils dilated; she raised herself to a sitting posture by a convulsive movement of the arms; then, crouching to her knees and throwing herself wildly down upon her face, she shrieked out, with a curdling moan:

"Oh, oh, Dupuy! don't, don't!" and consciousness once more left her.

Despite his self-command, the traveler paled. He at once retired with the gentlemen, however, to the piazza, and the doctor moved to assist his patient.

In a short while he, too, joined the party upon the piazza. Nothing had passed between the group until the doctor broke a painful constraint which had fallen upon all.

"Gentlemen," said he, "the worst mishap that could befall this unfortunate lady has just occurred through her having seen this gentleman, Mr. Durer. She is a raving maniac. She may die. she may recover, after a lingering illness; but, in any event, she will be fortunate if she ever recovers her reason. Darkness has settled upon her brain for a long night, which may never be followed by the dawn."

"To what, doctor," asked the Squire, "do you attribute her shock?"

"She was evidently stricken with horror at the sight of Mr. Durer, whom, from my knowledge of the laws of the human brain, she has in some way associated with the violence which has been done her, to her great terror."

There was a pause, a painful lull.

Then the Squire spoke to Durer.

"The case. sir, has taken a new turn. You will not be surprised that I conclude it my duty to commit you, to await further developments in the matter."

* * * * *

Upon the last syllable he strode from the piazza, booted and spurred, his steps clanging an echo to his voice. One spring and he has vaulted into his saddle; he brushes away the servant who holds his bit with imperial disdain, and turns his horse at the gate.

The animal clears it with the activity and fire of his master, gathers himself on the other side, and before the Squire can recover from the stupor of amazement, is off like the wind.

The above is a synopsis of "THE SHADOW OF FATE," by Judge Jarvis, a wonderfully dramatic and powerful novel, which began in No. 660 of FRANK LESLIE'S CHIMNEY CORNER, now for sale at all news depots. It is a story of adventure and devotion, of an interest beyond that of any novel published for years. With No. 660 FRANK LESLIE'S CHIMNEY CORNER is presented an exquisite steel engraving, "Love's Young Dream;" with No. 661, "Dressed for Baptism," a picture appealing to every family; with No. 662, "Nina." These three engravings cannot be purchased in the print stores under FIFTEEN DOLLARS. The price of the CHIMNEY CORNER is 10 cents weekly, or $4 per annum. Anyone wishing to enjoy the excellent stories, instructive and entertaining matter in this popular paper can receive it for three months, free of postage, by remitting ONE DOLLAR to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York. Try it, and commence with No. 660, thus securing these three exquisite engravings.

A Successful American Prima Donna.

Lucy Hooper, in her last letter from Paris to the Philadelphia Bulletin, speaks of the latest American prima donna who has been successful at the gay capital of France. This lady is a native of New Orleans, is Mme. Marie Durand, and has won laurels at Les Italiens in "Aida." Young and handsome is this new star, a grand dramatic soprano, who brings to the metropolitan boards a store of fame and of experience gained in the great lyric theaters of Italy. It is owing to the Turko-Russian war that Paris has been enabled to applaud her. Originally engaged for the season at Warsaw, the disastrous and premature termination of her engagement there, owing to the closing of the theater, set her free to wing her way to Paris, a point that attracts all operatic song-birds sooner or later. Mme. Durand possesses a noble and sympathetic voice, and is also a fine actress. She created a perfect furore as "Aida," and was called out no less than five times at the close of the opera.

"I LIVE in Julia's eyes," said an affected dandy in Colman's hearing. "I don't wonder at it," replied George, "since I observed she had a sty in them when I saw her last."

THE SCHOLAR'S SWEETHEART.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

All day he toils with zeal severe
On something learnedly polemic.
From Harvard he returned last year,
With bounteous honors academic.
His parents name him but to praise,
His little sisters quite adore him,
And all the loving household lays Allegiance willingly before him.

What forms his labor, week by week?
They could not understand—oh, never!
'Tis something eminently Greek,
'Tis something intricately clever.
But still his task, unfinished yet,
He shapes with industry unflagging,
And writes his treatise that shall set
The heads of noted pundits wagging.

Is it of Homer's doubtful lines?
Or yet some question, subtly finer,
Of whether certain famous wines
Were first obtained from Asia Minor?
Is it of dialects impure?
Is it some long-fought rule of grammar?
Is it old Sanscrit roots obscure?
Is it that wearisome digamma?

But, whether this or whether that,
Through fragrant fields, when work is ended
While darkly wheels the eager bat,
And all the west is warmly splendid,
He steals to meet, in loving wise,
With eager steps that do not tarry,
A rosy girl, whose shining eyes
Grow tender as she calls him "Harry."

What altered thoughts can she awake,
This pearl of sweethearts, best and fairest!
And what a contrast does she make
To "Comments on the Second Aorist!"
So strongly round him can she throw
Her dazzling spells of sweet retention,
'Tis doubtful now if he could go
Correctly through his First Declension.

For, while near mossy meadow bars,
With spirit thrilled by sacred pleasures,
He lingers till the dawn of stars,
He lingers by the girl he treasures,
This grave young scholar scarcely knows
If Hector was a fighting seaman,
If lofty Pindar wrote in prose,
Or Athens lay in Lacedæmon!

A COUNTRY minister of "limited capacity" recently married for a second wife a widow of some property. Being an ardent servant of Mammon, a former neighbor asked him if he did not do well by the second marriage. "O, yes indeed," he said with animation; and then, as an expression of reverent awe stole into his face, he added, "and, what is very remarkable, the clothes of my wife's first husband just fit me."

A Prophetic Curse.

A Savannah (Ga.) correspondent writes that Walter S. Harley, the duelist, is dead. An inquest was held, and the verdict was that deceased came to his death from a gun-shot wound inflicted by some person unknown to the jury. This is the second member of this family who has lost his life in a duel. Thomas Harley, his brother, was one of a large party of Southerners who moved from Charleston to Texas at the close of the war. He had been in Texas but a short time before he became involved in a quarrel. A duel was the result, and Thomas Harley received a wound from which he died soon afterward. Col. Harley, the father of the family, was known as an uncommonly passionate man. At one time he became enraged at one of his female slaves, and at once sold all of her children to punish her. In her sorrow and anger she cursed her master, telling him that the children of a man so merciless as he would surely come to some bad end. Walter, the son who has just been killed, was commonly considered the best member of the family. His tragic taking off is considered a verification of the old slave's prophetic curse.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

CIVIL-RIGHTS CASE.

The United States Supreme Court gave its decision in the case of Hall, administratrix, of Benson, vs. McCuire, error to the Supreme Court of Louisiana. In this case Benson was master of a steamboat enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States and plying between New Orleans and Vicksburg. He refused passage to defendant on account of her color, and this suit was brought under the law of the State forbidding discrimination by common carriers within the State on account of race or color. The defense was that the law of the State was a void act, as it had undertaken the regulation of commerce so far as the business of defendant's vessel was concerned—as it was engaged in inter-State commerce—a matter wholly within the jurisdiction and control of Congress. The State court held that the law was valid, and the same question was presented here. The statute is regarded, in accordance with the decision below, as requiring those engaged in inter-State commerce to give all persons traveling in Louisiana upon public conveyances employed in their business equal rights and privileges, without distinction on account of race or color, and it is said that for this reason the court has nothing to do with it as a regulation of internal commerce, or as affecting anything else than commerce among the States; and, as to this, the court says there can be no doubt that exclusive power has been conferred upon Congress. The difficulty has never been as to the existence of this power, but as to what is to be deemed an encroachment upon it, and it may be safely said that State legislation which seeks to impose a direct burden upon inter-State commerce, or to interfere directly with its freedom, encroaches upon the exclusive power of Congress. The statute in question occupies this position. It does not act upon business through local instruments to be employed after the vehicle of conveyance comes within the State, but directly upon the business as it comes into the State from without, or goes out from within. While it purports only to control the carrier when engaged within the State, it must necessarily influence his conduct to some extent in the management of his business throughout his entire voyage. Reversed. The Chief Justice delivered the opinion.

BANK-TAX CASE.

Farrington vs. State of Tennessee and Shelby county, error to the Supreme Court of Tennessee. Plaintiff in error in this case represents the Union and Planters' Bank, Tennessee, whose charter declares "That it shall pay to the State an annual tax of one-half of 1 per cent. on each share of capital stock subscribed, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." In 1872, under subsequent legislation, the stock of the bank was taxed for State and county purposes at par value of its stock at the rate fixed by the later statute. The court held that the bank was exempt from any different rate of taxation than that fixed in its charter by the compact therein contained between the State and corporation, and that subsequent legislation was void as impairing the obligations of the contract. A compact, says the court, lies at the foundation of all national life. Contracts mark the progress of communities in civilization and prosperity. They guard as far as possible against the fluctuations of human affairs. They seek to give stability to the present and certainty to the future. They gauge the confidence of man in the truthfulness and integrity of his fellow-man. They are the springs of business, trade and commerce, and without them society could not go on. Spotless faith in their fulfillment honors alike communities and individuals. Under the contract in this case there could be no further tax upon the shares of the bank, for rights have vested under it, and these rights are sacred. Reversed.

Justice Swayne delivered the opinion. Dissenting—Justices Strong, Clifford and Field, who held that the assumption of a contract does not extend to the shares of the bank taxed as property against individuals holding them. Four other cases are disposed of by this decision.

An Old Claim Paid.

The reason of the persistence of the heirs of Senator Sebastian, of Arkansas, will be understood when it is ascertained that they have just drawn from the treasury $17,700, which was his pay as Senator from March, 1861, to March, 1865. Sebastian was one of those Senators who left the Senate at the outbreak of the rebellion to join the Southern cause. He was expelled from the Senate, and ever since the war his heirs have been petitioning Congress to have the resolution of expulsion reconsidered, on the ground that the representations of the disloyalty of Sebastian are unfounded, and that, legally, he was Senator till March, 1865. At the last Congress the resolution of expulsion was rescinded, and, whether the Senators understood it or not, that act of rescinding has the effect of declaring Sebastian was Senator for the four years, and, consequently, was entitled to his pay for that period. At any rate, the money has been drawn by the heirs.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

A Missionary.

"My name," said the prisoner, "is John Honor. I am an honorable man, sir, and never stole a cent in my life—because (sotto voce) a cent isn't worth the stealing." "John," remarked the court, "honorable men are scarce in the workhouse, and I feel in duty bound to place such a party among the poor fallen ones at that place, in order that they may witness a good example and profit by it." As John filed toward the Black Maria he was heard to mutter, "They set too much value on honor in this city. I shall hereafter plead guilty to being a thief. To be locked up as a missionary is too much."—Cincinnati Times.

The McGarraghan Claim.

It is stated that William McGarraghan proposes to renew the litigation of his claim to the New Idria quicksilver mine, notwithstanding the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court. He claims that that decision shows that the title of the mine is solely and unquestionably in him, and defective only by the neglect of a clerk to insert the name of the recorder in the record of the patent.

Midgets.

There are two persons now in New York who are attracting a good deal of attention. The name of one is Miss Minnie Obom, and of the other, Gen. Mite. They are exhibited in a hall on Fifth avenue, and are visited daily by crowds of people. Miss Obom is 13 years old, and weighs only ten pounds. Gen. Mite is also 13 years old, and weighs only twenty-two inches, he says; or, upon being corrected, only nine pounds. These young persons are justly called, in the advertisements, "wonderful Midgets." The price of admission is 25 cents. The exhibition is more amusing, and much less unpleasant than that of any dwarfs I have ever seen. The General is ridiculously and unbelievably small. When you look at him you are ready to believe all the delightful old fairy stories about dwarfs being sent around in pot-pies. Lilliput ceases to be a myth.

It must be a very curious thing to be a midget; and yet a great many of us are midgets without knowing it. That is to say, we derive our celebrity entirely from accidental circumstances. I heard a midget make a speech the other evening; I did not know he was a midget, however, till the speech was over. I went into a hall where a great public question was being discussed, and I heard a dapper little man making the most proper and commonplace and silly address on this great public question that I ever listened to in my life. When he sat down some one whispered in my ear: "That gentleman's name is Julius Cæsar; he is a grandson of the true, original, and only Julius Cæsar, of whom you have heard." Julius Cæsar is used here, of course, merely in place of another familiar name, which immediately called to mind one of the most towering reputations in American history.

Princes and princesses of the blood, heirs and heiresses, and men who wear their hair long, are all midgets. There are midgets also in literature and art. Some of our "celebrated" painters and sculptors would never have been heard of if it had not been for their fathers, or their grandmothers, or their wives. Celebrity in art is sometimes reached by no more artistic qualities than endurance, push, enterprise, knack. In literature the faculty of memory goes a great way toward the acquisition of a reputation. When an author has a great memory, and can by this means make his writings interesting and widely current, we sometimes get to calling him a great writer. Mr. Bryant, in his recent speech at the Goethe Club reception, tried to prove that he himself was a midget—in other words, a poet celebrated for the accident of longevity instead of the excellence of his poetry. It was of course nothing but a good joke. His audience was intensely amused; they were very well aware that the sly old poet knew better.

At the exhibition in Midget Hall the fathers of the two little people are present. They take excellent care of their children, and do not permit their tiny brains and bodies to be overworked. They are also very proud of their offspring, and there is evidently a rivalry between the father of Minnie Obom and the father of Gen. Mite. It is always this way in the families of midgets.—"The Old Cabinet;" Scribner for January.

An Adventurous Life.

A locomotive ran over a good deal of human experience near a freight depot in Kansas City lately. A switch engine with three baggage cars was backing rapidly, when a man rushed from a side-crossing and, disappeared beneath the wheels; and when the train had passed, the mangled and quivering body of Capt. Kottwitz was found lying across the rails in a pool of blood. He was an officer of the Russian Imperial Guard during the Crimean war, and was wounded during an assault upon the Redan. He was sent home to his father's estate near Moscow, and enjoyed the pleasures of a young nobleman until he rejoined the Imperial Guard. His Colonel was arrested for a political offence, and sentenced to the Siberian mines for life. The Captain and eleven officers conspired to effect the release of the Colonel, but the plot was discovered and the ringleaders was sentenced to death. On account of his high rank his sentence was commuted to service for life in a Cossack regiment in Eastern Siberia. He escaped from the military prison at Moscow, made his way to the Black sea, and passed into the Turkish dominions. He arrived in New York in 1863, and joined the Seventh Volunteer regiment, serving until the close of the war. In 1870 he went to Rome and made an unsuccessful effort to secure a pardon from the Czar. The death of his grandmother cut off his annuity, but gave him $20,000, with which he returned to the United States and settled in Kansas. His fortune went to waste in a land speculation, and he was thrown upon his own resources, which finally failed to keep him out of debt. He spoke seven languages; he was a graduate of Heidelberg; and he had two unpaid board-bills in his pocket when he dashed out his brains.—New York Tribune.

Carelessness Punished.

The following from the Saginaw (Mich.) Republican would indicate that the terrible explosion at Negaunee was the natural result of the criminal carelessness of one of the victims: "The writer was well acquainted with 'Nitro-Glycerine Wheeler,' as he was called, and his son, and only last summer was witness of his experiments and handling of the dangerous product. It was put up in rolls like candles, and Wheeler would handle it as carelessly as if it were sausages. He carried it almost constantly loose under his buggy-seat, and many a friend of his would thank God as he alighted from his vehicle with the assurance that 'he was not blown up yet.' Wheeler would blow up stumps and rocks 'just to show how it went,' and was as unconcerned and happy with a pocket full of it as a child with a toy. But he played foolish just once too often."

Bleeding at the Nose.

A correspondent of the Scientific American says: "The best remedy for bleeding at the nose, as given by Dr. Gleason in one of his lectures, is a vigorous motion of the jaws, as if in the act of mastication. In the case of a child, a wad of paper should be placed in the mouth, and the child instructed to chew it hard. It is the motion of the jaws that stops the flow of blood. This remedy is so very simple that many will feel inclined to laugh at it, but it has never been known to fail in a single instance, even in very severe cases."

"Etc."

Edmund About's paper repeated a statement that the Duc de Broglie had observed that a civil war was the only means by which the Radicals could be got rid of. De Broglie sent in reply the following letter to About: "Mr. Editor: The words you attribute to me were never uttered by me. Kindly make this denial to your readers. I have the honor, etc., BROGLIE." To this impertinence, which lies in the "etc.," About replied: "Mr. Etc.: I am glad you retract a statement that has wounded all honest members of the Senate. I wish I could as easily obtain satisfaction for one-thousandth part of the injuries you and your detestable policy have done to France. I have the honor to express the etc. due to you, and remain yours, etc., ABOUT."

Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." When the body becomes diseased, the mind is thereby necessarily influenced. National wars, State dissensions, neighborhood broils, and family differences, are more frequently than otherwise the result of diseased and disordered constitutions. When the body is suffering, the mind, acting in sympathy, will become irritated and perplexed. When the physical system is in health, the mind perceives things in their true light, and the disposition assumes a very different phase. Nothing more directly tends to destroy the happy, cheerful disposition of a woman, and render her peevish, nervous, and fretful, than a constant endurance of uterine disorders. The diseases peculiar to woman take away the elasticity and buoyancy of health, and reduce her body and mind to a mere wreck. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a real peacemaker in a family. No woman suffering from uterine disorders can afford to be without this remedy. The Favorite Prescription saves unnecessary doctor bills, prevents divorces, wards off suicides, brings back buoyant, joyous feelings, restores the woman to health, and her family to happiness. It is sold by all druggists.

Relief Without a Doctor.

Though we would by no means be understood as deprecating, but rather as recommending, professional aid in disease, there are multitudes of instances when it is neither necessary or easy to obtain. A family provided with a comprehensive household specific, like Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is possessed of a medicinal resource adequate to most emergencies in which medical advice would be otherwise needful. That sterling tonic and corrective invariably remedies, and is authoritatively recommended for debility, indigestion, liver disorder, an irregular habit of body, urinary and uterine troubles, incipient rheumatism and gout, and many other ailments of frequent occurrence. It eradicates and prevents intermittent and remittent fevers, relieves mental despondency, checks premature decay, and invigorates the nervous and muscular tissues. Sleep, digestion and appetite are promoted by it, and it is extremely useful in overcoming the effects of exhaustion and exposure.

HEART DISEASE can be cured. To prove our assertion we print the following:

This is to certify that I have used Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, and from the worst stages of Heart Disease I now consider myself well, by the use of one and one-half bottles of HEART REGULATOR. I have been troubled a little more than a year with a sluggish misbeating of the heart, and could do no stooping work whatever. I applied to the best physicians of New England, and got no relief, but by the simple use of this really valuable remedy I am now able to do a good day's work, and experience no distress from it. I think there is nothing that equals the HEART REGULATOR, and I advise all afflicted in any way with Heart Disease to give it a thorough trial, and they will not regret it. THOMAS M. GOOD ADVICE.—We advise every farmer or stock raiser to invest in Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, and feed them out to their herds this winter. Depend upon it, it will pay big interest.

DANGEROUS.—It is a dangerous thing to neglect a cough or cold, or any difficulty of the throat or lungs. Lose not a moment in getting a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. You can rely upon it to cure you.

The Greatest Discovery of the Age is Dr. Tobias' celebrated Venetian Liniment! 30 years before the public, and warranted to cure Diarrhea, Dysentery, Colic and Spasms, taken internally; and Croup, Chronic Rheumatism, Sore Throats, Cuts, Bruises, Old Sores, and Pains in the Limbs, Back and Chest, externally. It has never failed. No family will ever be without after once giving it a fair trial. Price, 40 cents. DR. TOBIAS' VENETIAN HORSE LINIMENT, in Pint Bottles, at One Dollar, is warranted superior to any other, or NO PAY, for the cure of Colic, Cuts, Bruises, Old Sores, etc. Sold by all Druggists. Depot—10 Park Place, New York.

Dyspepsia, Debility and loss of appetite, whether the result of sickness or over-exertion, may be readily cured by Schenck's Seaweed Tonic. It builds up the enervated system by aiding digestion and stimulating the appetite.

For sale by all Druggists.

WOMEN dispute about other matters, but all agree on the merits of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER as par excellence the best of all. Grocers throughout the country keep it, and find it gives supreme satisfaction. By using it the housewife is sure of delicious bread, rusk, rolls, biscuit, buckwheat cakes, and all the delicacies made from flour.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

Caution to the Public.

To avoid imposition, purchasers of Waltham Watches will observe that every genuine Watch, whether gold or silver, bears our own trade-mark on both case and movements.

Gold cases are stamped "A. W. Co." and guarantee certificates accompany them. Silver cases are stamped "Am. Watch Co., Waltham, Mass., Coin Silver," or "Am. Watch Co., Waltham, Mass., Sterling Silver," according to quality, and are accompanied by guarantee certificate signed R. E. Robbins, Treasurer. The name "WALTHAM" is plainly engraved upon all movements, irrespective of other distinguishing marks.

This caution is rendered necessary by reason of the fact that our cases are frequently separated from our movements and put upon worthless movements of other makers, and vice versa, thus affecting injuriously the performance of the Watches, and vitiating our guaranty, which is intended only to cover our complete Watches wholly made by us. ☞ Every buyer should make a close inspection as indicated.

Road Supervisors and Township Trustees.

MR. EDITOR,—Having had occasion a few days ago to look up the law in regard to Supervisors of highways, I noticed last winter's legislation on the subject of their election, and as there may be some confusion on the part of your readers, I would call their attention to one peculiarity. Heretofore as you are aware, our township officers were elected biennially in October, and at the same time as county and State officers. On March 3d, 1877, (see page 53, Regular sess acts, 1877), the law was changed, providing for the election in all townships, naming specifically, Justices of the Peace, Township Trustees, Assessor, Constable and Supervisor, should be elected on the first Monday of April, 1878 and biennially there after. Two days after, March 5th, 1877 (see page 120, Regular session acts) another act was approved in regard to elections &c., of Supervisors, providing for their election to take place on the second Tuesday of October 1878, and shall hold his office two years, and that the Supervisor then acting will continue to act until October election 1878. So you see that it will not take much of a lawyer to determine the fact, that the last expression of the law making power will govern. By section 3, chapter 15, page 38, acts special session 1877, township trustees shall act as inspector of elections in his elective precinct, and he with the judges shall constitute a board of electors, and the last proviso of that section says "no person shall be eligible to sit on any board of electors, who is a candidate to be voted for at any such election." This act was approved March 14, 1878. Now two days before that on March 12, another act was approved (chapter 44, page 79, acts special session '77) and provides that a person may be township Trustee for two terms under certain conditions. Now can a township trustee become his own successor? Or if he discharge his duty by acting as inspector of election, be re-elected? The act passed first says he may, but the act passed last says he shall act as inspector, and it says if he is a candidate for that office or any other at that election, he shall not "be eligible to sit on any board of election," &c. Mr. Editor why are things thus? W. H. DILLS.

Wants Eph Reynolds.

Witherill tells a good story occasionally. He says Ed Nicar was out the other night and had very uncomfortable dreams when he got to bed. He had been reading Bower on hell and his spirit, usually serene, was perturbed by visions of his future state. In short, he dreamt he was in hell without his stock of summer clothes. He looked around a little while to see if he couldn't get a drink somewhere, but not finding John Wagener's sign he got up in disgust to leave the premises. The Devil collared him and shouted:

"Hold on! Where are you going Ed?'

"O, nowhere in particular—just around to see Jim Ellsworth.'

"That won't do,' observed his majesty, 'I've got you now—you can't leave this place.'

"But I must,' replied Ed, "besides, I didn't know it was so d—d hot here and I brought my skates and an overcoat instead of a fan.'

"Well,' said the Devil, whisking his tail around; and inserting it in Ed's off ear by way of emphasis, "you can go on one condition.'

"Name your terms,' said Ed, with his customary promptness.

"You are to come back in three weeks and bring Eph Reynolds.'

"All right me covey,' and Ed shook hands with him and woke up.—South Bend Herald.

A Boys First Composition.

The Terre Haute (Ind.) Album, gives the following essay on "The Ox," from one of its young contributors, just as it came from his pen. It is as natural and spontaneous, that we doubt if Shilabar or Josh Billings could equal it in genuine humor.

Oxen is a very slow animal, they are good to brake ground up. I would drather have horses if they didn't have kolick, which they say is wind collected into a bunch, which makes it dangerrs to be safe for to keep horses the people would have to wheal thare wood on a wheel-barrow, it would take to or three days to wheal a cord a mile.

Cows is useful to. I have heard some say that if they had to be tother or ox they wood be a cow. But I think when it cum to have their tits pulled or a mornin' they would wish they wasn't, for oxen don't generally have to raise cows. If I had to be enny I would rather be a heffur. But if I couldent be a heffur and had to be both I would be an ox.

ISAAC SPIKER.

Napoleon's Campaign in 1812.

Flushed with his series of victories Napoleon crossed the Niemen in June. As he advanced, the Russians retreated, destroying in their flight everything that would sustain the life of man or beast. Before a shot had been fired, twenty-five thousand men of the 'grand army' were suffering the pangs of hunger and dying too rapidly to be buried, the road to Nilna was piled with ten thousand dead horses, and a hundred and twenty pieces of artillery were abandoned en route for want of horses to haul them. At Smolensko, the first stand was made, and a seige begun—During the night, the inhabitants evacuated the city, and retreated, with the soldiers, leaving for the French the shelter of fire, smoke and ashes. At Borodino, the Russians halted in the hope of checking the conqueror, and saving Moscow, in which he had declared he would spend New Year's.—Battle lines were drawn on September 6th, each side having about a hundred and thirty thousand men, and the artillery of both aggregating a thousand guns. The battle commenced at sunrise; it closed with the darkness, and although ninety thousand men lay dead upon the field, neither combatant could claim a signal triumph. The Russians resumed their retreat to Moscow, and when Napoleon caught up with them on Sept. 14, the city was like the grave. Its three hundred thousand inhabitants had fled; incipient were burning at points best calculated to spread the flames, and in twenty-four hours the French themselves were compelled to fly from its environs to escape the conflagration. When the flames had been extinguished, the Kremlin was found habitable, and there Napoleon took up his residence to dictate terms of peace.

His victory at Moscow was too like that at Borodino—it had undone him. His men prefered graves in France, and demanded that they might be given a chance to see again the sunny slopes if only to die in the vision. On Oct. 19 the retreat began.

The Russians, frenzied, fell in small divisions upon the retreating and invalid French and cut them down like grain. Winter set in; icy mounds of corpses had to be climbed by those who were able to withstand the storms. Circles of dead surrounded the feeble bivouac fires. Birds of prey and famishing dogs followed the perishing detachments, and feasted on the dying and the dead in the sight of their comrads. When Napoleon reached Paris, December 19, Ney and thirty soldiers constituted the rear guard. From June to December a hundred and thirty thousand of the grand army had been slaughtered on the battle-fields; a hundred and thirty thousand had died of cold and starvation; and two hundred thousand had been taken prisoners.

Have You Tried It.

We refer to that most remarkable compound, Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound, for coughs, colds, blood spitting, weak lungs, croup, whooping cough, asthama, bronchitis, and all diseases of the lungs and throat. Probably no similar preparation ever before so quickly found its way into public favor as this. Its sale in our community is simply enormous. Those who have been disappointed in other so called remedies, are specially invited to try this. Be sure to get the genuine Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound. Trial size 10 cents. Regular sizes, 50 cents and one dollar.

For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup is perfectly safe. Extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

German Syrup.

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine was distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumtion, Asthama, Croupe, Severe Coughs, Pheumonia and other diseases of the throat and lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them The result has been that Druggists in every town an village in the United States are recommending it to their cutomers. Go to your Druggist, F. E. Dvenport, and ask what he knows about it. Sample bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case.

GARRETT, IND., JAN. [illegible]th, 1878.

MR. EDITOR.—Permit me through the columns of your paper, to make a brief reply to a communication that appeared in the COURIER, from one of our citizens. The correspondent seems to denounce all christian religion. He says that five hundred years of "reason, without religion," would bring about a wonderful change in mankind, and men would not be persecuted for their opinions. Now, to give an illustration of this age of reason, we will refer to the French Revolution, during the reign of Voltaire, one of the greatest infidels that ever lived. They had no religion, but lived in an age of reason. And what was the situation of that nation during that period? Did they have peace, unity, concord, and good will for their fellow man? No, but malice, discord, hatred, tumult, and wars prevailed. Churches, where once God's holy name was preached, were turned into houses of prostitution. Voltaire paraded the streets of Paris, with the worst prostitute he could find in the city, and compelled his subjects to bow down before her. This was reason without religion. Is such the kind of reason the correspondent wishes. Is not the laws of our land based upon the laws of God, and to discard the divine rights of man, you destroy the laws of our land. Hence, without religion we would be a powerless people. What would be the situation of our country in a short time, without religion? How long before we would have another reign of terror, how long before another guillotine would be in operation for the destruction of loyal citizens? who could predict the moment the breath might come that would hurl the avalanche on its errand of devastation, and, that mighty engine of crime would force its way through our land. Such would be the crowning glory of infidelity, when they could see our country the noblest the sun ever shone upon, the scene of desolation, and I presume that correspondent would welcome the day, when our churches and places of divine worship, would be converted into "temples of reason" as they had in the city of Paris in 1793, (and I have no doubt he would soon be one of the proprietors,) where, instead of congregating to worship a divine master, they would congregate to perpetrate some crime of the grossest sort.

My dear readers, such has been the actual existence of things without religion, and why should we not look for it again, with the same principles of infidelity brought to bear as there was during the French revolution. Both Voltaire and Halvetius advocated the unlimited gratification of the sexual appetites, and the latter held that it was not agreeable to policy to regard gallantry (that is unlawful intercourse with married women) as a vice, in a moral sense, and if men would call it a vice, it must be acknowledged that there are vices which are useful in certain ages and countries, in other words, that in those countries, such vices are virtues.

Rousseau, a thief, a liar, and a debauched profligate, according to his own printed confessions, also had recouse to feelings, as his standard of morality. I have only to consult myself, said he, concerning what I do. All that I feel to be wrong, is wrong. All the morality of our actions lies in the judgment we ourselves form of them, and just before the French revolution broke out, it is a known fact that the idea of moral obligations was exploded among the infidel clubs that existed in every part of France. Such is the morality taught by some of those in the last century, claimed to have received as the masters of reason. It were no difficult task to add to their precepts, many similar ones from their opponents of revelation in our own times, but as they only re-assert the atheistical and moral tenets of their predecessors with increased malignity and grossness, we will spare the reader the pains of perusing columns that cannot but shock the mind of every one who cherishes the least regard for decency or social order. Let us advert for a moment, to the effect produced by these principles on an entire people, and also on individuals. The only instance in which the avowed rejectors of revelation have passed the supreme power and government of a country, and here attempted to dispose of human happiness according to their own doctrines and wishes, is that of France during the greater part of the revolution, which it is now well known was affected by the abetters of infidelity. the greater part of the nation had become infidels, the name and profession of christianity was renounced by the legislature, and the abolition of the christian area was proclaimed, all the religions in the world were proclaimed to have been the daughters of ignorance and pride, and it was decreed to be the duty of the national convention, to assume the honorable office of disseminating atheism (which was blasphemously affirmed to be truth) over all the world. And it was asserted and received in the convention that the adversaries of religion had deserved well of this country. Correspondent with these professions and declarations were the effects actually produced. Public worship was utterly abolished. The churches were converted into "temples of reason," in which atheistical and licentious homilies were substituted for proscribed service, and an absurd and ludicrous imitation of pagan mythology was exhibited under the title of "religion of reason." In the principal churches in every town a tutelary goddess was installed with ceremony equally frivolous and profane; and the females selected to personify this new divinity, were mostly prostitutes, who received the adoration of the attendent muncipal officers, and of the multitude whom fear, or force, notion of gain, had collected together on the occasion. Contempt for religion or decency became the test to the attachment to the governments. All distinction of right and wrong were confounded. The grossest debauchery triumphed. The reign of atheism and of reason was the reign of terror. "Then proscription followed proscription, tragedy followed tragedy" in almost breathless succession, on the theatre of France. Almost the whole nation was converted into a horde of assassins. Republicanism and atheism hand in hand desolated the country, and converted it into one vast field of rapine and of blood. In one part of France the course of the river was impeded with drowned bodies of ministers of the gospel. Children were sentenced to death, for the faith and loyalty of their parents and they whose infancy had sheltered them from the soldiery, were bayoneted as they clung around the knees of their destroyer. The moral and social ties were torn asunder. For a man to accuse his father was declared to be an act worthy of a true republican, and to neglect it was declared to be a crime punished by death. Accordingly women denounced their husbands, and mothers their sons as bad citizens, and traitors. We are sorry to think we have a man in our community whose heart has grown so callous, and is so void of consience, that he would publicly declare, with the knowledge of all past human sufferings without religion, by the adoption of "reason" without "religion, man would not be persecuted for his opinions. The miseries suffered by the French nation alone, have changed all the histories of the preceding sufferings of mankind into idle tales Were the world to adopt, and be governed by the doctrines of revolutionary France, what crimes would mankind perpetrate, what agonies would they not suffer? And yet republican France is held up in the present day as an example worthy to be followed in this country. M. L.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitas, Catarrh, Asthama, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for general debility and all nervous complaints, after having thouroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. The receipt will be sent free of charge, to all who desire it, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Address with stamp naming this paper, Dr. J. C. Stone, 44 North Ninth Street, Philadeldhia Pa.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

It is said that several prominent New York bankers are ready to place their business on the basis of specie payments, gold and greenbacks being accepted as interconvertible. These parties are members of the Clearing House, and only await the general concurrence of that body to put their plan into effect.

The New York cigar-makers' strike is virtually at an end, the strikers having agreed to return to work at the best rates they can obtain, and the manufacturers agreeing that they would not inquire whether a man was a unionist or non-unionist....Five of the Reading (Pa.) railroad rioters of last July have pleaded guilty and received a sentence of six months' imprisonment each....The Finance Committee of the Massachusetts House of Representatives has reported a bill making the State debt payable in gold.

The officials of the New Jersey State Prison are charged with the most inhuman treatment of the convicts under their charge, and the Legislature is about to institute an investigation into the matter. Among other tortures inflicted are the following: First, the boot-heel gag—a very painful instrument. Second, the paddle—an instrument used to beat prisoners on the bare flesh, inflicting intense suffering. Third, the stretcher, which is equal to the rack of olden times. The man's feet are fastened to the floor, he is handcuffed, and is then stretched by a rope drawn up to the ceiling as tight as possible. From five to twenty minutes of this would make anyone weaken. Fourth, alcohol is poured on the prisoner's back and set on fire. In one case a man was burned twice in succession, so that the hair on his body crackled, and he was twice put in the stretcher. Fifth, the douche, which consists in throwing cold water from a hose upon the naked body of a prisoner. This causes the most agonizing pain, and is very apt to produce insanity.

The surplus of $80,000 of the Brandon (Vt.) National Bank has been wiped out, and its capital of $200,000 impaired 10 per cent., by the action of the late Cashier, D. C. Bascom, letting J. C. Batchelder have about $100,000, part on raised notes. Bascom has left town.

The project to build a free pipe-line from the oil regions to the seaboard has been defeated in the Pennsylvania Legislature, after a fierce contest. The defeat was brought about by the combined influence of the Standard Oil Company, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and Philadelphia interests.

THE WEST.

Laughter agrees with the Chicago public, judging from the audiences that have attended McVicker's Theatre for the past week to witness the four comedians, Dillon, Reed, McVicker and Pearson, in one caste. The play, "All the Rage," is a new production of Mr. W. D. Eaton, a young journalist, and is called a farcical comedy. Nobody can help laughing at it, as it literally bubbles with pure fun.

The annual report of the Indianapolis Board of Trade shows a falling off of the total business of the city, but, on the whole, makes a very encouraging exhibit, especially in the grain trade. The receipts and shipments of wheat are double those of 1876. The receipts of corn and flour were 25 per cent. more than in 1876.....Clement, Morton & Co., wholesale clothing merchants of Chicago, whose recent failure threw over 800 people out of employment, have effected a settlement with their creditors at 75 cents on the dollar, and will continue business.

A daring attempt to rob a train on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad was made and frustrated at Kinsley, Kan., last week. Five armed and masked men entered the station and captured A. Kincard, the night telegraph operator, who was ordered to open the safe. He refused to do so, although his life was threatened. The west-bound express train arrived by this time, and the operator, by a desperate effort, broke loose and ran to a hotel near by, arousing the inmates. A volley of pistol shots was fired into it, and, as the train stopped, Conductor J. W. Mallory was met by two of the robbers, who presented pistols to his head and ordered him into the baggage car. He stepped in and closed the door, instantly starting the train by pulling the bell-cord. Mallory and the baggage master then armed themselves with carbines carried in the car, and then stopped the train, after running about a mile from the station. They went into the back coaches with arms, but found the robbers not on the train, and that the passengers had not been disturbed.

The Chicago papers report that the retail merchants of that city are beginning to pay out gold as "change" for greenbacks; and at Denver, Col., greenbacks are held at a premium for gold.

Maj. Walsh, of the Northwest (Canadian) Mounted Police, commandant of Fort Walsh, Canada, near which Sitting Bull and other hostile Indians are now located, arrived at Helena, Mont., last week, eight days out from Fort Walsh. When Maj. Walsh left, Sitting Bull, Little Knife and fifty-five lodges were at the East End Police Post, Cypress mountains, where they intended to remain during the winter. Thus it appears that the reported return of S. B. to Uncle Sam's dominions was a false alarm....Reports from Colorado show that the Ute Indians are in a dangerous state of discontent, on account of the Indian Bureau's neglect to furnish and distribute the supplies due the tribe. Some of the more turbulent bands threaten to go north and join the Sioux in a general war next summer.

THE SOUTH.

Judge Whittaker, of the Superior Criminal Court of New Orleans, has overruled the motion for the transfer of the case of the members of the Louisiana Returning Board to the United States Circuit Court. The application and arguments of counsel were based chiefly upon the fact that there was undue prejudice against the accused, and that they could not obtain justice in a State court, the fact that in the composition of the jury negroes had been studiously excluded being strongly dwelt upon in support of this claim.

The irrepressible Myra Clark Gaines is preparing for more legal conquests. She is now in Washington engaged in hunting up titles to between 16,000 and 17,000 acres of land lying within seventy-three miles of St. Louis, which, as she claims, was granted to her father over seventy years ago by the Government Board of Land Commissioners.

The members of the late Louisiana Returning Board have been stirring up some excitement in New Orleans. They took refuge in the United States Custom House in order to escape arrest, United States Marshal Wurzburger and Deputy Collector Tomlinson assuming the responsibility of protecting them, a detachment of marines being summoned from a revenue cutter for this purpose. Sheriff Houston went to the Custom House and attempted to arrest them, and was himself arrested by the United States officers. He was taken before Judge Billings, sitting in the United States Circuit Court, but the latter decided that he had nothing to do with the matter. District Attorney Ogden telegraphed the facts to Washington, and instructions were sent to the United States officials at New Orleans not to interfere with the execution of the writs of the State courts. The Returning Board men then quietly surrendered and were held to bail in the sum of $5,000 each.

Advices by way of Galveston from Presidio, Texas, report that a party of Texans were surrounded by a band of Indians in the Copate mountains, and lost seven men killed and several wounded. The Indians were from Stanton reservation, New Mexico, and were armed with Winchester rifles. The people are all fleeing. In the extreme western part of Texas the Indians are pillaging stock ranches, which are being abandoned, and cross most of their booty into Mexico, and sell it openly for what they can get.... Three members of the Returning Board—Anderson, Cassanave, and Kenner—were brought into court in New Orleans on the 29th ult., and the trial of the first-named person was formally commenced, a motion for a change of venue having first been denied. The Attorney General said that the State had wished to try the case of Wells first, but, as he had disappeared, he agreed to proceed with the case of Anderson.

GENERAL.

At a largely-attended meeting of the Western Iron Association, held at Pittsburgh last week, it was resolved to immediately curtail the production of iron.

A United States ship will sail from New York on the 16th of February with a cargo of exhibits for the Paris Exhibition. About 400 applications for space have been granted, and these will nearly represent the number of lots exhibited.

Mr. Minnie, the colored cadet at West Point, has left. He neglected to prepare for examination, and failed, as he says, on purpose, because the white cadets were abusive in their treatment of him....Murphy, the temperance reformer, is conducting a temperance revival in Washington....George P. Gordon, the inventor of the Gordon printing press, died last week at Norfolk, Va.

The sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee of the lower house of Congress have agreed to favorably report the bill for the Texas indemnity. This is a bill granting $100,000 to the State of Texas. After the State came into the Union it owned considerable public land outside of the present limits of the State, in what are now Arizona and New Mexico. The United States purchased this for $1,000,000, and out of this transaction a claim remained due to the State of $100,000, which the sub-committee now awards to it.

J. Madison Wells, of the Louisiana Returning Board, was arrested last week at Petersburg, Va., while in the train en route to Washington, and detained as a fugitive from justice.

We are called upon to chronicle another terrible marine disaster on the North Carolina coast. The steamer Metropolis, bound from Philadelphia to Para, Brazil, was wrecked at Carratuck inlet, not far from the scene of the foundering of the United States war steamer Huron. There were 250 persons on board, only fifty of whom escaped. The vessel had encountered heavy weather for twenty-four hours, and at the time of going down a furious hurricane was blowing from the southeast. Nearly all the people lost were railroad laborers bound for Brazil.

WASHINGTON.

The Secretary of the Treasury decides that the department cannot receive for collection and deposit drafts issued by bankers and others in payment of subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan....An examination of the quarterly account of the United States Treasurer, which is the general cash account of the United States, shows the following figures of receipts and expenditures:

RECEIPTS.
Balance due United States July 1, 1869, unavailable	$28,507,625
Available	4,685,625
Money received by the Treasurer From July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1877.	14,835,289,660
Total	$14,868,482,909
EXPENDITURES.
Money paid by the United States Treasurer from July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1877, and charged out by authority of law	$14,653,017,313
Balance due United States, unavailable, June 30, 1877	29,585,805
Available at same date	185,879,789
Total expenditures	$14,868,482,909

The attorneys for Bollie, Junker & Co., and other whisky firms in Chicago involved in the ring frauds, who have been in Washington for some time pressing on the President an application for a pardon, have signally failed to accomplish their purpose. The consideration of the pardon is indefinitely postponed, to give time for the hearing of the civil cases against these and other parties, involving large sums for damages, forfeitures and taxes.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has received a dispatch from Special Agent Hector, in Florida, stating that the Grand Jury in Jacksonville found indictments in seventeen cases against alleged timber depredators in that State, involving an immense value in lumber, timber, tar, turpentine and resin....Senator Davis, of West Virginia, who is investigating the alleged discrepancies in the treasury accounts, claims to have discovered that, in 1870, the treasury officials under Gov. Boutwell made a forced balance of $200,000,000 to straighten old accounts. Senator Davis claims that this is a deficit.

The Congressional Silver and Greenback Association, organized for the purpose of securing the remonetization of silver and repeal of the Resumption act, held another meeting last week. Resolutions were adopted instructing the Finance Committee to solicit subscriptions to defray the expenses of printing and distributing documents, authorizing the Executive Committee to correspond with Senators and invite an independent organization of that body, with an Executive Committee, in conjunction with that of the House Association. The Executive Committee was also instructed to investigate and report concerning the old law which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appear before the House of Representatives in person and answer inquiries, etc. This report is to be made with a view of determining the advisability of calling the Secretary of the Treasury before the House on the silver question in the event of the Executive being arrayed against the views of the majority on silver resumption.... It is reported with positiveness, from Washington, that "information in due form has been lodged with the legal authorities of New Orleans charging Secretary Sherman and several other prominent Republicans who visited Louisiana to witness the count with attempting to influence the Returning Board and control their count, and with participating in the general work of preparing affidavits, or inducing others to do so, to establish intimidation, and with procuring false evidence. It is claimed that the understanding in New Orleans among those directing operations against the Returning Board is that Secretary Sherman and others there with him will be indicted for present trial."....It is reported from Washington that Senator Matthews has the assurance that the President will not, in the face of the expressed opinion of both branches of Congress, veto the Silver bill, but allow it to become a law without his signature....A Washington correspondent states that Secretary Sherman, in an interview, says that he recognizes the fact that the Silver bill will become a law. He believes there is a clear two-thirds for it in each branch of Congress. He saw no reason for a belief or hope that it could be defeated. Mr. Sherman, the correspondent says, affects no surprise at the course of the gold market. He expresses the belief that remonetization of silver will not affect gold or greenbacks at once. All the silver that can be coined for several months would be used for the payment of duties, and the people in general will not see much of it until some time after the passage of the bill. He said that, as the supply of silver increased, gold would entirely disappear. Mr. Sherman was of opinion that the silver people will be greatly disappointed with the immediate effects of the remonetization of silver, and that the greenback men, who are at the bottom of the silver movement, will be the only ones strengthened....The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Charles R. Coster, of New York, Pension Agent for New York city; F. Holomon, of Missouri, United States Surveyor General for Utah; Nathan C. Meeker, of Colorado, Indian Agent at the White River Agency.

The Comptroller of the Currency reports the amount of additional circulation issued during the month of January, $1,041,690; total amount issued since the passage of the act, July 14, 1875, $41,111,970. The total amount of legal-tender notes retired to date under the act of Jan. 14, 1875, is $33,328,576; amount retired the present month, $383,562, leaving the amount of legal-tender notes outstanding Feb. 1, $349,128,424. Amount of national-bank notes outstanding Feb. 1, $320,629,690, together with $1,432,120 national gold bank notes....The annual report of the Commissioner of Patents has just been submitted to Congress. The report shows that the cash received this year is $732,342.85, against $757,367.65 last year, while the cash expended is $619,152.62, against $652,642.60 last year. The number of patents issued was 1,316 against 1,702 last year....An effort is being made in Congress to discontinue the issue of the twenty-cent silver coin.

A bill has been agreed upon in the House committee extending the time of the land grant on the main line of the Northern Pacific for ten years, and on the branch from Seattle across the mountains for five years. If the terms of this extension are not complied with, the lands will revert to the Government.

POLITICAL.

In the case of Congressman Smalls (colored), of South Carolina, who has been tried and convicted of corrupt practices by a South Carolina court, the Judiciary Committee of the lower house of Congress decides that his privileges as a member of the House of Representatives do not shield him from the custody of his State under the charge of felony....The resolution introduced in the lower house of the Massachusetts Legislature condemning Senator Blaine's attack upon, and applauding Messrs. Dawes' and Hoar's defense of the Bay State, was incontinently kicked out of the upper house, every Senator voting against its adoption. In short, the Massachusetts Senate affects to ignore the existence of the Senator from Maine, and don't propose to give him any free advertising.

Maj. E. A. Burke, of Louisiana, having stated in an interview with a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune that Senator Conkling had a speech ready last winter opposing the counting of the vote of Louisiana for Hayes, the New York Senator authorizes the statement that such charge is absolutely false.

The House Committee on Elections in the lower house of Congress, by a party vote of 7 to 4, agreed that Wigginton (Democrat) was entitled to a seat from California, and that Pacheco (Republican), the sitting member was not. The following is the vote: For Wigginton, Harris, Springer, Candler, Turney, Cobb, Williams and Ellis; for Pacheco, Wait, Thornburgh, Price and Hiscock.

"One thing," telegraphs a Washington correspondent, "is now settled beyond a question—that the Senate committees are set up to reject all and every one of the President's nominations against which a ghost of an excuse can be made for rejection. The Senate Judiciary Committee to-day rejected the nomination of Reed, appointed United States Marshal for Alabama, upon the ground that the Attorney General gave no good reason for the dismissal of his predecessor, one of Spencer's men. The nomination of Northrup for District Attorney in South Carolina has been hung up until Patterson will be well enough to appear before the committee."

In the Western States the only members of the House who voted against the Matthews resolution declaring the bonds payable in silver at the option of the Government were:

Michigan	2
Missouri	1
Minnesota	1
Ohio	1
Total	5

At length Judge Clifford, of the United States Supreme Court, has consented to revise his judgment on the Presidential question and recognize Mr. Hayes. At the last "State dinner" given by the President the Judge visited the White House for the first time. Senator Blaine was also among the guests.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

Dispatches of Jan. 26 state that the Porte has accepted the preliminaries of peace proposed by Russia, which are as follows: Servia, Roumania and Montenegro to be independent—the latter to have more territory, but no seaport, as Austria objects; Bosnia and Herzegovina to have Christian Governors and reforms in their Government; Bulgaria, including a portion of the territory south of the Balkans, to have a separate Government, similar to that of Lebanon; Russia to have Batoum, Kars, Erzeroum and adjacent territory in Armenia, and part of Bessarabia; Russia to require a war indemnity, in money or territory, or otherwise. This last phrase is regarded as meaning that the Turkish fleet is to be taken in part payment. The question of the Dardanelles is left open to be settled by a European conference. The terms of peace were not communicated to the British Government until Jan. 25, although Austria and Germany had been aware of them for several days. When notice was given in Parliament of a demand for additional appropriations, orders were sent to the British Mediterranean fleet to occupy the Dardanelles and place several ironclads at Constantinople, but, on receiving information that a truce had been agreed on, those orders were countermanded.

In the British House of Commons on the 29th ult., Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, explained at length England's position with reference to the Eastern question. He confined himself almost exclusively to an elucidation of that stereotyped and well-worn phrase which has been the watchword of the British Cabinet and people since the breaking out of the war, to-wit: British interests. It appears, according to the Chancellor, that the independence of Bulgaria, and especially if that province should be governed by a Prince of Russia's choosing, would be most decidedly detrimental to British interests; that even the temporary occupation of the Turkish capital would seriously undermine some important interests which her Majesty's Government is disposed to guard jealously; that the question of the free navigation of the Dardanelles is one in which England is peculiarly interested, and also one which must not be settled by a separate agreement. Added to this list of leading interests there are, according to Sir Stafford Northcote, many incidental questions which must be passed upon by a Congress of the powers, in which England must have a commanding voice. To this end he said it would be necessary that the extra grant called for be immediately voted, in order that the Government might go into the conference with the proper backing, and be enabled to maintain any policy which she might be called upon to assume.

A Constantinople dispatch says "the Turkish Government is having difficulty to maintain order in the capital. Among the tens of thousands of refugees from Roumelia are many armed Circassians. These have already plundered Lalch, Bourgas, Charlu and Rodosto and other towns, and are now flocking into Constantinople, laden with booty."

An Adrianople dispatch of the 1st inst. says: "The Russian Grand Duke Nicholas arrived on the 26th by railway from Hermanli and took up his quarters in the Governor's palace. The Russian vanguard has occupied Boboski, Haskiot, Dematico and Kirk-Kilissa. The Czarowitch's army has crossed the Lom in force. The Turks are everywhere retreating upon the fortresses of the Quadrilateral. Ten thousand Russians are advancing on Radosta and Rushan."....An anti-war meeting in London was broken up and dispersed by a mob, which took possession of the hall, cheered the Government and sang patriotic songs.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

A dispatch from the United States Vice Consul at Shanghai asking for funds, says: "An appalling famine is raging throughout the four provinces of North China. Nine millions of people are reported destitute. Children are daily sold in the markets for food."....Dispatches from Havana report that Spain is about to sign a treaty assuming a protectorate of the republic of Santo Domingo.

Athens, the capital of the Greeks, has been the scene of violent demonstrations by the war party. Crowds of people besieged the residences of the Ministers, and were dispersed by the soldiery firing into the mob.

The Cuban Captain General Jovellar liberated forty-seven prisoners from the Havana fortress on the day of the marriage of King Alphonso....The Pope is said to be preparing an allocution against Russia on account of the persecution of Catholics in Poland, and also against King Humbert because of his assumption of the title of King of Italy.

Joseph Hillebrand, the German philosopher, is dead.

The rush of the panic-stricken people of Roumelia to Constantinople continues without abatement. Eight thousand refugees arrived at the capital in a single day, and the suffering among the dense swarms now congregated there is horrible. Small-pox and typhus are raging, and the local relief committees report that there is no possibility of finding food or shelter for the sick or the well. Urgent appeals have been telegraphed to London for relief.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.*

Friday, Jan. 25.—Senate.—A number of petitions and memorials, most of them relating to the tariff and restoration of silver to the currency, were presented and referred....The bill to remit taxes on insolvent savings banks was briefly discussed... Consideration was resumed of the resolution of Mr. Matthews, declaring the right of the Government to pay its bonds in silver. The amendment of Mr. Conkling, making the resolution a joint instead of a concurrent one, was rejected—yeas, 23; nays, 39. Mr. Edmunds then spoke in opposition to the resolution of Mr. Matthews, and favored the amendment offered by himself. The amendment was defeated—yeas, 16; nays, 44. The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. Morrill submitted on the 18th inst., to the effect that it would be detrimental to the economical interests of the Government and people to pay the bonds in silver. Rejected—yeas, 14; nays, 41. Mr. Edmunds moved to indefinitely postpone further consideration of the Matthews resolution. Rejected—yeas, 22; nays, 48. The resolution of Mr. Matthews was then agreed to by a vote of 43 yeas to 22 nays, as follows:—Yeas—Allison, Armstrong, Bailey, Beck, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Coke, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Dorsey, Eustis, Ferry, Gordon, Grover, Harrford, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Matthews, Maxey, Merrimon Morgan, Oglesby, Plumb, Ransom, Saulsbury, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, Withers—43. Nays—Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Burnside, Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Eaton, Edmunds, Hamlin, Kernan, Lamar, McPherson, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Randolph, Rollins, Sargent, Wadleigh and Windom—22.

House.—The House passed the Steamboat bill by a vote of 173 to 80....Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, introduced a resolution requesting the Postmaster General to furnish the House with such information as he may have in relation to the ocean mail steamship service of foreign countries. Adopted. ....Mr. Tipton, of Illinois, introduced a resolution directing the Committee on Postoffices to report what legislation is necessary to enforce the provisions of section 4,257 of the Revised Statutes relating to postal telegraph. Referred...Mr. Knott, of the Judiciary Committee, made a report on the subject of the arrest and imprisonment of Robert Smalls, member from South Carolina, to the effect that there was in that no breach of privilege of the House. Ordered printed....The House indulged in a long and animated debate on the bill extending the time for the withdrawal of whisky in bond until the end of the fiscal year.

Saturday, Jan. 26.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The House met for general debate only. Mr. Durham then made a speech in favor of the remonetization of silver and the repeal of the Resumption act. In the course of his speech, Mr. Durham said he would vote for the Matthews silver resolution, and for any bill which would propose a reduction of the tariff. He would also lend his aid in repealing the Bankrupt law. Mr. Bright also spoke in favor of the remonetization of silver, and called attention to the fact that he was the first person who, in 1875, had brought that question before Congress. Mr. Deering favored a return to the double standard of value. Mr. Humphrey spoke in the same strain, and denied that there was a particle of spirit of repudiation in the West. Mr. Tipton said the people were demanding the immediate passage of the Remonetization bill and the Repeal bill, and if that were not done the West would send to the Forty-sixth Congress men who would not be satisfied with the passage of those bills, but who would also repeal the National Banking law.

Monday, Jan. 28.—Senate.—A great part of the morning hour was occupied in the presentation of petitions remonstrating against a reduction of certain tariff duties and the restoration of the tax on tea and coffee, etc., all of which were referred. ....Mr. Voorhees presented the petition of 1,200 citizens of Albany, N. Y., in favor of the remonetization of silver and the repeal of the Specie-Resumption act. Referred.... Bills were introduced and referred as follows: By Mr. Plumb, providing for the disposition of public timber and timber lands of the United States; also a bill to amend the Army Appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, in regard to compensation to railroads for Government transportation.... Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to reimburse the States of Kansas, Texas, Nebraska and Colorado for expenses incurred by said States in repelling invasions and suppression of Indian hostilities. Referred.... The House bill to remove the obstructions from the Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas and Red rivers was taken up and passed after a brief discussion....At the expiration of the morning hour the Bland Silver bill was called up for consideration, and Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, spoke in opposition to the measure.

House.—A great number of bills of minor importance were introduced and referred. To prevent the consideration of Mr. Matthews' silver resolution the reading of every bill was demanded by the anti-silverites. The Matthews resolution was finally reached, however, and was passed without debate by more than a two-thirds vote—187 yeas to 79 nays....The House by more than two-thirds passed a resolution, introduced by Mr. Baker, of Indiana, declaring against the granting of any subsidies.

Tuesday, Jan. 29.—Senate.—Mr. Edmunds introduced a bill to make the 22d of February a legal holiday in the District of Columbia....Mr. Plumb introduced a bill to repeal certain acts and parts of acts relating to the taxation of deposits in savings banks....Mr. Howe, from the Committee on Library, reported favorably on the House joint resolution accepting Carpenter's painting of Lincoln and his Cabinet. After some debate the resolution was agreed to—yeas, 48; nays, 7....Mr. Wallace, of Pennsylvania, addressed the Senate in favor of the Silver bill, which was called up for consideration. Messrs. Bayard, Dawes and Whyte spoke against the measure. Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, submitted an amendment to the Silver bill so as to provide that the dollar shall consist of 420 grains standard silver, instead of 412½ grains. Ordered printed. Mr. Burnside submitted an amendment to the clause declaring that said dollar should be legal tender for all debts, public and private, so as to provide that it shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private, amounting to sums over $500. Ordered printed. Mr. Beck called up his resolution declaring it "unnecessary or inexpedient to maintain or impose taxes at this time for the purpose of providing for $37,106,045.04, asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury for a sinking fund," and spoke in favor of passing the resolution.

House.—Mr. Stephens introduced a bill to make importers use the metric system of weights and measures. Referred....Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, created considerable excitement and amusement by presenting the resolutions adopted by the Norfolk (Mass.) Unitarian Conference in favor of a single gold standard, and then asking the Speaker for his Bible, and causing to be read, from a chapter in St. John, Christ's rebuke of certain disciples and money-changers who attempted to use the Lord's temple for purposes of merchandise. Mr. Butler said that, after the rebuke by Christ, he had no answer to make the ministers who attempted to instruct him....After a somewhat amusing discussion of the subject of admission to the floor of the House, a resolution was adopted directing that the rule be rigidly enforced, and the issuing of passes be discontinued. The Speaker stated that he would immediately revoke all passes, that ex-members of Congress desiring admission to the floor should file a declaration that they are not interested in pending legislation, and that the execution of the rule would exclude employes, clerks to committees and private secretaries....Mr. Kenna, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill to recognize the Woodruff scientific expedition around the world. The bill grants for the purpose of the expedition an American register to a foreign-built vessel....After discussion the bill passed—yeas, 167; nays, 100.

Wednesday, Jan. 30.—Senate.—Mr. Voorhees submitted a resolution requesting the President, if not incompatible with public interests, to transmit to the Senate a statement as to how many acres of land in the Indian Territory have been surveyed into sections and quarter sections, for what purpose said survey has been made, and how much land remains in said Territory not surveyed; also, what amount of lands were owned by the several tribes of Indians previous to the treaties of 1866, and whether the Indian title to any such land has been extinguished since said treaties were made, and, if so, to what extent and for what consideration. Agreed to....Mr. Christiancy made a speech in opposition to the Silver bill. He claimed that the depreciation of silver was not due to its demonetization, but to other causes, and that its remonetization would not restore it to a par with gold. He proposed to amend the pending bill, by providing for the coinage of a silver dollar of 420 grains, to be a full legal tender, except where otherwise provided by law, or by contract, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month for coinage—the act to remain in force for one year.

House.—Mr. Hays introduced a bill prohibiting any further destruction of legal-tender notes, and making them a legal tender for customs duties. Referred....Mr. Davis, of North Carolina, introduced a bill repealing section 4,716 of the Revised Statutes, forbidding the payment of pensions to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion.... The House went into committee of the whole to consider the bill extending the time for the withdrawal of distilled spirits now in bond until July 1, 1878. Mr. Butler's amendment, providing that when spirits are withdrawn from bond the tax shall be collected at the rate required by law, at the time of its entry into bond, was adopted—108 against 51. Mr. Foster's substitute for the original proposition, declaring a reduction of the tax on whisky inexpedient, was adopted by a vote of 134 to 86. The House sustained the action of the committee in adopting the substitute by a vote of yeas 146, nays 112, and the title was changed accordingly.

Thursday, Jan. 31.—Senate.—It was an exceedingly dull day in the Senate. A few bills of a private character were passed, some petitions presented, after which the Silver bill was taken up. Mr. Morgan submitted an amendment to allow the free coinage of silver, by permitting any holder of bullion to deposit it in the assay office or mint in sums not less than $100 in a single deposit nor to exceed $100,000 during a calendar month by the same depositor. This bullion is to be valued at its market price for legal tenders at the date of deposit, certificates to be given to the owner, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, in not less than thirty nor more than ninety days, in legal-tender notes, or silver dollars, at the option of the Government. After one year the coinage of silver to be on the same footing in all respects with the coinage of gold. Ordered printed. Mr. Booth submitted an amendment to allow the owner of silver dollars to deposit them with the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States, and receive certificates of not less than $10 each, the certificates to be engraved as money, and to circulate in place of silver. The design is to obviate the inconveniences of silver in commercial transactions. Ordered printed. Mr. Oglesby spoke in favor of the bill, and urged immediate action....Adjourned till Monday.

House.—There was a wrangle over the West Point Appropriation bill....Mr. Harris, of Virginia, from the Committee on Elections, reported in the California case against Pacheco, the sitting member, and in favor of Wigginton, the contestant. Mr. Wait presented a minority report taking opposite grounds. Mr. Springer presented a separate report on his own account, although concurring in the resolution of the majority. The reports were ordered printed. Mr. Harris gave notice that he would call up the case next Tuesday.

Stanley.

When he arrived in America, after his splendid feat—than which none more heroic and daring has been performed during this century, except a later one by himself—he was received with a small burst of enthusiasm, which soon died out, when it was found that he could not lecture and would not be lionized. Nothing was forgiven him on account of strangeness to society, and the social cold shoulder was turned toward him by all those who could neither tell a hero when they saw him, nor hold him at his superlative value when they had him in their hands.

Stanley lived in New York for some time, his social relations limited to a few congenial men and women, who reverenced his manhood, and believed in him. Then he went away, and, at last, we heard of him engaged in organizing a force to march across Africa. When he received the dispatch which summoned him to this task, it threw him into a violent fever. He knew what the undertaking was—no one else did—and for more than three years he has been engaged in the gigantic task of managing hundreds of wild men, in the midst of thousands of wilder men, in a passage through a wilderness thousands of miles in extent. He has had to pierce forests, thread rivers, cross lakes, tread morasses, and fight wild beasts and savage men by day and by night. His one will has directed and controlled everything. The strain upon him must have been terrible—three summers and three winters long. Can anyone imagine his joy as he traced the Congo to the sea, and caught sight of the waves that connected him with his home?

We do not feel particularly interested in Mr. Stanley's discoveries. The geographers may have that part of it; but we are immensely interested in the hero, and shall be glad to see his face and take his hand once more. And, if New York shall fail to take and hold him at his value this time, she will do herself foul dishonor. This man, who has done so much to honor the American name, and so much to illustrate the higher traits and capacities of human nature, should have a befitting welcome on his arrival home. It should not be a fitful and quickly-forgotten affair; but, after such tempestuous tossings upon the sea of his great enterprise, he should find himself in smooth water. The heroes of few battle-fields have been worthier of lasting admiration and homage than he is, who will come to us from his latest achievement in African discovery. Let us give him the freedom of the city in the freedom of our homes.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for February.

A Clock She Can Understand.

"Hav ye gat airy clock to sell—somethin' noice, for a present to me sisther?" "We have all kinds of clocks," replied the jeweler; "twenty-four-hour clocks and eight-day clocks, from $1.50 to $300 in price. Here's one that will just suit you—a fine French clock, worth $15." "Divil take yer French clock! Give us wan that me sisther kin understand whin it sthrikes."—Oil City Derrick.

A Confederate Wag.

One of the amusing anecdotes Gen. Jubal Early's soldiers tell of him is that in 1864, when his military star began to wane, and Sheridan defeated him again and again in the valley, Gen. Lee sent him as reinforcements a battery of artillery, via Lynchburg. Some wag marked on one of the pieces, "Gen. Sheridan, care Jubal Early, Shenandoah valley."

There is a negro in Glasscock county, Georgia, about 50 years of age, whose face, hands, and feet, and most of his body, have turned completely white. He was once black all over—said to have been very black. When a boy a white spot appeared on his body, and since then he has been gradually turning from Ethiopian to Caucasian color. There is a similar case in one of the counties of Central Kentucky.

Historical.

But there is one novelty there I never heard any of the flat-boatmen tell of—an old negro, on the Chalmette place, who remembers all about the battle, and was an eye-witness. He isn't a day over 60 years old, but he remembers the battle all the same, and gives a somewhat more graphic account of it than is contained in current histories. Here is all I can remember of it: "Yes, sah; yes, sah; I was right heah, and seed it all. Y' see Ginral Jackson he come down along heah, and fo' o' five dem Bridishehs dey crep down dat side de fence, and one slipped froo on Ginral Jackson, and tried to cut him down de back wid a razor. Den he turn roun' and just swing his big fist, an' he knock dat Bridisheh clar froo dat fence, y' see dah! Den Packinum he crep down along by some cotton bales, an' tried to slip up on Ginral Jackson; but Ginral Jackson he seed his head over the cotton bale, and he jest went for him! Lawd, how de fiah floo from d'r scabds! I was right heah, whar I'm standin' dis minit. Well, I reckon it was 'bout free in de arternoon when day went at it, and day fit an' fit till nigh onto dark; den Ginral Jackson got in a big lick and knock Packinum in de ditch, and cut off his head with one lick, and dat ended it. I was heah, sah, and seed it all."—Cincinnati Gazette's New Orleans Letter.

Scope of the Russian Campaign.

The scale of the Russian campaign in Europe may be better understood by many Americans, according to a writer in the Boston Advertiser, by comparison of a similar area in the familiar country of the Virginia valley. Suppose Washington to represent the junction of the Jantra river with the Danube, then Manassas Gap, forty-five miles south of west, would be Plevna; thence ninety miles southwest, Staunton, in the Shenandoah valley, would be Sophia; thence southeast, 175 miles, Fortress Monroe would stand for Adrianople; from which place back to the starting point is 140 miles west of north. The Balkan range would cross this track, east and west, on the parallel of Gordonsville.

Wanted a Drink.

A 5-year-old child left its seat in the Baptist church at Grand Rapids, Mich., walked up to the pulpit and up the steps, and stood beside Dr. Graves, the pastor, who turned toward the lad, saying, "What do you want, my little man?" The child innocently replied, "A glass of water." The pastor poured out a glass of water, the child drank it and left the platform. The incident created considerable merriment among the audience, which the child in returning to his seat noticed, and, thinking the people were amused at some mistake of his, he made a bow to the pastor, and said, "Thank you, sir," and went to his seat, satisfied that he had not committed an impropriety.

A Society for Mutual Dissection.

The Temps announces the existence at Paris of a Mutual Autopsy Society, consisting of doctors, anthropologists, savants, who pledge themselves to give up their bodies to dissection by the survivors. The members meet on the death of one of them in the salon of a restaurant, and after the table is cleared a box is opened containing a series of bottles, in which the remains of the deceased, the provider of the feast, are preserved in spirits of wine. A malicious story is told of a sick member who thoughtlessly called in the services of a co-member, and, the society having been a long time without a dissection, the temptation was too strong and the patient soon expired. —London Times.

New Heating Material for Railway Carriages.

The Technologiste calls attention to a new combustible which may be advantageously used for heating railway carriages. It has for base the tan or bark of wood carbonized and mixed with a small quantity of nitrate of lead; some slaked lime or puddle is added as agglutinative material. It is easily lit, and burns slowly and continuously. If a little wood charcoal dust be added, it is consumed still more slowly. A small quantity of the mixture in a foot-warmer with limited draught is not entirely consumed at the end of sixteen hours, and develops enough heat for an ordinary compartment.

Senator Cockrell on the Remonetization of Silver.

Secretary Sherman vs. Senator Sherman.

Honesty East and West—The Frightful Results of Contraction.

Silver Remonetization—Remarks of Senator Cockrell.

[From the Senate Proceedings.]

Mr. Cockrell was in favor of the Matthews resolution. He argued that silver was still a legal tender of the United States. The customs regulations of 1874 provided that silver dollars, though no longer coined or issued, were receivable for duties and imports in unlimited sums, and subsidiary silver coin was receivable to the extent of $5. Mr. Conant, late Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter directed in 1875 to the Surveyor of Customs at St. Louis, stated that silver dollars were receivable for duties on imports to an unlimited extent. Thus the Government officials proclaimed the silver dollar as a legal tender. He argued that the bondholder knew that the dollar named in his bond meant the silver coin of 412¼ grains, or the gold coin of 25 8-10 grains. Silver dollars had been practically as much in circulation as money since 1861 as gold. Neither metal had been actually used and circulated as money in the business of the country since that time.

Mr. Cockrell then quoted extensively from statistics, showing the coinage of gold and silver, and called particular attention to the following figures: The coinage of the silver dollar in 1868 was $54,800; in 1869, $231,350; in 1870, $588,308; in 1871, $657,929; in 1872, $1,112,296, and in 1873, up to the time silver was demonetized, the coinage amounted to $977,155. Had coinage been continued that year it would have amounted to $1,571,102. These facts were not mere assertions. They showed a rapid and wonderful increase in silver coinage. The gold coinage in 1868 was $10,550; in 1869, $5,295; in 1870, $93,300; in 1871, $3,940; in 1872, $1,030; in 1873, $252,000; in 1874, $323,920, and in 1875 it fell to the enormous sum of $20.

Mr. Bayard inquired if the Senator in preparing his table had not counted each piece of silver coined as a dollar. Did not the tables show that the value of gold coined was five times as much as that of silver?

Mr. Cockrell replied that his tables were correct. He knew that assertions had been published in newspapers and made in speeches, and went forth as facts, though they were not true. The Government officials had falsified facts.

He then argued that all subsidiary silver coined prior to the act of April 1, 1853, was full legal tender for all debts, public and private. Prior to that date the half dollar, quarter dollars, 10 and 5-cent pieces were proportionately of the same value as the silver dollar of 412¼ grains. All subsidiary coin issued prior to the act of April 1, 1853, was to-day vested with unlimited legal-tender power, and the Government must receive such coin in payment of all customs dues.

Mr. Bayard said the Senator would recollect that in 1853, when six and seven-tenths grains were taken out of every half dollar, it was because they could not be kept in the country. They were swept out of this country, where they were undervalued, and went to other countries, where they were properly valued.

Mr. Cockrell said that in the Western country there were many silver halves and quarters coined prior to 1853 still in use. Many of them had been locked up for years, and were brought out since the close of the war. He argued that the bondholder had no right to question the power of Congress in regard to coining money and regulating its value. They had no right to complain, because, no matter what happened, they would still be paid in coin of the standard of value of July 14, 1870.

He then referred to the assurances of Government officers that bonds would be paid in gold, and argued that these officials had no right to modify the plain words of the law. They could not change the terms of the contract. Officers of Government were administrators of law, and not law-makers, and no one knew this better than the present Secretary of the Treasury. He then quoted from the recent report that an officer was urgently recommending Congress to give sanction to his assurance that the bonds would be paid in gold. The Secretary had dared to give unauthorized assurances to bondholders, but he had not dared to issue a single bond contrary to law. To claim now that the United States must pay its bonds in gold on account of the assurance of the Secretary of the Treasury, was scarcely less than a crime. The cry of "repudiation," "violating national honor," "impugning the faith of the Government," and so on, had been heard far and wide from the Eastern press and from bondholders, their allies and friends. Western men in favor of the remonetization of silver had been stigmatized as lunatics. He (Cockrell) was as firmly devoted to the maintenance of the national honor as any of these Pharisees, and he hurled back, with scorn and contempt, their imputations. He stood upon the floor of this Senate as one of the Senators of the great State of Missouri, and demanded for the people the enforcement of a contract. He boldly asserted that to pay the bonds in gold and silver, or in silver alone, was in perfect compliance with the plain words of the law, and with all the recognized principles of honesty and national honor. He charged these crimes of repudiation upon those who upheld the bondholders. The people whom he represented, with the bayonets of truth in their hands, would drive them into a decent observance of the plain terms of the law. The bondholders, by their false cries, were attempting to foster their high crimes and misdemeanors upon those who desired to comply in good faith with the letter and spirit of the law. The tax-payers of the country had their rights, one of which was to pay the bonds in silver, and they would never surrender that right. The people could not and would not pay gold alone. He heartily approved the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, and it was the imperative duty of Congress to-day not only to pass this resolution, but also to restore free coinage of the silver dollar by passing the Silver bill.

Sherman vs. Sherman.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The Secretary of the Treasury at this moment is the chief obstacle between the people and a return of prosperity. He is our Minister of Finance. He was the author of the Resumption act. He forced it through Congress under the gag law. He has announced his determination to enforce it, no matter how much ruin it scatters abroad. He is in a position to do it unless Congress stops him. He dictates to the President the financial policy of the administration, and it is he who persists in proclaiming to the world that the bonds are not payable as the bonds themselves say they are payable. He does all these things in the name of honesty. He advertises himself as the protector of the honor of the country. He is the apostle, by his own statement, of financial justice in the administration of our affairs. It is he that will secure the veto of one or both the great financial measures now pending in Congress, if those vetoes are secured at all. He takes it upon himself to interpret the law. A rule of interpretation is lasting. Statutes may change, laws may alter, but the law of interpretation of laws is not so fickle. Especially when the man sitting as Judge has laid down a law of interpretation should he be held fast to it. The Judge who would not abide by his own decisions, and who, when vast pecuniary interests were involved, and when he himself was suspiciously involved, would, with indecent haste, scorn his own rule of interpreting the statute would be likely to hear something about impeachment. Impeached or not, such a Judge would earn the contempt of the bar and of the community, though the transactions depending were of limited amount. What if they should reach hundreds and thousands of millions?

On the 20th of March, 1868, John Sherman, now Secretary of the Treasury, gave his rule of interpretation of the law touching the payment of the national debt. The laws have shifted since then, and the national debt has been largely funded into other forms of indebtedness, but the philosophy of translating the law has not changed. As an argumentum ad hominem it is proper to summon John Sherman against himself:

"UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, March 20, 1868.

"DEAR SIR: I was so glad to receive your letter. My personal interests are the same as yours, but, like you, I do not intend to be influenced by them. My construction of the law is the result of careful examination, and I feel quite sure an impartial court would confirm it if the case should be tried before a court. I send you my views as fully stated in a speech. Your idea that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the principal' in legal tenders is erroneous. I think the bondholder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he paid for the bonds. If the case is to be tested by law, I am right; if it's to be tested by Jay Cooke's advertisements, I am wrong. I hate repudiation or anything like it, but we ought not to be deterred from what is right for fear of undeserved epithets. If, under the law as it stands, the holders of 5-20s can only be paid in gold, the bondholder can demand only the kind of money he paid, then he is a repudiator and extortioner to demand money more valuable than he gave. Truly yours,

"JOHN SHERMAN."

As indicated in this letter, John Sherman elaborated its doctrine in a speech in the Senate. His "construction of the law was the result of careful examination," he says. He is sure that it would be sustained by an impartial court. His "construction of the law" was that the five-twenty bonds were payable in greenbacks. Why? Because it was so nominated in the bond. Because the bonds said they were payable in "lawful money." Because the bonds were bought with this money. He then scorned Jay Cooke's interpretation of the law. But Jay Cooke had then as good a right to declare what the law was as John Sherman has now, and the Government would be equally bound by either decision. John Sherman then called a bondholder a "repudiator and extortioner" for demanding more than his bond demanded. It was the holder of the bond who was then the holder of the promise by refusing to take the same kind of money he had loaned. He was not then "deterred from what was right for fear of undeserved epithets," such as "repudiator," "soft-money heretic," "cabbage-leaf advocate," etc.

Just one year later we find John Sherman framing a law—and on the 28th of last month he confessed in writing that he "partly framed" it—declaring that the bonds were payable, not in the money in which they were bought and promised to be paid, but in the "extortioners'" money, and that law which John Sherman "partly framed" was worth $800,000,000 to the men he had just called "repudiators," "extortioners," and "violaters of contracts."

In antagonizing the Silver bill Sherman even more flagrantly, if possible, violates his own "law of construction" and becomes himself a stupendous extortioner. Sherman said that the bonds should be paid in money not more valuable than that with which they were bought, even though there might be doubt as to what the bonds said themselves. In this case there is no doubt. The bonds travel up and down the face of the earth saying: "I am payable in gold or silver coin of the standard value of July 14, 1870." John Sherman, from his high place, has announced that the law and the bonds are mistaken. The law says that the bonds shall be sold for silver coin. Sherman says they shall not, and declines offers so to dispose of them.

[From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.]

Listen to the language used by Secretary Sherman in a speech delivered in the Senate Jan. 27, 1869:

Since the earliest records of humanity gold and silver have been employed as the equivalent for effecting exchanges. From Solon to our day innumerable attempts have been made to substitute something else as money, but, in spite of all, gold and silver have maintained their exclusive dominion as the money of mankind.

The gold in the shield of Achilles, the shekels that bought the field at Macphelah, the pieces of silver the price of the blood of our Savior, will be current coin when the completed history of nations now rising into greatness will be folded away among the records of time.—Congressional Globe, Part Third, Fortieth Congress, page 626.

As the boys in the army used to say: "You're mighty right." Mr. Secretary!

Honesty East and West.

[From the New York Graphic.]

We have heard a great deal about repudiation being a disease almost confined to Southern and Western mercantile life, and many severe lectures have been read to those sections about the villainy cloaked in the remonetization scheme as being latent repudiation. Let us test this theory by the facts. In Dun, Barlow & Co.'s statement the following table is given:

STATES.	No. in Business.	National Bank Circulation.	Av. Bank circulat'n for each Trader.	No. Failures.	Percentage Failures.	Amount of Liabilities.	Average Liabilities.
	1877.
Eastern	77,734	$112,673,336	$1,450	1,353	1 in 58	$26,048,007	$19,239
Middle	224,707	112,611,913	547	3,049	1 in 73	77,172,750	25,311
Southern	91,715	23,531,036	256	1,076	1 in 85	17,271,321	16,022
Western	231,867	65,194,381	281	2,756	1 in 84	56,187,064	20,387
Pacific and Territories	26,226	3,090,454	119	638	1 in 41	13,940,185	21,932
Total for United States	652,006	$317,814,110	$466	8,872	1 in 73	$190,669,936	$21,491
Canada	56,334	$22,016,668	$391	1,892	1 in 30	$25,523,903	$13,490

This table shows that the percentage of business failures in the Southern States has been lower than in any other section of the country. The Western States follow next; then the Middle, then the Eastern, and last come the Pacific slope States. It has not been attempted to be denied that many failures are fraudulent, and on the score of probability it is more likely that where one trader in fifty-eight failed there will be more dishonesty than where one in eighty-five fails. With these figures before us we see that the South and West have been grossly slandered—that taking those tables as our guide the South and West live up to their engagements better than any other portion of the country. As Dun, Barlow & Co.'s report says:

"Notwithstanding the solidity and wealth of New England, its established sources of income from its long career of success, and its enormous investments within and without its own borrowers, its perfect monetary facilities, and other great advantages, yet all this does not preserve its traders from failing in numbers far greater than in the Southern States—ruined by war, retarded by misrule, and only just recovering to a self-sustaining power of existence."

There is another point deserving of thought. Failures are more prevalent in Canada than anywhere else in the world—one trader in every thirty failed last year. On the Pacific slope one trader in every forty-one failed. Now it should not be forgotten that Canada has the single gold unit of value, and paper has never defiled California, where the bulk of the Pacific coast failures occur. Unless there has been an abnormal development of dishonesty in Canada and California, gold must have had something to do with these failures. One thing is certain, whether they are to be attributed to the single standard or not, gold has not preserved its votaries from great waves of mercantile disaster, accompanied, we may hope, with small waves of dishonesty. Let not the East hereafter say, "I am honester than thou," or pretend that gold will ward off the evils of insolvency.

The Results of Contraction.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The business distress of the country has grown, in recent years, with the contraction of the currency. As business misfortune is itself a cause of business misfortune, the disasters in business have increased even more rapidly than the contraction of the machinery with which business is done. The contraction of the currency of a country is properly measured, not merely by indicating the volume in circulation, but by naming the volume compared with the population for whose business it is the machinery. The volume of currency a country should have must be determined by still another circumstance—the sparseness or the compactness of the population. The city, with its various credit devices, bills of exchange, notes, checks, drafts, clearing-houses, needs comparatively little money per capita, while the millions of people scattered thinly over an undeveloped continent need a much larger sum per capita. In this country, after the close of the war, an element of enormous contraction was suddenly introduced to our financial system by the addition to the Union of the dollarless States that had attempted to secede. The same quantity of currency was spread over a vast territory and among millions of moneyless people where it had not been used. The annual increase of population, the currency remaining the same, is of itself an element of contraction. The results of contraction are before the people. They are the bankruptcies strewn over the last twelve years, the prostration of all industry, the suffering that accompanies hard times. We present a statement of the amount of contraction that has actually taken place. On the 30th of June, 1864, the amount of paper-money issues outstanding, consisting of greenbacks, postal currency, treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, national-bank notes, State-bank notes, seven-thirty notes, temporary deposits for which certificates were issued, was $1,125,877,034.53. In that year there were but 520 failures in the country, and the aggregate liabilities were but $8,579,000. We give below the story of the contraction for the last thirteen years:

Years.	Paper Money.	Paper Money Per Capita.
1865	$1,651,282,373	$47.42
1866	1,803,702,726	50.76
1867	1,330,414,677	36.68
1868	817,199,773	23.08
1869	750,025,989	19.86
1870	740,039,179	19.19
1871	734,244,774	18.47
1872	736,349,912	17.97
1873	738,291,749	17.48
1774	779,031,587	17.89
1875	778,176,250	17.23
1876	735,358,832	15.80
1877	695,443,394	14.60

What is the result of reducing the money of the country from $50 per capita to $14, a reduction of almost three-fourths? For the first six months of the year 1877 the number of failures in the country was 4,740, and the indebtedness involved was $99,606,171. The agony of bankruptcy has been multiplied more than twenty-fold. And the end, even the worst, is not yet.

A Voice from Indianapolis.

The annual report of the Indianapolis Board of Trade for 1877 makes this reference to the prevailing stagnation of business:

"The sanguine hopes entertained a year ago that the returning tide of prosperity had set in, and the depression in trade incident to financial agitation and threatened currency contraction which had prostrated the industries of the whole country was passed, and henceforth we would experience an active and healthy advance toward prosperity, were early dispelled, and 1877 has passed into history as the most disastrous year known in trade for a generation."

The financial question is thus touched upon:

"The Government, by discarding one-half the metallic currency and bidding for the remaining half at its high speculative price, at the same time threatening to withdraw one-half of the paper currency, has given to money a marvelously-high purchasing power, which has greatly oppressed the debtor class. Such a state of finances unsettles credit, and works great hardships to merchants, who are dependent upon a healthy state of trade to meet their obligations. Forced resumption has proved an expensive and rough road out of difficulties—a corduroy, destroying the springs of credit and trade, ending in distress and loss, endurable only in the shadow of the Government, or wrapt in its promises to pay."

The Old Silver Dollar a Legal Tender.

Secretary Sherman, in a recent letter to the Burlington Hawk-Eye, says:

The old silver dollar, if any are in existence, coined before 1873, is a legal tender for all sums, but, practically, there have been none in circulation since 1837, when the change was made in the standard from 15 of silver to 1 of gold to 16 to 1; but all silver coins are now a legal tender to the extent of $5.

This is an important concession. The goldite organs have demonstrated over and over again that the old silver dollar, alluded to by Secretary Sherman, is worth only 92 cents; but here is proof that it is held to be worth as much as the gold dollar.

To Use Plain English.

The physicians of a public institution at Jersey City have been instructed to make their reports in plain English. A director complained that they charged 23 cents a pound for castile soap, calling it "sapo hispano," but if they called it castile soap the price would be only 11 cents. Another member objected to such a familiar article as whisky being designated as "spiritus frumenti."

DELEGATE CANNON is, the Salt Lake Tribune says, at home fixing up things for the admission of Utah as the thirty-ninth State, and the paper complains bitterly that he should, being an unnaturalized alien as well as a polygamist, have been allowed to sit unchallenged in Congress for five years. His presence at Washington, the paper further declares, is extremely injurious to the best interests of the Territory, since he opposes free schools and does nothing to aid the oppressed and struggling mining interest.

THERE are 157 members in the Mississippi Legislature. In the Senate are two Republicans, one colored. In the House are one white Republican, two independent colored Republicans, two fusion colored Republicans, and three colored Democrats. A colored Democrat was elected Doorkeeper of the House.

EVERY member (120) in the lower house of the Mississippi Legislature voted in favor of Congress remonetizing silver.

DEATH IN LIFE.

An Extraordinary Case.

A remarkable case of death in life is reported, in a late number of Pfluger's Archiv, by Dr. Strumpell. It came under the notice of the writer at a medical clinic at Leipsic, and the sufferer was a youth of 16. The skin of the patient was utterly dead to every sensation; even a burning taper held to it induced no consciousness. The mucous membrane of the body, as far as could be ascertained, was alike insensible to touch or feeling. When his eyes were closed the patient could be carried about and have his limbs placed in the most uncomfortable positions without the slightest consciousness of the fact. Even the feeling of muscular exhaustion was lost. Gradually the sense of taste and smell departed with the rest, and amaurosis of the left eye and deafness of the right ear supervened.

In short (says Dr. Strumpell) here was an individual whose only connection with the outer world was limited to two doors of sense—to his one (right) eye and his one (left) ear. Moreover, both these remaining doors could at any time be easily closed, and in this way it was possible to investigate the consequences of completely isolating the brain from all external stimulation through the senses. I have frequently made the following experiment, and often showed it to others: If the patient's seeing eye was bandaged and his hearing ear was stopped, after a few (usually from two to three) minutes the expression of surprise and the uneasy movements which at first showed themselves ceased, the respiration became quiet and regular; in fact, the patient was sound asleep. Here, therefore, the possibility of artificially inducing sleep at any time in a person, simply by withholding from the brain all stimulation by means of the senses, was realized.

The awakening of the patient was as interesting as the sending him to sleep. He could be awakened by an auditory stimulation—as, for example, by calling into his hearing ear; or by visual stimulation—by allowing the stimulus of light to fall upon his seeing eye; but he could not be woke by any pushing or shaking. If he was left to himself, he did eventually wake up of his own accord in the course of the day, after the sleep had lasted many hours, the awakening being due, it might be, to intrinsic stimuli started in the brain, or it might be to slight external unavoidable stimuli acting through his still-functional sense of organs, and making themselves felt in consequence of the sensitiveness of the brain being increased during the repose of the sleep.

He Was Strictly Honest.

A citizen of John R. street not only keeps a score or more of hens, but the family take pride in them, and the slightest noise in the back yard at midnight arouses every inmate of the house. A morning or two since a weary-looking old chap called at the side-door with a dead hen in his hand, and when the servant girl had summoned the lady of the house he said:

"Madam, as I was walking down the alley just now a boy jumped over your fence with this dead hen in his hand. I am poor and hungry, but I am honest, madam. This hen belongs to you. She will make you a beautiful dinner. I ask for no reward, madam, though the smell of coffee almost makes me crazy with delight."

"Those bad boys—they ought to be shut up!" exclaimed the indignant lady.

"So they had, madam. It is a sin to murder a young and healthy hen in this sudden manner. I could have taken the body and sold it, but I would not do so base a thing. No, madam; I am as hungry as a wolf, but I am honest. There is your hen, lady, and though I need food I will not—"

He laid the hen beside the door and was going away when she asked him to come in and get breakfast. He accepted the invitation, cleared the table, and had been gone about five minutes when the girl called to her mistress:

"Why, this hen is frozen as solid as a rock, and only about half of it is here!"

The lady investigated, saw that it was a "corpse" which had been kicking around for days, and as she rushed for the front gate there was a bright red spot on each cheek, but the man was out of sight.—Free Press.

The Crime of the Geshoffs.

It was an American who wrote, a year ago, those thrilling accounts of the massacres in Bulgaria, which, when published in the London Daily News, caused a revulsion of public sentiment in England, and a temporary reversal of the Government's pro-Turkish policy; and it was through the zeal and energy of another American, the Consul General at Constantinople, that the evidence was gathered together. It now appears that the main offense for which the Geshoffs have been imprisoned in Turkey was their readiness in giving information to Mr. MacGahan and Mr. Schuyler. There were four brothers, the youngest of whom was in business in Manchester, England, while the others lived in Turkey. Two sons of one of these brothers were the first arrested, and were kept in prison for three months without any examination or charge being brought against them. One of them had been appointed United States Consul at Philippopolis. After the sons had been in prison three months, the three fathers, aged 75, 70 and 60, with their wives, children and grandchildren, were sent to Constantinople. The American Legation has done its best for the unfortunate family, and insisted that they should not be banished to Aleppo, as was at first proposed, and the Geshoffs have been so far released that they have been allowed to go to live in Kadiquy, a suburb of Scutari. They are not to leave this village, and an officer of Government is to stay in the house to keep watch over them.

Another Version of Custer's Last Battle.

George B. Herendeen, a scout with Custer at the battle of the Little Big Horn, writes a letter to the New York Herald giving his version of the battle. He says Custer and all the officers thought the Indians were running, and that when Custer ordered Reno to take the advance he said, "Take the scouts and lead out, and I'll be with you." He declares that the force of Indians which caused the retreat of Reno was not more than 200 strong, and he believes that if Reno had pressed forward at that time Custer would not have been so roughly handled, as the Indians were contemplating retreat. He censures Reno for his precipitate retreat, and gives Benteen the credit for making the good fight on the hill. The aim of the letter is to vindicate Custer from any charge of rashness, and to throw the responsibility for the disaster on Reno, but the facts presented leave the question as it was before, the new matter in the letter being principally made up of surmise and opinion.

Cured by Dog-Liver Oil.

A jolly old German, while suffering from a pulmonary attack, sent for a physician. In a short time the doctor called on him, prescribed two bottles of cod-liver oil, received his fee of $6, and was told by the German, who disliked the size of his bill, that he need not come again. The German, who had followed the doctor's prescription very well, supposed that he could get the oil and treat himself. The doctor saw no more of the patient for some time, but one day, riding past the residence of the German, he was pleased to see him out in the garden digging lustily. The case seemed such a proof of the virtue of cod-liver oil that he stopped to make more particular inquiries about it.

"You seem to be getting very well," said he, addressing the German.

"Yaw, I ish well," responded the formerly sick man.

"You took as much oil as I told you?" queried the doctor.

"O, yah, I have used many as four gallons of de dog-liver oil!"

"The what?" said the astonished doctor.

"De dog liver dat you say I shall take. I have killed most every fat little dog I could catch, and de liver have cured me. It is a great medicine, dat dog-liver oil!"

The doctor had nothing to say, but rode quickly away.—Investigator.

Hide-Bound Trees.

The practice of slitting the bark of fruit trees perpendicularly has its friends and enemies. We are of the latter. It deals with the effect instead of the cause. The cambium layer is that from which a zone of growth (in exogenous plants) is annually added both to the sapwood and the inner bark. The outer bark is finally exfoliated or rent in fissures or scaled by the action of the weather. Trees that are starved increase in growth slowly, and the outer bark becomes so indurated as to resist, to a certain extent, their growth by retarding the upward passage of the crude sap from the root to the leaves, and of the elaborated sap from the leaves downward. But we think it may be questioned whether it is not well that its growth should be retarded. Surely, if it is true that a tree becomes "hide-bound" because it is starved, increasing its size is not going to remedy the evil, since we do but furnish more mouths, so to speak, to be fed by the same amount of food.

A Humane Princess.

Victor du Bochet, who recently died in Paris, was once delegated by the French Government to settle with the Prussian Government the unity of gauge of the terminal lines of railways of the respective countries. He used to tell that one day he dined with Princess Augusta of Prussia (now Empress of Germany). She asked, "Do you think railways will facilitate war?" "Assuredly, your Royal Highness." "Then I should be almost tempted to deplore their invention. Everything which makes war easier fills me with horror. I have always deplored the invention of powder; as nobody can prevent men from fighting, everybody should at least throw in their way as many obstacles as possible. I never worship at the altar of the god of battles."

The South African Diamond Fields.

The diamonds of South Africa are found over many hundred square miles of territory. They are mostly imbedded in terrugnous gravel, and are found at depths varying from two to twenty feet below the surface, the usual depth being from two to six feet. In working the mines a claim or piece of ground thirty feet square is occupied by two diggers, assisted by their black servants. They remove the loose blocks of stone, take up the gravel, sift it thoroughly, either in a dry state or with abundance of water, in a sieve rocked by a cradle. When the pebbles have thus been separated from the sand, they are cleaned and placed upon the sorting table, to be carefully examined for the diamonds that may be among them.

Toys.

The tables are turned. Not many years ago a large portion of the toys used by the children of America came from Europe. But now not only are the many inventions which have originated in our country sought by foreigners, but toys formerly made abroad are manufactured more cheaply here, and the old world buys largely from the new. Last year the export trade in toys was over $1,000,000. American steam toys and mechanical toys have rapidly multiplied within a few years, and are exported in large quantities; so also tin and wooden toys, which much excel European products in style, finish, and cheapness.

Air-Tight Floors.

Air-tight flooring is a most important factor in the construction of practically fire-proof buildings. An English brewer made the floor of his malt-house of three-inch planks grooved together. A fire broke out in the house. The roof over the floor fell in, and the fire raged twenty-four hours above the floor without burning through it, because the substantial, well-grooved planks prevented a supply of air from below. An easy test of the soundness of the explanation may be made by anyone. Fasten a piece of board on the ground and build a fire on it. The time taken to burn the board will surprise most people.

AT the present time there are confined in the ten State prisons and penitentiaries of the State of New York no fewer than 8,000 convicts, as follows: In Sing Sing, 1,600; Auburn, 1,420; Clinton, 550; Albany penitentiary, 1,150; Blackwell's island, 1,000; King's county, 1,000; Syracuse, 300; Rochester, 270; Buffalo, 550. In the Elmira State Reformatory Prison are 100 prisoners, 90 of whom were transferred from Sing Sing.

Broadway & Twentieth St.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 7 1878

Meeting of the Democratic Central Committe.

Saturday, February 9th, 1878.

For the purpose of appointing delegates to the Democratic State Convention on February 20th, and attend to other important business. A full attendance is desired, and all others interested are cordially invited to attend. The following gentlemen compose the committee: L. L. Irons, W. S. Dancer, T. S. Murray, B. F. Blair, D. B. Bordner, Edgar Freeman, D. Y. Husselman, C. B. Kagey, G. W. Row, R. J. Sawvell, B. F. Cornelius and B. D. Thomas.

J. R. LANNING, Chairman.

The Columbia City Post says: "The Democrats rather enjoy the efforts of the radical leaders in this place in waging a guerrilla warefare upon their ranks. Just now the men who endorsed the great fraud of 1876, passed the resumption act, demonetized silver, created the National bank monopoly, passed the 10 per cet. interest law, and generally legislated as a party against the masses, don't have the confidence of the people very much.

The Democratic delegation from this county will undoubtedly favor David S. Gooding, in his aspirations to fill a State office. In a speech in the DeKalb county Court House, in 1860, Gooding said the best way to treat the democracy was to "unscrew the top of hell and shovel about half the party into that hot place." As an evidence of successful conciliation, it would be a grand sight to see DeKalb voting solid for Gooding.—Waterloo Press.

That was when Morton, Logan and others belonged to the party.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says: "The Chicago Times concedes the adoption of the silver bill, and says that its effect will disappoint its friends, because silver will speedily be quoted at about the same premium above greenbacks as gold, and they will thus be unable to swindle their creditors out of 10 per cent of their claims. This inadvertent confession from the Times speaks volumes. If silver will be at the same premium above greenbacks as gold, will not gold and silver be of the same value? And if that is the case what will become of the talk about a 92-cent dollar? The Times' argument is like a two edged sword; it cuts on both sides.

J. Madison Wells, of the Louisiana Returning Board, who was wanted a few days ago in New Orleans on a charge of forgery, has suddenly appeared in Washington, and is appealing to Joe Bradley to save him from the terrible retribution his many offenses are bringing down upon him. He appealed to the right man, but whether Bradley can do as much for him as he did in the electoral count remains to be seen. The remainder of the Returning Board are now on trial, with some show of speedy justice being meted out to them.

Since the above was in type it is reported that Wells has been captured and is now in prison in New Orleans, to await a trial.

Indiana Democrats have rewarded William E. Niblack with a seat on the Supreme Bench, and Daniel W. Voorhees with a seat in the United States Senate. Both are noted "salary grabbers." Feeling that these patriots have not all been rewarded, they now propose to elect Gen. Mahlon D. Manson, Auditor of State. It will soon be essential that a man has taken the salary swag, in order to be eligible to office at the hands of Indiana democrats.

The above is from last week's Press. The Press is periodically consistent as was clearly indicated last week. In the above it denounces Indiana Salary Grabbers, and then in the same paper surrenders three-fourths of its space to the demagoguery of James A. Garfield, who is not only a salary grabber, but a party to the Credit Mobilier affair, which for foul corruption has not been equalled in American history. This is a specimen of political manliness for which Baxter has long been noted. Salary Grabbers are detestable when Democrats—when Republicans they are hugged to the manly form of toadying Charley.

The State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention meets on the 20th of this month. The holding of this convention is not a mere matter of ceremony. A very great responsibility is to be discharged. Selections for the various State offices are to be made, and a platform is to be adopted. As to the first, there is splendid material from which to select.—Ability and honesty should rise above all other considerations. All things being equal, the different portions of the State should be fairly represented on the ticket. There will not be so much difficulty about the platform. The democracy committed itself to the interests of the people, and the great speech of Senator Voorhees has clearly expressed the popular will, so that the leading features of the instrument are already known. We believe that provision should be made for redist ricting the State, so that the people may be fairly represented. A demand for a reduction upon the present rate of interest should be made to that in force before the war. With general harmony a common sense platform, and the selection of good men, there will be no fear as to a favorable result.

BUSY BROADWAY, FASHIONS, THE WEATHER, &c.

NEW YORK, January 28th, 1878.

ARTERIAL BROADWAY.

Broadway is the great business artery of the Continent, ever thundering with sounds like the avalanche of Niagara, with the great human tide rushing down town in the morning and back again at night. Place a barrier across Broadway for ten minutes, and a crowd of thousands of people and hundreds of vehicles will press angrily and tumultuously against it on either side, and the clubs of hundreds of policemen will be needed to preserve order, and extricate people and wagons from the jam. We ascend Trinity Steeple and gaze upon the moving mass below, and as you ascend higher and higher, the streets present the appearance of an alley filled with dancing dolls, dogs and toy-wagons. The huge old Trinity bells begin to chime the quarter of twelve, and we hasten down a few steps to keep from being deafened by the "ringing in your ears." We pause, however, at a second story window, and here see sights "too numerous to mention." At our left is the church-yard, the city of the dead, with its venerable old tomb stones, stately elms and now empty flower stands. This spot, sacred for the dead, is most thickly peopled of any in the land, and the ground is worth more by the square inch than any other real estate in America. There stands the soldiers' monument, which the patriotic vestry of Trinity church, in a moment of inspiration, voted to erect to the memory of our brave soldiers, to keep the corporation from running Pine street opposite, through the church-yard. At any hour of the day may be seen people nosing about among the tomb-stones, some for curiosity perhaps, while others have a sacred and personal interest. This topic is terrible grave, therefore we will put our devoted knowledge box out of the window and see what? Ah! there is the Western Union building up there, with its mighty French roof and tower. As we look, the bell of Trinity begins to strike the hour of twelve, and instantaneously a hundred watches can be seen in the hands of people, who are all gazing at the ball of the pole on the Western Union building. Every man grabs his watch and compares notes, five, six, seven, eight. At the eighth stroke the ball is seen to fall, and shows that the people in the observatory at Washington, keep time with wonderful accuracy, and send the electric spark that drops the ball at precisely the right moment every day. The pedlers on Broadway are a study.—There is an enterprising youth of the Israelite persuasion who would make a fortune in the desert of Sahara, or if cast on a barren island, would manage to trade jack-knives with a mud turtle before night, and we watch the little chaps with interest. To attract a crowd he will indulge in the most singular antics, strike an attitude and gaze up at a building, or carefully spread his red bandana on the walk or tie it over his hat. After he has drawn a crowd, he takes from his pocket a number of envelopes containing cheap jewelry, which he sells for ten cents each. The emigrants are seen streaming up Broadway every day. Where do they all go to? A crowd of Italians passed up the street, and the women were peasants, who still wore the white linen sleeves, blue pockets, and square pieces of cloth on their heads, and such was the astonishment of an old Irish woman, at their singular appearance, that she cried out with uplifted hands, "Great God, look o' that!" Yet might we not all exclaim at some of our modern styles—We take a stage here and ride up three or four miles, through this medly of vehicles, twisting and driving at all angles. While you are congratulating yourself that the noisy ride is almost ended, you come to a sudden halt, and looking through the front glass, see the horses both lying flat upon their sides—they struggle vigorously to regain their feet, but fail—so the process of unbuckling has to be gone through with, before you are ready to proceed. So you finish the journey by a walk through the fashionable part of "up town." You would think every lady in the city had chosen this day of all others to go shopping and promenading. You try to notice the styles, but such a variety of costumes meet the eye, you are confused and know not where to begin, but are reminded of the old advice "better begin at the foot of the ladder and go up than at the top and fall." So we commence with the train, which is of all lengths, from six to thirty-six inches, but carried in the hand while on the street—all look slender as possible—"tilters" being among the things of the past. In dress goods "French Novelty" is most worn—in all shades and designs, costing from a shilling (imitation) to ten dollars per yard. And as for wraps, everything from short sacques of the suite material to long circulars, and cloaks are in style. And bonnets! I despair of ever reaching the top—so high in front, so flat in the back. I am reminded of the sky-scrapers our grand mothers used to wear.

WEATHER.

'Tis strange I had not made a note of it before, yet 'tis calm compared with yesterday's zyphers. Yesterday New Yorkers were divided into two classes. Those who lost their hats and those who did not. The wind reaches its height between four and five o'clock when it blew steadily at the rate of sixty miles an hour. Down town men in groupes, from fellow feeling, were racing after sailing hats. Up town it was the same, but here it was womens' hats that filled the air rather than those of men. The bonnet of the period carries too much sail for a January gale, and Fifth Avenue near Fourteenth-st. was best filled with a throng that watched a young Miss Flora McFlimsey chase her head gear.

—Recorder Boland was in town over Sunday.

—The wheat and stock markets are favorable.

—There is some talk of a new hardware store locating here.

—Mrs. A. J. Little and son, Conger, of Auburn, was in town Sunday.

—Ed. Orr is paying his daughter, Mrs T. B. Hall, of Pioneer, O., a visit.

—Mrs. R. Elson, of Auburn, is visiting with her brother, Mr. P. Alling, Mrs. Alling is yet quite ill.

—Our hardworking and industrious station agent, Lafe Miller, hooked up one of his fast steeds last Sabbath and visited the capitol of the county—Auburn, loveliest village of the plain."

—A fire broke out in the shoe shop which might have done considerable damage but for the assistance of some of our citizens. The sewing machine received about all the damage that occurred.

—The protracted effort at the M. E. church is meeting with very good success. Several have gave up their wicked life and will hereafter lead a better one. The older members of the church are getting pretty loud, and the "amens" ring loudly within the walls of the structure.

—The organ for the Red Ribbon Club has arrived. It was put together and shipped here at the enormous cost of $65. We think this a very foolish move on the part of the committee A cheap organ, like all cheap things, are always out of repair, and in the course of a few months it will reach the sum which would now procure a good substantial one. We think, and so do a large number of others here, that the organ M. F. Long, Esq., of your city, had here was as cheap as could be desired, taking into consideration the style, workmanship tone and convenience of the instrument. Our people are too selfish, bigoted and bossy. Each one must have his way, and his particular friend to sell them the organ. We think they have handled and discussed this organ question long enough to come to some conclusion.

—MR. EDITOR—Please insert the following which I dedicate to the editor of the Butler Record.

YOURS, SANKEY.

An Irish matron enters a lawyer's office: "Is this the place, sur, where people get divorces?"

"Yes, occasionally we engage in that kind of business. What can we do for you, madam?"

"Faith, sur, I'd loike to get a divorce from me husband Patrick."

"What's the matter with Patrick, madame?"

"Sure and Patrick gets drunk, sur."

"That's bad. But I hardly think that alone will be a sufficient cause. Have you no other complaint?"

"Indeed I have sur, Pathrick bates me."

"Yes, yes, I see. That adds cruelty to drunkenness. But, madam, you do not seem to suffer much in your appearance from Patrick's cruelty. I think you must find a stronger reason before the court will grant you a divorce."

"Well, sur, besides all that, I fear, sur, that Pathrick isn't thrue to me."

"Ah! now, madam, you begin to talk business. What reason have you for thinking that Patrick is unfaithful to you?"

"Well, sur, I may say that it's meself that has a strong suspicion that Pathrick is not the father of me last choild."

—Rev. Mr. Houliser, of Ohio, is assisting Mr. Meese, of Auburn, in conducting the services at the Chapel, and we are glad to say they have met with some success.

—We have just received intelligence of the death of Cortney J. Stoner, formerly of Auburn, at Girard, Kansas, where he removed with his folks last fall. He was a step son of J. R. Moody His death is sincerely regreted by all who knew him. He was 19 years old.

—The farmers are taking advantage of the good sleighing, and are busily engaged in hauling their railroad wood. Anybody can safely "bet their boots," that our two stations beat every other place along the line south of Auburn.

—Jake Miller has got the place to boss the fast young men who come to church and begin their didoes and mischief. He seems to crawl around on all fours on the look-out for some signs of laughing phiz. He caught Charles Baber raising cane Monday night, and gave him a talking to, with a great deal of fist shaking, and everybody from an old man down to a youngster know his topknot from others, and are on the lookout for it.

TOWRIAUX.

—We would like to call the attention of the refined editor of the Butler Record, to an article in the Garrett Herald, entitled "An old Story," copied from the Kendallville Standard, and lately appearing in the Bryan Argus. The editor's of the above papers need lecturing, if we deserved it a few weeks ago, because this is worse than anything that has appeared in the COURIER. A high-toned lecture is now in order.

—The Goshen Democrat gives the particulars of the death of the first settler of Elkhart county, Mr. Wm. Simpson He died Jan. 29th, aged 75 years. He was born in Sullivan county, Tenn., and settled near Goshen, in September, 1828, several years before DeKalb was invaded by the white man.

—A man at Fort Wayne wrote to the officials for "a chance to run on the Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroad." President Loomis replied by saying that he might "run on the road" as much as he liked, if he would only keep out of the way of trains.

Diamonds.

Why is a an infant like a diamond? Now, dear wife, answer and I will buy you a plated castor at Ward's. Wife, with a sigh—Because it is a dear little thing. Now, dear husband, it is rather a damper to one's elation of feeling at a public ovation, to think that though the people rush and crowd to get a look at our dear husbands, they would be just as ready to rush and crowd to see him "if he was going to be hanged." Set of French China dinner ware for $65.00; 106 pieces Tea and Dinner $10. We warrant every bit of our solid silver ware and silver plated ware to be of the double and tripple plate, and all stamped with the named of Meriden Britanna Co., the best and largest plating company in the world. Tea set, $25 to 100. water set, $18 to 60; castors, $4 to 50. Card and Cake stands, pickle castors, knives, spoons, ladles, sugar shells, fruit knives, the best stock of plated at Ward's Cheap Crockery Store, No. 9 Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

—The Baptist church was crowded last Friday evening to hear the temperance addresses by Rev. Dr. Stone and Mason Long, of Fort Wayne. Both gentlemen spoke their pieces very nicely, and the audience gave their undivided attention. Mr. Long being well acquainted with "the boys" in this place, it was arranged to have a social after the services, to give him an opportunity to shake with them all. A large number remained and many kind words and warm congratulations were indugled in.

—The Columbia City Post, says the lecture committee of that place have persuaded our young friend, James A. Cambell Esq., to deliver his great lecture on the subject: "Are the wicked punished beyond the grave," on Tuesday evening, February 5th, at the High School building. Mr. Cambbell has devoted much time and thought upon the subject as an orator he has no equal in the State. We would like to hear our friend "Jim" on this subject, and no doubt many of our citizens feel the same way, so we suggest that he come up and deliver it here.

—Tom Mays, of the Auburn COURIER, is in Washington this winter, but he has left some one in charge of his paper who is one of the best "locals" in the northern part of the State.—Warsaw Indianian.

The above is from Gen. Williams, whose experience of over twenty years in journalism, entitles him to respectful consideration. The editor of the Butler Record who has an extended experience, of perhaps twenty weeks, says that some of our items are not fit to be read by respectable persons. Twenty years against twenty weeks! "You pays your money and you takes your choice."

—Our excellent friend, Mr. H. T. Randall, living a short distance from Auburn, on the Butler road, contemplates moving to Kansas. In fact he has made complete arrangments to go there in a few days. Last Thursday he and his amiable wife were agreeably surprised to find about sixty of their neighbors and friends swooping down upon them from all directions. They were pleasantly entertained by Hi. in his usually genial manner, and a grand dinner was enjoyed by all. As a mark of esteem in which they were held by those present a handsome quilt, gotten up by, and the handiwork of the thrifty ladies of that neighborhood, was presented to Mrs. Randall. We regret to loose Hi. but if for the best we say, God speed.

—There is a new dodge on hand with which sharpers are trying to swindle our farmers. The Kendallville Standard gives a case of a man who called upon a resident of Jefferson township, in Noble county, and got his dinner and horse fed, for which he paid 50 cents, and upon the pretense that he had to take a receipt for all his expenses, to send to the company he was at work for, induced Mr. Shook to sign his name in a book for that purpose. A few days afterwards another sharper came along with a note against Mr. Shook, for $125, his name being forged to it, his signature in imitation of the name signed in the book. Of course the person now holding the note is an "innocent purchaser," and if he can scare anything out of Mr. Shook, the swag will be divided between the two thieves.

Our Lumber Trade

During the past few days a large amount of lumber has gone out in many directions from the popular lumber yard of F. N. Wright & Co., now under the superintendency of our enterprising fellow townsman, Mr. Lewis. The above company having purchased the lumber stock of W. B. Stone & Co., will consolidate the two yards, locating at the Saginaw Depot. There is no attempt at monopoly in this trade. Two yards can hardly pay where there is but patronage sufficient to support one, and this one can now sell lumber at less prices and make more money than heretofore. Hence this business change will benefit the purchasing class and give them a greater advantage than under the old arrangement. Mr. Lewis is a prompt, active business man, clever, genial and enterprising, and we expect to see a largely increased trade, though there may be an advance in prices owing to the discouraging reports from the pine regions, the fall of snow being entirely inadequate to get the usual number of logs in position for the mills.

Garrett Items.

—Business on the B. & O. is very lively at this place. There never was a better run of freight than there is at present. The boys are all making good time, which makes them appear cheerful.

—There has been a protracted meeting going on, on Cowan-st for a few weeks, which has been very attractive, and also very successful, so much so that when they had an intermission the last two evenings of last week for the purpose of recruiting both physically and spiritually, some of the amateur converts got up a sleigh load last Friday eve., went over to the moral and virtuous burg of Avilla, and spent the eve. by indulging in a few fantastic maneuvers to the sweet accompaniment of the viol. It is said that it was quite visible from their graceful appearance, that they had been well drilled by a skilled professor It would be advisable for a certain clerical gentleman to look around a little more carefully, before kissing some of the young ladise when accompanying them them home. Had he looked in the right direction the other eve, he could have seen the allseeing eye. It is naughty but it is mighty nice.

—The correspondence of this place which has been going on between M. L. and C. O. D. in the COURIER, has created quite an excitement, so much so, that the regular programme on Cowan street was suspended last Sunday evening, and the subject taken up, and handled with ability and skill, of what to do with C. O. D. The blacksmith, engineer and lawyer were all present, and some able and touching remarks were made upon this important subject. It is fully known who C. O. D. is, and many wise plans have been laid to bring him forward to repentance. It is reported that the the theory of prayer was unanimously adopted, and "it is confidentially expected that if there will be no dancing at Avilla, or kissing" at Garrett this week, that C. O. D. will be happily perched next Sunday with the blacksmith, engineer and lawyer, then if M. L. can be brought in all the smart "Alecks" of the town will be together.

Butler Township.

—Lots of railroad wood going on the road since the snow fell.

—Mr. Henry Kuhns and wife, living one mile north of Cedar Creek, are visiting their old home in Pennsylvania. We wish them a pleasant visit and a safe and happy journey.

—The house of Ira Andrews, of the Center, was destroyed by fire one day last week. The family were not at home when the fire broke out, but some of the neighbors arrived in time to save most of the household goods.

—Cedar Creek is having a first-class country literary society this winter. A large number of citizens in the surrounding vicinity, both old and young, are taking an active part, thereby making it a grand success. Names enrolled 62. Society meets Thursday evening.

—Ex-Sheriff Meese, of your place, is still continuing his series of meetings at Cedar Creek Chapel. He has been favored with a large and attentive audience, but I fear it is a poor place to accomplish much in a revival effort. He has now secured the assistance of Rev. Hosier, of Garrett, who is also an elegant speaker.

—There has been several spelling schools at the different school houses through these parts within the last few weeks. They all pass off very quietly and nicely, with the exception of some little unfairness in spelling down. If teachers wish to make their spellings interesting and profitable, they should spell fair, not use "picked words," give their scholars several trials and others only one, or claim a person misspells a word when he does not. This, to say the least of it, is unfair, dishonest and unwise, as it teaches pupils to cheat and become dishonest, and besides kills all interest in spelling meetings. Spell fairly, even if you do not happen to stand up longest, for there is more honor in getting spelled down by fair means, than coming out ahead by unfair means. If we could have more of those old-fashioned spellings, whose object was improvement, and not like those of to-day, whose object is merely a place of amusement, not for spelling, it would be a blessing to our scholars, and that long-neglected branch would be again revived and our scholars of to-day could spell as they did in times gone by. If your school is not advanced, drill them on lessons preparatory to the spelling. This is not really giving all an equal chance, but after all there is a benefit derived from it, as it induces scholars to pay more attention to their spelling.

I do not write this with the desire of abusing or hurting any one's feeling, but I write it with hope that teachers will consider this matter, and try to make their spellings more profitable.
READER OF COURIER.

—MR. EDITOR—I have been a reader of Weamer's paper for some weeks, but for the life of me I cannot tell on which side of the Finance queston he is from the tone of his paper. Some weeks he is for remonetization, and then again he isn't. Perhaps you can tell me where to put him.

—Remember the meeting of the Democratic Central Committee next Saturday. We hope all will be in attendance.

—The engine on train No. 2, between Auburn and Butler, burst one of her flues Tuesday, and was delayed several hours.

—The Goshen folks pay Beecher $500 to lecture there on the 7th. Why people will submit to such extortion is more than we can understand.

—There is a probability that Mr. Bradley, now at the Saginaw depot, will go to the Junction in the place of Mr. Richards, who finds the work too laborious.

EXAMINATION OF TEACHERS.—Examinations will be held in Auburn on the first Saturday, and in Waterloo on the last Saturday in each month, beginning March 4, 1876. Examination begin at 10 o'clock A. M.

—Mr. Yesbera is disposing of a large number of sewing machines, of the American pattern, having made several sales already this week. His prices are low and the machines first-class.

—Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Sherman, a daughter, on Monday, Jan. 21st, 1878. Also, on Saturday morning last, to Mr. and Mrs. McLauglin, a daughter. Garrett is rapidly increasing in population for several months past—and still there is more to follow.—Garrett Herald.

—What is home without a baby? Many children have coughs and colds just now, and should have the greatest care, and a bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. Price 25 cents a bottle. Sold in every drug store.

—Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup takes the lead of all medicines for coughs, colds, asthma, sore throat and pulmonary complaints generally. Call on your druggist and try a bottle of it. Price 25 cents. Sold in every drug store.

—While W. L. Penfield, Esq., was paying his sister a visit, near Indianapolis, last week, her clothing accidentally caught fire, and in an effort by him to extinguish the flames, his hands were badly burned.

—Dr. F. Snyder, of Corunna, gave us a call Tuesday. The Doctor is about the best practising physician in the north-west part of the county. He is a genial, clever gentleman, and a persistant indefatigable student.

—Our enterprising merchant tailor, Mr. G. H. Yesbera, has just received a fine lot of piece goods for the spring styles. The new styles are very elegant and will make attractive suits. Call before the best patterns are selected, and have a suit made up in the splendid fits for which Mr. Y. is noted.

—"Helen's Babies." This work is acknowledged to be the best selling article in our bookstores. Druggists, however, say that Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup sells better than any other medicine. It is perfectly harmless and always reliable. Price 25 cents a bottle. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

—Dr. W. H. Madden of Butler, has now in his hands, receipts for subscription due the "COURIER," of all those getting their papers at that place. We hope our subscribers will be very prompt in coming forward and liquidating their claims, as we need what is due.

—Our enterprising barber, Mr. S. Pommert, has lately filled his tank with clean fresh water, and is now amply prepared to accommodate all those wishing warm or cold baths. He has also rearranged his bath room, which presents a neat appearance. Give him a call, first door south of the post office.

—There will be a trial in the next term of court against the Building, Loan and Saving Association, in regard to the assessment of fines, when parties fail to make regular payments. There are now but twenty shares in the organization.

—The Albion New Era gives an account of how James Campbell, of Kendallville was arrested, indicted, tried and sentenced in the small space of twenty-four hours, on a charge of assault upon one Geo. Cretzinger, with intent to kill.

—The ladies of the temperance cause at Waterloo, gave a very excellent entertainment at that place last Friday and Saturday evenings, in the presentation of a drama called the 'Drunkard.' The different parts were well sustained and all were pleased in its rendition.

—The New Era says Warren Kelley, son of Dr. D. C. Kelley, of Syracuse, recently broke through the ice while skating upon the lake at that place, and came very near drowning. He was in the water fully five minutes before assistance reached him, and how he managed to keep from sinking is a mystery.

—If a man thinks there is no hell, just let him swallow a dose of carbolic acid, mistaking it for a swig of port wine. We heard of a gentleman last week who did this, and he says he has felt ever since as if he wood give anything in the world if he could only rent his stomach out for an ice house.

—Among the pupils of the Auburn High School, is one of our married ladies who, it is said, is making great progress in her studies. It may not be out of place to say that there are others of this class, who might be greatly benefitted by a similar course. It is never too late to learn

—We have the boss chicken story, now, and 'defy competition.' Mrs. Randall, of this city, killed a pullet last week, that was very large and supposed to be very fat, but a post mortem examination revealed the fact that it had two hearts, two livers and two gizzards, and besides, containing 11 full sized and matured eggs. There is no eggsageration about the story, as the statement can be verified by a number of witnesses.—Kenallville Standard.

—We are glad to present this week an interesting, gossipy letter, written by our own correspondent from Brooklyn, N. York. It does not come from a correspondence Bureau, but is written especially for the "COURIER". It will soon be discovered that it is written by a lady, as none but the feminines can get up such a spicy letter. We are trying to make arrangments to have her contribute once every two weeks, with flattering success. The ladies will especially enjoy her letters.

Theodore Tilton.

We are glad to announce that Mr. Theodore Tilton, one of America's great lecturers, will appear at Auburn on the 26th of February. We have not learned which one of his lectures will be given, but the agent writes that he will be here on the date above mentioned. Owing to the great expense of getting such a lecturer as Mr. Tilton, it is thought best to place the price of admission at one dollar, though we hope it can be arraged at a lower rate. Tickets and reserved seats can be had at Willis' book store. Arrangements will be made to have trains run on the Eel River and Saginaw roads so as to accommodate those abroad who desire to attend.

—We regret to learn of the death of our old friend, Rev. T. P. Sutton, of Butler. We first met him years ago, and always found him a honest, active, enterprising citizen. He was born in White Eyes township, Coshocton county, Ohio, July 29, 1840, and died Jan. 24, 1878, being at the time of his death aged 37 years, 5 months and 25 days. In 1863 the deceased entered the army, and continued in the service until the close of the war, during a part of the time acting as chaplain of the regiment of which he was a member. He leaves a wife and three children, the oldest being an inmate of the deaf and dumb asylum in this State.

—I see an article in the COURIER stating that Mr. Hale had shipped from Auburn twelve hogs that weighed 4,560 pounds. D. E. Mellville brought that number to this place, Hale owning one third interest only. A mistake, Mays.

The above is from one of Weamer's postal editors. When they desire to correct an error in the "COURIER," they should be reliable in their reports. In the first place, Mr. Wm. Demaranville, took them to St. Joe. In the next place they weighed 4,500 pounds, and in the third place, Mr. Demaranville owned ½, Mr. Thos. Conner ¼ and Mr. Hale ¼. With these exceptions the above item may be correct.

THE PALMER'S VISION.

BY J. G. HOLLAND.

Noon o'er Judea! All the air was beating
With the hot pulses of the day's great heart;
The birds were silent; and the rill, retreating,
Shrank in the covert, and complained apart,

When a lone pilgrim, with his scrip and burden,
Dropped by the way-side weary and distressed,
His sinking heart grown faithless of its guerdon—
The city of his recompense and rest.

No vision yet of Galilee and Tabor!
No glimpse of distant Zion thronged and crowned!
Behind him stretched his long and useless labor,
Before him lay the parched and stony ground.

He leaned against a shrine of Mary, casting
Its balm of shadow on his aching head,
And worn with toil, and faint with cruel fasting,
He sighed: "O God! O God, that I were dead!

The friends I love are lost or left behind me;
In penury and loneliness I roam;
These endless paths of penance chafe and blind me;
Oh take and take thy wasted pilgrim home!"

Then with the form of Mary bending o'er him,
Her hands in changeless benediction stayed,
The palmer slept, while a swift dream upbore him
To the fair paradise for which he prayed.

He stood alone, wrapped in divinest wonder;
He saw the pearly gates and jasper walls
Informed with light, and heard the far-off thunder
Of chariot wheels and mighty waterfalls!

From far and near, in rhythmic palpitations,
Rose on the air the noise of shouts and psalms;
And through the gates he saw the ransomed nations,
Marching and waving their triumphant palms.

And while within the thronging Empyrean,
A golden palm-branch in his kingly hand,
He saw his Lord, the gracious Galilean,
Amid the worship of his myriads stand!

"O Jesus! Lord of glory! Bid me enter!
I worship thee! I kiss thy holy rood!"
The pilgrim cried, when from the burning center
A broad-winged angel sought him where he stood.

"Why art thou here?" in accents deep and tender
Outspoke the messenger. "Dost thou not know
That none may win the city's rest and splendor,
Who do not cut their palms in Jericho?

"Go back to earth, thou palmer empty-handed!
Go back to hunger and the toilsome way!
Complete the task that duty hath commanded,
And win the palm thou hast not brought to-day!"

And then the sleeper woke and gazed around him;
Then, springing to his feet with life renewed,
He spurned the faithless weakness that had bound him;
And, faring on, his pilgrimage pursued.

The way was hard and he grew halt and weary,
But one long day, among the evening hours,
He saw beyond a landscape gray and dreary
The sunset flame on Salem's sacred towers!

O, fainting soul that readest well this story,
Longing through pain for death's benignant balm,
Think not to win a heaven of rest and glory
If thou shalt reach its gates without thy palm!

—Scribner for February.

THE EXPRESS TRAIN.

Two or three of us had lounged out of the club one night, into Santley's office, to find out the news coming in by cable, which the sleeping town would not hear until the paper would be out to-morrow. Santley was editor of the Courier. He was scribbling away at driving speed, his hat on, an unlighted cigar in his mouth.

"You're at it late, Ben."

"Accident on a Western road. Sixty lives lost," without looking up.

We seized the long, white slips which lay coiled over the table, and read the dispatch.

"Tut, tut!"

"Infamous!"

"Nobody to blame, of course."

"I tell you the officers of a road where such an accident is possible should be tried for murder!" cried Ferrers.

Santley shoved his copy to the boy, and lighted his cigar. "I think you're wrong, Ferrers. Instead of being startled at such casualties, I never travel on a railway that I am not amazed at the security of them. Just think of it. Thousands of trains running yearly on each, with but a minute to spare between safety and destruction, the safety of these trains depending on conductors, telegraph clerks, brakesmen, men of every grade of intellect, their brains subject to every kind of moods and disease and tempers. The engineer takes a glass of liquor; the conductor sets his watch half a minute too fast; the flagman falls asleep, and the train is dashed into ruin! It is not the accident that is to be wondered at; it is the escape that is miraculous!"

We all had dropped into seats by this time. The night was young, and one after another told some story of adventure or danger. Presently Santley said, "There was an incident which occurred on the Erie road a few years ago, which made me feel as I do in the matter. I happened to be an eye-witness to the whole affair."

"What was it, Ben?"

"It's rather a long story—"

"No matter. Go on. You can't go home until your proof comes in, anyhow."

"Well, to make you understand, about five years ago I had a bad break-down—night-work, hack-writing and poor pay. You know how fast it all wears out the machine. The doctor talked of disease of the gray matter of the brain, etc., and prescribed, instead of medicine, absolute rest and change of scene. I would have swallowed all the nostrums in a drug-shop rather than have left the office for a week.

"'I'll take country board and send in my editorials,' I said.

"'No; you must drop office and work utterly out of your life for a month, at least. Talk and think of planting potatoes, or embroidery—anything but newspapers and politics.'

"Well, I obeyed. I started on a pedestrian tour through Pennsylvania, studied oil stock in Alleghany county, and ate sauer-kraut in Berks. Finally I brought up—footsore and bored beyond bearing—in Williamsport. While there, I fell into the habit of lounging about the railway station, studying the construction of the engines and making friends with the men. The man with whom I always fraternize most readily is the skilled mechanic. He has a degree of common-sense—a store of certain facts which your young doctor or politician is apt to lack. Besides he is absolutely sure of his social standing ground, and has a grave self-respect which teaches him to respect you. The professional lad just started on his career is uneasy, not sure of his position; he tries to climb perpetually. I tell you this to explain my intimacy with many of the officials on the road, especially with an engineer named Blakeley.

"This man attracted me first by his ability to give me the information I wanted in a few direct, sharp words. Like most reticent men, he knew the weight and value of words. I soon became personally much interested in him. He was about 40, his hair streaked with gray, with a grave, worn face, which hinted at a youth of hardships and much suffering. However, Blakeley had found his way to the uplands at last. Three years before he had married a bright, cheerful woman. They had one child—a boy. He had work and good wages, and was, I found, high in the confidence of the company. On one occasion, having a Sunday off, he took me up to Jersey Shore, where his wife and boy lived. He was an exceptionally silent man, but, when with them, was garrulous and light-hearted as a boy. In his eyes Jane was the wisest and fairest of women, and the boy a wonder of intellect. One great source of trouble to him was, as I found, that he was able to see them but once in three weeks. It was necessary for the child's health to keep them in the country air, and, indeed, he could not afford to have them elsewhere; but this separated him from them almost wholly. Jane was in the habit of coming with Charley down to a certain point of the road every day, that Blakeley might see them as he dashed by.

"And, when I found out this habit, it occurred to me that I could give Blakeley a great pleasure. How often have I cursed my meddling kindness since. January 25 was the child's birthday. I proposed to Mrs. Blakeley that she and Charley should board the train which her husband drove, unknown to him, and run up to Harrisburg, where he had the night off. There was to be a little supper at the Lochiel House. Charley was to appear in a new suit, etc., etc. Of course the whole affair was at my expense—a mere trifle, but an affair of grandeur and distinction which fairly took Jane's breath. She was a most innocent, happy creature; one of those women who are wives and mothers in the cradle. When Blakeley found her she was a thin, pale little tailoress—a machine to grind out badly-made, shoddy clothes. But three years of marriage and petting of Charley had made her rosy and plump and pretty.

"The little Highland suit was bought complete, to the tiny dirk and feather, and very pretty the little fellow looked in it. I wrote down to order a stunning supper, to be ready at 8. Jane and the boy were to go aboard the train at Jersey Shore, a queer little hill village near which they lived. Blakeley ran the train from Williamsport down to Harrisburg that day. His wife being in the passenger car before he took charge of the engine, of course he would see and know nothing of her until we landed at Harrisburg at 7. I had intended to go down in the smoking car as usual, but another fancy, suggested I suppose by the originator of all evil, seized me. No need to laugh. Satan, I believe, has quite as much to do with accidents and misery and death as with sin. Why not? However, my fancy, diabolic or not, was to go down on the engine with Blakeley. I hunted up the fireman, and talked to him for an hour. Then I went to the engineer.

"'Blakeley,' I said, 'Jones (the fireman) wants to-night off.'

"'Off! O, no doubt! He's taking to drink, Jones. He must have been drinking when he talked of that. It's impossible.'

"I explained to Blakeley that Jones had a sick wife, or a sweetheart or something, and finally owned that I had an unconquerable desire to run down the road on the engine, and that, knowing my only chance was to take the fireman's place, I had bribed him to give it to me. The fact was, that in my idleness and the overworked state of my brain I craved excitement as a confirmed drunkard does liquor.

"Blakeley, I saw, was angry, and exceedingly annoyed. He refused at first, but finally gave way with a grave civility, which almost made me ashamed of my boyish whim. I promised to be the prince of firemen.

"'Then you'll have to be treated as one, Mr. Santley, said Blakeley, curtly. 'I can't talk to gentlemen aboard my engine. It's different from here, on the platform, you'll remember. I've got to order and you to obey, in there, and that's all there's of it.'

"'O, I understand,' I said, thinking that it required little moral effort to obey, in the matter of shoveling coal. If I could have guessed what that shoveling coal was to cost me! But all day I went about thinking of the fiery ride through the hills, mounted literally on the iron horse.

"It was in the middle of the afternoon when the train rushed into the station. I caught a glimpse of Jane on the passenger car, with Charley, magnificent in his red-and-green plaid, beside her. She nodded a dozen times and laughed, and then hid behind the window, fearing her husband should see her. Poor girl! It was the second great holiday of her life, she had told me, the first being her wedding-day.

"The train stopped ten minutes. It was neither an express nor an accommodation train, but one which stopped at the principal stations on the route—Selinsgrove, Sunbury, etc.

"I had an old patched suit, fit, as I supposed, for the service of coal heaver; but Blakeley, when I came up, eyed it and my hands sardonically. He was in no better temper, evidently, with amateur firemen than he had been in the morning.

"'All aboard!" he said, gruffly. 'You take your seat there, Mr. Santley. You'll put in coal just as I call for it, if you please, and not trust to your own judgment.'

"His tone annoyed me. 'It cannot require much judgment to keep up a fire under a boiling pot, and not to make it too hot. Any woman can do that in her own kitchen.'

"He made no reply, but took his place in the little square box where the greater part of his life was passed. I noticed that his face was flushed, and his irritation at my foolish whim was surely more than the occasion required. I watched him with keen curiosity, wondering if it was possible that he could have been drinking, as he had accused Jones of doing."

"It strikes me as odd," interrupted Ferrers, "that you should have not only made an intimate companion of this fellow, Santley, but have taken so keen an interest in his tempers and drinking-bouts. You would not be likely to honor any of us with such attention."

"No. I have something else to do. I was absolutely idle then. Blakeley and his family for the time made up my world. As for the friendship, this was an exceptional man, both as to integrity and massive hard sense. The knowledge that comes from books counts with me but for little, compared with the education given by experience and contact with facts for forty years. I was honored by the friendship of this grimy engineer. But the question of his sobriety that day was a serious one. A man in charge of a train with hundreds of souls aboard I felt ought to be sober, particularly when I was shut up in the engine with him.

"Just as we started a slip of paper was handed to him, which he read and threw down.

"'Do you run this train by telegraph?' I asked, beginning to shovel vigorously.

"'Yes. No more coal.'

"'Isn't that unusual?'

"'Yes. There are two special trains on the road this afternoon.'

"'Is it difficult to run a train by telegraph?' I said presently, simply to make conversation. Staring in silence at the narrow slit in the gloomy furnace, or out at the village street, through which we slowly passed, was monotonous.

"'No, not difficult. I simply have to obey the instructions which I receive at each station.'

"'But if you should happen to think the instructions not right?'

"'Happen to think! I've no business to think at all! When the trains run by telegraph the engineers are so many machines in the hands of one controller, who directs them all from a central point. He has the whole road under his eye. If they don't obey to the least tittle their orders, it is destruction to the whole.'

"'You seem to think silent obedience the first and last merit in a railway man?'

"'Yes,' dryly.

"I took the hint and was dumb.

"We were out of town now. Blakeley quickened the speed of the engine. I did not speak to him again. There was little for me to do, and I was occupied in looking out at the flying landscape. The fields were covered with a deep fall of snow, and glanced whitely by, with a strange, unreal shimmer. The air was keen and cutting. Still the ride was tame. I was disappointed. The excitement would by no means equal a dash on a spirited horse. I began to think I had little to pay for my grimy hands and face, when we slowed at the next station. One or two passengers came aboard the train. There was the inevitable old lady with bundles, alighting, and the usual squabble about the trunk. I was craning my neck to hear, when the boy ran alongside with the telegram.

"The next moment I heard a smothered exclamation from Blakeley.

"'Go back,' said he to the boy. 'Tell Sands to have the message repeated. There's a mistake.'

"The boy dashed off, and Blakeley sat waiting, coolly polishing a bit of the shining brass before him. Back came the boy.

"'Had it repeated. Sands is raging at you. Says there's no mistake, and you'd best get on,' thrusting the second message up.

"Blakeley read it, and stood hesitating for half a minute. I never shall forget the dismay, the utter perplexity that gathered in his lean face as he looked at the telegram, and then at the long train behind him. His lips moved as if he were calculating chances, and his eye suddenly quailed, as if he saw death at the end of the calculation.

"'What's the matter? What are you going to do?' I asked.

"'Obey.'

"The engine gave a long shriek of horror, that made me start as if it were Blakeley's own voice. The next instant we rushed out of the station, and dashed through the low-lying farms at a speed which seemed dangerous to me.

"'Put in more coal,' said Blakeley.

"I shoveled it in.

"'We are going very fast, Blakeley,' I ventured.

"He did not answer. His eye was fixed on the steam gauge; his lips closely shut.

"'More coal!'

"I threw it in.

"The fields and houses began to fly past but half seen. We were nearing Sunbury. Blakeley's eye went from the gauge to the face of the timepiece and back. He moved like an automaton. There was little more meaning in his face.

"'More!' without turning his eye.

"I took up the shovel—hesitated.

"'Blakeley! We're going very fast. We're going at the rate of sixty miles an hour.'

"'Coal!'

"I was alarmed at the stern, cold rigidity of the man. His pallor was becoming frightful.

"I threw in the coal.

"At least we must stop in Sunbury. He had told me that was the next halt.

"The little town approached. As the first house came into view the engine sent out its shriek of warning; it grew louder, louder. We dashed into the street, up to the station, where a group of passengers waited, and past it without the halt of an instant. I caught a glimpse of the appalled faces of the waiting crowd; then we were in the fields again.

"The speed now became literally breathless; the furnace glared red-hot; the heat, the velocity, the terrible nervous strain of the man beside me, seemed to weight the air. I found myself drawing long, stertorious breaths, like one drowning. I heaped in the coal at intervals, as he bade me.

"'I'd have done nothing of the kind!' interrupted one of the listeners. 'The man was mad.'

"I did it because I was oppressed by an odd sense of duty, which I never had in my ordinary brain-work. I had taken this mechanical task on myself, and I felt a stricture upon me to go through with it at any cost. I know now how it is that dull, ignorant men, without a spark of enthusiasm, show such heroism sometimes, as soldiers, engineers, Captains of wrecked vessels. It is this overpowering sense of routine duty. It is a finer thing than sheer bravery, to my notion. However, I began to be of your mind, Wright, that Blakeley was mad, laboring under some sudden frenzy from drink, though I had never seen him touch liquor.

"He did not move hand or foot, except in the mechanical control of the engine, his eye going from the gauge to the timepiece with a steadiness that was more terrible and threatening than any gleam of insanity would have been. Once he glanced back at the long train sweeping after the engine, with a headlong speed that rocked it from side to side. You would catch glimpses of hundreds of men and women talking, reading, smoking, unconscious that their lives were all in the hold of one man, whom I now strongly suspected to be mad. I knew by his look that he remembered their lives were in his hand. He glanced at the clock.

"'Twenty miles,' he muttered. 'Throw on the coal, Jones. The fire is going out.'

"I did it. Yes, I did it. There was something in the face of that man that I could not resist. Then I climbed forward and shook him by the shoulder.

"'Blakeley!' I shouted, 'you are running this train into the jaws of death.'

"'I know it,' quietly.

"'Your wife and child are on it.'

"'My God!'

"He staggered to his feet. But even then he did not move his eyes from the gauge.

"'In a minute—'

"'Make up the fire,' he said, and pushed in the throttle valve.

"'I will not.'

"'Make up the fire, Mr. Santley,' very quietly.

"'I will not. You may murder yourself and your wife and boy, but you shall not murder me.'

"He looked at me. His kindly gray eyes glared like those of a wild beast. But he controlled himself in a moment.

"'I could throw you out of this door, and make short work of it. But—look here; do you see the station yonder?'

"I saw a thin wisp of smoke against the sky, about five miles in advance.

"'I was told to reach that station by 6 o'clock. The express train meeting us is due now. I ought to have laid by for it at Sunbury. I was told to come on. The track is a single one. Unless I can make the siding at that station in three minutes, we will meet it yonder in the hollow.'

"'Somebody blundered?'

"'Yes, I think so.'

"'And you obeyed?'

"He said nothing. I threw on coal. If I had had petroleum, I would have thrown it on. But I never was calmer in my life. When death has a man actually by the throat it sobers him.

"Blakeley pushed in the valve still farther. The engine began to give a strange, panting sound. Far off to the south I could see the bituminous, black smoke of a train.

"I looked at Blakeley inquiringly. He nodded. It was the express.

"I stooped to the fire.

"'No more,' he said.

"I looked across the clear, wintry sky at the gray smoke of the peaceful little village, and beyond, that black line coming closer, closer, across the sky. Then I turned to the watch.

"In one minute more—

"Gentlemen, I confess; I sat down and buried my face in my hands. I don't think I tried to pray. I had a confused thought of a mass of mangled dying men and women, mothers and their babies, and, vaguely, of a merciful God. Little Charley, with his curls and pretty suit—

"There was a terrific shriek from the engine, against which I leaned. Another in my face. A hot tempest swept past me.

"I looked up. We were on the siding, and the express had gone by. The hindmost cars touched in passing.

"'Thank God! You've done it, Blakeley! Blakeley!' I cried.

"But he did not speak. He sat there immovable, and cold as a stone. I went to the cars and brought Jane and the boy to him, and when he opened his eyes and took the little woman's hands in his I came away.

"An engineer named Fred, who was at the station, ran the train into Harrisburg. Blakeley was terribly shaken. But we went down and had our little feast, after all. Charley, at least, enjoyed it."

"What was the explanation? A blunder of the director, or the telegraph operator?"

"I don't know. Blakeley made light of it afterwards, and kept the secret. These railway men must have a strong esprit de corps.

"All I know is, that Blakeley's salary was raised soon after, and he received that Christmas a very handsome 'testimonial for services rendered,' from the company."

A Checkered Career.

In the State prison, at Charlestown, Mass., is a man named Dunaunin, who has had an eventful career. When the war broke out he was serving a sentence of thirty years, but was pardoned out on condition that he would enlist in the army. His bravery quickly won the good will of his officers, who knew nothing of his antecedents, and after the battle of Fredericksburg he acted as a spy, gaining important information. He was afterward captured and sentenced to Libby prison and paroled. He broke the parole, re-enlisted, deserted, committed a burglary, and is back in his old quarters, with twelve years more to serve.

Roman Catholics.

It is commonly said that the Roman Catholic Church in the United States is almost wholly made up of Irish elements. The Catholic Telegraph gives the statistics on this point. Of the ten Archbishops in the United States four are Irish, as are twenty-nine of the fifty-six Bishops; of the 5,200 priests 3,000 are of the same nationality. The Catholic laity number 6,500,000; of this number 4,000,000 are of Irish stock. If this estimate be correct, then the number of Irish Catholics in this country is precisely equal to the number in Ireland itself.

The Dardanelles.

The Dardanelles is about forty miles in length, and is from three-fourths of a mile to two miles wide. Xerxes crossed the channel on a double bridge of boats B. C. 480, and Alexander crossed it B. C. 334. Gallipoli, on the peninsula which forms the western boundary of the strait, has a population of about 25,000. A strong Russian force at Gallipoli would close the strait (or the way from the Mediterranean) as completely as the rebel batteries at Vicksburg did the Mississippi river.

KRUPP'S GUN FACTORY.

Its Progress from Ten Men Employed in 1810 to Nine Thousand in 1877.

A correspondent writing from Berlin says:

An international congress of rare character assembled a short time ago at Bredelar, in Rhenish Prussia. Mr. Krupp, the greatest gunmaker of the entire world, and director of the celebrated foundry at Essen, invited representatives of all nationalities—Russian, English, Austrian, Belgian, Spanish, Portuguese, Danish, Brazilian and even Japanese—to witness the experiments of a new piece of artillery, the plated cannon, or, as it is called in German, the "panzer canone." The number of officers present at these interesting experiments was fifty-five. The object was to solve two problems considered extremely difficult, and which have hitherto defied the ingenuity of inventors: First, a permanent pointing in aim; second, the protection of the piece. Now this new Krupp gun has no recoil, and, therefore, it is only necessary to aim it once if the object does not change. In the second place, it can neither be damaged nor dismounted by the enemy. The artillerymen who serve it are sheltered in a sort of sentry box, formed by iron plates of about twenty inches in thickness. This sentry-box contains the gun and the gunners. The roof and the exterior sides are protected by earth, while the front is pierced by a hole for the passage of the mouth of the gun. The enemy can see nothing but this hole. The experiment was so decisive that almost all the officers wanted to go into the sentry-box while two enormous siege guns showered shot upon them at short range. This invention may bring about a revolution in the art of defending strongholds.

It is known that the Emperor, while at the military maneuvers at Essen, visited the factory of the Messrs. Krupp, and this affair recalls the origin of this great industrial family. When the first chief of the factory came to Essen, the village had only 3,000 inhabitants. To-day it has 40,000. Krupp commenced in 1810 with ten workmen, and in 1843 he had 100. It was his son, Alfred Krupp, that gave the establishment the prodigious development which it has reached to-day. It was from England that he brought his method of making steel, and he has wonderfully improved upon it by combining it with the Bessemer process. In 1863 he had 4,000 hands employed, and he has 9,000 at present. The buildings of the factory cover a space of over 200 acres, and are surmounted by 100 chimneys. A workingman's city, with 3,000 houses, gives to the hands apartments which are rented at from $40 to $80 a year. An association for providing food, with twenty-two salesrooms, furnishes the inhabitants, at reduced prices, with all that they desire. A single bakery makes 400,000 pounds of bread in a month. There is in this factory of Essen 413 steam engines, representing a total of 17,000 horses, and 77 steam hammers for striking iron, among which figures the famous hammer called "Fritz," and which weighs 100,000 pounds. There are thirty miles of railway communicating with the different parts of the manufactory, as well as forty miles of telegraph lines. The establishment can manufacture in twenty-four hours 2,700 rails, 150 locomotive wheels, 180 wagon wheels and 1,500 shells, and in a month 250 field-pieces and 54 others of larger caliber.

Adrianople.

Adrianople is situated at the confluence of the Tundja, the Maritza, and the Arda, and is about 135 miles from Constantinople. Its population has been variously estimated at from 80,000 to 140,000 inhabitants. According to the most trustworthy accounts about half of these are Turks, 30,000 Bulgarians and Greeks, and the remainder Jews and Armenians. Adrianople was taken by the Turks from the Greek Emperors in 1362, and was made the capital of the Turkish empire, remaining so until Constantinople was seized in 1453. It is at present virtually an open town. The old part is surrounded by a wall and contains a citadel, but these are now useless as defenses. Recently more modern works have been constructed by the Turks, but these are only of field or at most of a provisional type. In the opinion of Von Moltke, the hollow roads, ditches, and garden walls without the town afford great facilities for its defense, and the approaches may be covered by troops drawn up so as to rest upon the rivers, but only in corps of not less than 30,000 or 40,000 men. The town is, however, overlooked by heights on every side, and consequently it would be hardly possible to hold it against an army provided with modern artillery. The first view of Adrianople is described by Von Moltke as being wonderfully beautiful, the white minarets and the lead-roofed cupolas of the mosques, baths, and caravanserais rising in countless numbers above the endless mass of flat roofs and the broad tops of the plane trees. The country around is also exceedingly lovely. From the valleys of the rivers hills rise up gently, but to a considerable height, covered with vineyards and orchards; and as far as the eye can reach it sees nothing but fertile fields, groves of fruit-trees, and flourishing villages. Within, however, the streets are narrow and irregular, the shelving roofs of many of the houses projecting so as to meet those on the opposite side of the way.

What the Microscope Reveals.

Mold is a forest of beautiful trees, with the branches, leaves and fruit.

Butterflies are fully feathered.

Hairs are hollow tubes.

The surface of our bodies is covered with scales like a fish; a single grain of sand would cover 150 of these scales, and yet a scale covers 500 pores. Through these narrow openings the perspiration forces itself like water through a sieve.

Each drop of stagnant water contains a world of living creatures, swimming with as much liberty as whales in the sea.

Each leaf has a colony of insects grazing on it, like cows in a meadow.

"Now," sobbed a devout North Carolina fisherman, as a passenger packet came crashing ashore in the storm and darkness; "now," he exclaimed, raising his hands to heaven and falling on his knees; "now, thank heaven, my wife and daughters can have good clothes and jewelry to wear to church."—Hawk-Eye.

A RETURN.

"Do ye not know me, Donald?"—
Pushing back her gray hair—
"Can ye not speak to me, Donald—
Me who was once so fair

"Many years have gone over us—
Fortunate years for thee;
When I see thee they seem not so many—
Only when thou seest me.

"For I wear the snow of winters
No sun and no summer can change;
Yet I seem to hear the spring coming,
And the blue-bird beginning to range,

"As when in the old days together
We wandered and talked by the stream,
Of thy life in the far new country,
And our love. Was it all a dream?

"For what could I be to thee, Donald,
A man grown in honor and land,
With a choice of the whole world before thee,
While I could give thee but my hand!

"'Twas long that I staid by the brook-side,
In the dawn and the dark of the eve,
Through winter and summer thereafter,
Ere I could forget to grieve.

"For thou wast my first love, Donald—
Thou the first love of my heart;
Why should I not tell thee, Donald,
What sadness it was then to part?"

"I cannot recall thee, woman;
And yet, when I hear thy voice,
I hear the low rippling river,
I see the girl of my choice.

"Can ye not tell me of Janet,
Something of her I once loved?
She gave me a wing for my bonnet;
I gave her a ring ere I roved."

"Think ye on her sometimes, Donald?
Can ye remember the ring?
It is worn now very thin, Donald;
Yet, perhaps, ye'll remember the thing.

"It is here on my hand still, Donald;
I cannot remove it again;
I have kept it through labor and sorrow;
It is grown now a part of my pain!"

PITH AND POINT.

WHAT is the difference between a hungry man and a glutton? One longs to eat; the other eats too long.

THE man who swore off is beginning to observe, with great feeling, "We've got but one life to live, anyway."—Danbury News.

MAYBE they did "have giants in those days," but they couldn't have looked any bigger than a free-born American citizen feels when he's in a procession.

WITH four metallic qualifications a man may feel pretty certain of worldly success. They are, gold in his pocket, silver in his tongue, brass in his face, and iron in his heart.

"I SAY, Jim, if five and a-half rods make a perch, how many will make a pickerel?" "You just tell me, first, if two hogsheads make a pipe, how many will make a meerschaum?"

THE second nuptials of the widow Canter to Thomas Rush were thus chronicled:

When Cupid did this maiden banter,
At Hymen's course to take a brush,
At first she started at a Canter,
But now she goes it with a Rush.

"DO YOU believe in the use of the rod, my dear Professor?" asked the lady whose children were making life a burden to all the guests in the hotel. "In some cases, madam, but there are others," glancing at her gamboling darlings, "where I prefer the revolver."

"PAY the bill!" said a gentleman who is well known to collectors as the prince of procrastinators. "I should be happy to do so; but this damp weather has caused my money-drawer to swell, and I cannot get at my funds. Come the first dry day."

LET no one hereafter insinuate that teachers' institutes produce no good. At the late Bucks County Institute a fair-haired, blue-eyed darling of a teacher of the female persuasion forever demolished the base insinuation by the following conundrum: "How do you make a Maltese cross?" Answer: "Tread on her tail."

SAM, a Kentucky darky, who was expatiating on the merits of a mule he was trying hard to sell, said, "I've know'd dat mule fur tree year, an' I don't tink de animile would hurt a lam', cause——" The blank space indicates where the recommendation was interrupted, and Sam forwarded to the other side of the fence.

HE was so drunk that he could not walk—could scarcely move and only partially articulate. A friend of his came up and upbraided him. "If I were in your place," said his friend, "I'd go out in the woods and hang myself." "If (hic) you were (hic) in my place, how (hic) the deuce (hic) would you get to (hic) the woods?" was the squelching inquiry.

NOT long ago an Irishman was summoned before a bench of county magistrates for being drunk and disorderly. "Do you know what brought you here?" asked the Chairman? "Faix, your Honor, two policemen," replied the prisoner. "Had not drink something to do with it?" said the J. P., frowning. "Sortinly," answered Paddy, unabashed; "they were both drunk."

CHARLIE MAY had been taught by his father that God made all things. He began to inquire in detail in regard to various objects. Coming out one day where his father was at work, he set his bare foot on a thistle. "O! Papa, what is that?" "That is a thistle, Charlie." "Thistle! Did God make it?" "Yes, Charlie, God made the thistle." "Well, he whittled it pretty sharp, didn't he?"

O, now nasty is the weather!—streets no longer in "fine feather;" slush is sloshing through the leather, rubbers, stockings—all together. Mists and fogs, they take an airing; soot is flying, patience wearing; black the sky, black clouds a-bearing; drizzle, drizzle downward faring. Everybody's chill and grumbling; prices tumbling, merchants humbling; falling banks are heard a-rumbling—creditors deep curses mumbling. Thus the people and the weather growl and howl and weep together.—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

The War in Cuba.

The uncrushed Cuban rebellion is still a cause of considerable proportions, if the reports of the Spanish authorities on the island can be regarded as reliable. The number of the rebellious "patriots" at present is placed at 79,000, of whom 25,000 are in arms. The number of Spanish soldiers engaged in fighting or watching the rebellion of these 79,000 men is over 200,000, of which 40,000 are in the field, and the rest engaged at garrison duty in the chief cities. The troops of both sides are at present resting under a truce of a few weeks, on account of the nuptials of Alphonso, the Spanish King.

THAT ANACONDA SIGNATURE.

Something About Gen. Francis E. Spinner—How He Gave Away an Office to a Tall Virginian.

Many curious things happened to Gen. Spinner, late United States Treasurer, during the many years he held that responsible position, but the bluff old watch-dog of the treasury had a practical way of managing which seldom failed to win against all odds. He got caught one day, however, in the most unexpected manner. His signature, so well-known where greenbacks have ramified, got in time to be so much in demand that people all over the country used to write asking him for his autograph. He fell into a habit of complying by returning a brief response, in which, after the formal beginning, he would say: "The request made in your note of — date is herewith complied with," to which he would affix his grotesque signature.

One day a tall man, a very tall, slim man, with store-clothes on, in a plug hat and new boots, from one of the south-western counties of Virginia, stalked into the office and stated that he had come up to be sworn in.

Spinner looked up. "What did you say?" said he.

"I came to take the oath of office."

"Go to——Chicago," said he. "What do you mean?"

"I mean," said the tall Virginian very slowly and solemnly, "that I have come up to take the oath, and be inducted into the office to which you have appointed me."

The valiant old financier began to boil over. "How dare you, sir! How dare you come in here with so monstrous a proposition? I never promised you an office. You're crazy. I never heard of you; who are you and what the d—nunciation do you mean by coming in here with such a story? Go home! Go home, sir, and don't bother me!"

"I beg your pardon," said the tall man, glancing complacently at his new clothes. "I have a note from you in reply to my application, in which you offer me a clerkship in your office," and taking from his pocket a folded paper he spread it before the astonished Treasurer, who read:

"SIR: The request contained in yours of —— date is herewith complied with. Sincerely yours,

"F. E. SPINNER."

"Holy Moses!" said he; "you asked me for my autograph, and this is my reply. Do you think I'm a —— idiot?"

"Not at all," said the tall stranger, "only you have made a mistake. I wrote you some time ago asking for an office, and this is your reply to that application. I have spent all my money in purchasing these gar—ments and paying my fare to Washington, and I want my place, which you have promised me."

The old man jumped up, rushed to his letter-file and discovered that on the day named he had received two applications for his autograph and one for an office. He had mailed the same answer to all three. He sat down, turned and gazed sadly at the expectant Virginian for about two minutes, and then, going down into his pockets, he raked up all his loose greenbacks and fractional currency, and, handing them over, said: "There, take that and pay your fare back to your home in the country, and thank God that you have escaped a public office."—Washington Union.

Sumner's Letters from Europe.

He was often thought to be exclusive, egotistical, and cold. His ego was certainly immense, but he was as artless as a child, and no man was ever more affectionate or more boundlessly generous in his estimates of others, and in his expression of those estimates. This appears in these letters, as it did in his private intercourse, and it went with him through all the storms of his public career to the end. Aside from the deep furrowed ruts in which his public life moved, there were always these fresh, dewy paths of sympathy and affection and interest in persons and things. Under all and over all an indefeasible sweetness and simplicity endeared him to those who knew him best. There might be warm and excited differences; there might be even the form of alienation; but the living stream ran quick below, and the ice was of a night, the stream of eternity. He was, like most public men, largely indebted to circumstances, to the nature of the public questions of his time, and to the kind of treatment which they demanded. Kings and warriors died unsung before Agamemnon, but Helen was not yet born. They had it doubtless in them to lead the Trojan host; but there was no host, there was no Troy. Sumner came into public life at the moment which demanded just his temperament, his training, his character, his unconscious courage. There was much that he could not do, but his own peculiar work was a great part greatly played.—Editor's Easy Chair, in Harper's Magazine for February.

A Colored Skeptic.

When schools were established in the South for the education of the negro they were eagerly patronized by the colored folks of all ages. Coy maidens of 80 and bashful lads equally old gayly trudged to school with diminutive primers in their hands, while the small fry swarmed in the school-houses, and were enthusiastic on the education question. Of Pete, the subject of our anecdote, it might be truly written that "ne'er did pencil trace a whiter eye or blacker face." His former master, Dr. H——, had taken great pains with him, instructing him daily in reading and writing. In the fall Pete was to go to school, and anxiously looked forward to it. This was in 1869, when the sun was in total eclipse in August. There were all sorts of rumors among the colored people about calamities which would happen at the time of this phenomenon. A few days before it occurred the following conversation took place between Pete and a friend:

"Pete, did you know dar was gwine to be a 'clipse ob de sun next week?"

"Yes," said Pete, "I heard de folks talkin' 'bout it."

"Pete, I hear dat awful things is gwine to happen when it come. Dey say dat de world is gwine to come to an end."

Curling his lip in scorn, and fixing his big white eyes on him, Pete answered with contempt, "Go 'way, niggah. Don't you know dat school opens in September? How, den, can de world come to an end in August?"—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for February.

Some of the "Blue Laws."

No food or lodging shall be afforded to a Quaker, Adamite or other heretic.

If any person turns Quaker, he shall be banished, and not suffered to return but upon pain of death.

No priest shall abide in the Dominion; he shall be banished, and suffer death on his return. Priests may be seized by any one without a warrant.

No one shall read common prayer, keep Christmas or saints' days, make minced pies, dance, play cards, or play on any instrument of music except the drum, trumpet, and jewsharp.

No one shall run on the Sabbath day, or walk in his garden or elsewhere, except reverently, to and from meeting.

No one shall travel, cook victuals, make beds, sweep house, cut hair or shave on the Sabbath day.

No woman shall kiss her child on the Sabbath or a fasting day.

No man shall court a maid in person or by letter without first obtaining consent of her parents; £5 penalty for the first offense, £10 for the second, and for the third imprisonment during the pleasure of the court.—Peters' History of Connecticut.

A Rejected Lover's Expedient.

The Groesbeck (Texas) New Era records the singular courtship of a Prairie Grove gallant as an illustration that "faint heart never won fair lady." He proposed, but was gently refused. He went a second and third time with same result. But at length he rode over one evening, and told her he would neither eat, sleep nor speak until she consented to be his bride. She invited him in to dinner; he shook his head. She talked on, he merely looked dejected. Then she requested him to take supper; a negative shake of the head was the only reply. She played, sang and chatted on till bed time, when a servant showed him a room; a negative shake. She tripped away to her chamber; he sat determinedly still. About 12 o'clock she came back and said, "I don't wish to cause the death of a good officer, so I will marry you." The released one rose, and, with much eagerness, said, "My dear, have you any cold victuals on hand?"

An Oregon Widow as a Nevada Wife.

Not many months ago Al Perkins, says the Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle, a well-to-do rancher in Dayton, took to himself an Oregon widow for a wife. It was a big event. There was a gay party, champagne was as free as milk and water, and the blow-out was pronounced a success. A few days ago, however, a change came over the spirit of the milk-rancher's dreams. He did not hitch well with his new affinity, and ordered her to take her four children and skip out. She produced a Colt's navy revolver and informed him that if he attempted to put on any French airs with her she'd fill him as full of lead as the jumping frog of Calaveras. A neighbor interfered in his behalf and she fired them both out. She now holds the redoubt. Perkins says that Oregon widows are hefty.

Imitating Their White Brothers' Foolishness.

Two brave sons of Ham, finding some fault with each other, sought to settle their difficulties on Monday evening by an encounter on the field of honor. They hired a hack, and with their friends and two trusty shot-guns proceeded to an open field about two miles northeast of the Capitol, where they proposed having blood. The paces were measured and the principals placed in "posish." At the word "fire!" two reports were heard, and one negro dropped. When picked up and examined it was found that he had not been struck. Upon further investigation the fact was developed that the guns had only been loaded with powder. Both parties expressed themselves as being satisfied, shook hands across "the bloody sarcasm," and returned to town to blow about their duel.—Austin (Tex.) Gazette.

An Obstinate Woman.

A few days ago internal-revenue officers went to the residence of Mrs. Lydia Wings, of Taswell county, Va., for the purpose of arresting her, on charges of illicit distilling and violating the whisky laws. They found her in bed. She refused to get up, and told them if they wanted her they would have to take her by force. In this dilemma two officers promptly set to work. While one pulled on her stockings, and garters, and shoes, the other hauled her to a sitting position, and bunglingly endeavored to put a mass of skirts, waists, dresses, and other articles of attire in their proper places. As soon as the officers had put on as many clothes as they supposed a woman should wear, they stood her up, shook out her skirts, tied a shawl about her head, and carried her between them to the county jail.

A Fish Story.

The Wilmington (N. C.) Star vouches for the following rather transparent story: "Mr. Norment, a well-known politician of Robeson county, was engaged in fishing in Lumber river, using a hook and line, when, by some means, he lost overboard a valuable gold ring which he had worn upon one of his fingers. The water was deep, and the bottom of the river was soft and muddy, so, of course, no attempt was made to recover the lost trinket. Nine weeks afterward he was again fishing in the same locality, when he caught a large trout, which he took home with him, and, upon opening the fish preparatory to cooking it, he was astonished to find in his stomach the identical ring which he had lost overboard more than two months previously."

"It is Perfectly Splendid."

"There's nothing like it." "Never could use baking powder till I tried yours." "Can't speak too highly of it." That's what they say of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER.

A Cloud of Witnesses.

For nearly a quarter of a century Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy has been acknowledged by the people as a positive cure for all catarrhal affections. Its great popularity with physicians and patients, together with its constantly-increasing sale, attests, in arguments stronger than words, its healing power. If there be general or nervous debility and impoverished blood, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be used in connection with the Catarrh Remedy. The following-named parties are among the thousands who have been cured of catarrh by the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy:

What the Bilious Require.

Since torpidity of the liver is the chief cause of its disorder, it is evident that what the bilious require is an alterative stimulant which will arouse it to activity, an effect that is followed by the disappearance of the various symptoms indicative of its derangement. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters invariably achieve the primary result mentioned, besides removing the constipation, flatulence, heartburn, yellowness of the skin and whites of the eyes, pain in the right side and under the right shoulder, nausea, vertigo and sick headache, to which bilious invalids are peculiarly subject. As a remedy for chronic indigestion, mental despondency, and nervousness, the Bitters are equally efficacious, and, as a renovant of lost vigor, a means of arresting premature decay, and a source of relief from the infirmities to which the gentler sex is peculiarly subject, they may be thoroughly relied upon.

HEART DISEASE can be cured. To prove our assertion we print the following:

This is to certify that I have used Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR, and from the worst stages of Heart Disease I now consider myself well, by the use of one and one-half bottles of HEART REGULATOR. I have been troubled a little more than a year with a sluggish misbeating of the heart, and could do no stooping work whatever. I applied to the best physicians of New England, and got no relief, but by the simple use of this really valuable remedy I am now able to do a good day's work, and experience no distress from it. I think there is nothing that equals the HEART REGULATOR, and I advise all afflicted in any way with Heart Disease to give it a thorough trial, and they will not regret it. THOMAS M. TOWNS, Tilton, N. H.

SIMMONS
REGULATOR

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

The Cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World!

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heartburn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of MERCURY, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases caused by Derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

THE SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach; Loss of Appetite; Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache; Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not Regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

I can recommend, as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons' Liver Regulator.—LEWIS G. WUNDER, 1,625 MASTER STREET, ASSISTANT POSTMASTER, PHILADELPHIA.

"We have tested its virtues, personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons' Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved, but cured us."—ED. Richardson's New Method
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

Price, $3.25. By Nathan Richardson.

250,000 copies sold. Sales have surpassed those of all other books combined. Be sure to order by the above full title, and do not accept instead of this, THE MODERN SCHOOL, which is an older book, by the same author. Mr. Richardson's opinion of the merits of this first effort may be gathered from the following, taken from the Preface to the NEW METHOD:

"Becoming at length satisfied of the truth of these criticisms (by many eminent composers and professors), and convinced that great improvements were obviously needed, I determined, if possible, to remedy the defects. Profiting by the experience and advice of the best practical teachers, I commenced a thorough and critical examination of my first method, and concluded that the only remedy would be to bring out a new work on an improved plan."

This new work, substituted for the defective MODERN SCHOOL, was Richardson's

NEW METHOD FOR THE PIANOFORTE

which has been revised and re-revised, until it is the most perfect of music books, is a great favorite with the profession, and is the only true "Richardson."

SUPPLEMENT.

SENATOR VOORHEES' SPEECH

The resolution submitted by Mr. Voorhees on the 13th of December, 1877, was read.

Mr. Voorhees—Mr. President, on the 13th of December I had the honor to introduce in this body the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is of the highest importance that the financial credit of the government be maintained, and, in order to do so the government itself, in all its departments, should in good faith keep all its contracts and obligations entered into with its own citizens.

And in pursuance of a notice then given I now call it up, for the purpose of discussing the subject to which it relates.

The agitation of the question of finance has continued without a moment's intermission from the commencement of our present system until this hour. Nor is it likely to cease for many years to come. In fact, it will never cease until the people are satisfied that our vast debt is in process of extinction upon principles of justice to tax-paying labor, or until, on the other hand, they are subjugated into silent submission, and the government itself becomes changed in spirit and form into a monied aristocracy. It may be that this latter alternative is to overtake us. There are dark and plentiful omens in our recent history indicating such a conclusion, and there is a numerous and powerful class in our midst who believe, as Alexander Hamilton declared, that the British government, on this as well as on other points, is the best ever devised by the wisdom of man. Those entertaining this opinion have thus far triumphed in the financial legislation of the United States, and the time has now arrived when their victories must be reversed or soon this government will cease to be republican and the people no longer be free.

The policy of this victorious interest in this country, as in all others, has been vigilant for opportunities of greed and gain, and aggressive in appropriating them to its own advantage. In its tenacious pursuit of this policy it has during the last sixteen years pressed its cruel and unjust demands upon the American people in a variety of shapes. Just now it assumes a manner swollen with arrogance, haughty, defiant and filled with insolence toward all opponents. Those who are ranged on the side of grasping wealth affect a high disdain for such as choose to remember that labor has rights which this government is called upon to protect. There seems to be an immense sneer on the face of sordid, inactive capital, as if its pretensions were beyond the criticism of ordinary mortals. Its advocates outside of congress do not condescend as a general thing to argument at all. Denunciation is now their principal weapon. There is no epithet however base, no insinuation however infamous that is not of daily use against all who dare to differ in opinion with them. A curious spectacle is presented on this subject by a large portion of the eastern press, here and there aided by a newspaper in the west. Their columns reek from day to day with clamorous abuse of all who venture to believe as I do that to a great extent our whole financial system is an organized crime against the laboring, tax-paying men and women of the United States. Those who think as I do that a great work of financial reform is demanded in order to secure the people from slavery in fact, if not in name, are denounced in the same spirit, and in the exact language with which every old criminal abuse in government, throughout all history, has sought to paralyze the work of reformation and beat back the tide of human progress. Wherever in the annals of the human race unholy avarice has built its strongholds, and privileged classes have intrenched themselves; wherever superstition has held the human mind in bondage for the benefit of spiritual tyrants; wherever man in any way has had unlawful mastery over his fellow man and gathered in what belonged to another, there the same cry which we now hear has always been raised against any intrusion or disturbance of established and venerable iniquity. Nor does the parallel stop here. The great plea of the present hour for the continuation of wrong and injustice is that good faith requires it. Those who, finding a monstrous evil imbedded in the laws of their country, wish to eradicate it by peaceful legislation are at once and with the utmost fury assaulted as violators of the public faith, enemies of the national honor, and worse, if possible, than common swindlers. It matters not how deep and burning the outrage may be or how fraudulently it may have crept into our statutes, good faith, in the estimation of those who profit by the outrage, requires it to remain there forever, though it should aid day by day the ghastly work of ruin that now pervades the land. When the peasantry of France, in 1789, worn out with the extortions of five centuries, arose against king, priests and nobles, they were told that they were breaking the faith of the nation which had been pledged a thousand times for their silent submission to any wrong, in person or property, however horrible or indescribable. Whenever the starving people of Ireland, in the dreary centuries of the past, have grown uneasy in their bondage and struggled against their fetters, they have been fiercely reminded that the good faith of England is solemnly pledged to maintain existing laws and perpetual abuses.

Sir, this plea, so loud now in our ears, has been invoked in behalf of every wickedness that ever cursed the world. The usurper invokes it to protect the throne he has stolen, as soon as he is seated. The tyrant invokes it to shelter his prerogative, and his nobility in turn invoke it in order to live in ease and splendor off the labor of others. It is my purpose on this occasion, however, to show what the obligations of good faith require of us on the great question of our finances, and to arraign those who have systematically broken it whenever their interest prompted them to do so. It is my purpose also to show that while it is of the highest importance to maintain our financial credit, it can only be done by the government keeping all its contracts and obligations with its own citizens. This issue has been presented of late in a manner so persistent and offensive, especially to western men and western interests, that it shall now be met as far as my humble capacity enables me to meet it.

Sir, I appeal to the history of our financial legislation. I challenge its solemn records for judgment against the actual repudiators of national faith and honor. Its pages contain the facts, the immutable facts, from which the future historian will judge this question. Let us candidly review them. The act of February 25, 1862, is the beginning of our bonded debt. The precious metals were found to be unequal to the emergency of war. Specie payments were abandoned as soon as the hour of trial came, and gold and silver cowered in the rear, while the legal tender dollar went to the front with the flag and staid there. I was among those who doubted our right to issue it, but experience has shown it the best money, all things considered, that ever circulated on American soil. By this act of February, 1862, and by similar legislation at subsequent periods, every bond issued by the government which did not on its face stipulate for payment in coin was made payable by the express words of law in legal tender notes. It was plainly written in the statute that these notes, now known as greenbacks, "shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, internal duties, excise, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States, except duties on imports; and of all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatever, except for interest upon bonds and notes, which shall be paid in coin; and shall also be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States, except duties on imports and interest as aforesaid."

This simple, explicit, and at the same time comprehensive enactment guaranteed to the American people the right to pay three-fourths of their national debt in national currency. It was the law of the contract when all the 5-20 bonds, amounting to over fifteen hundred millions were purchased from the government by the bondholders, and paid for in this currency at par, when it was quoted at from 40 to 60 per cent. below par in coin. Every one understood the law to be as I have stated it at the time of its passage. In fact the great struggle then was whether even the interest on the bonds I have mentioned should be paid in coin. The act of February 25, 1862, first passed the house without any provision at all for the coin payment of interest. That feature of the law was attached here in the senate as an amendment, and when the act, thus amended, was returned to the house a violent conflict at once arose. An examination of the Congressional Globe for the second session of the Thirty-seventh congress, at pages 881 and 900, will show that both Mr. Spaulding, of New York, and Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, the leading members of the committee of ways and means, and one its chairman, united in denouncing the senate amendment in the bitterest and severest terms. They contended in stern and determined language that even the payment of interest in coin was an odious and unjust discrimination in favor of the bondholder and against the soldier, the sailor, and the citizen, who were compelled to receive the legal-tender currency, greatly depreciated by this very discrimination.

No one by a single word in that entire debate made the slightest pretense or intimation that the principal of our bonds was payable in coin. During the full term of seven eventful years thereafter there is not a platform of [illegible] political party in any state in the Union which makes such an assertion. No claim for such a construction of the law in behalf of the bondholder ever fell from the lips of a leading member of the party in power during the same length of time in either branch of congress, or anywhere else, as far as the public is advised. On the contrary, in many states, and notably in Ohio, the home of the president and secretary of the treasury, the dominant party in its state convention in 1868 expressed its deliberate "conviction that, according to the laws under which the 5-20 bonds were issued, said bonds should be paid in the currency of the country which may be legal tender when the government shall be prepared to redeem such bonds." On this doctrine the present chief magistrate and his secretary took their stand only nine years ago, and told the people that the doctrine was true. Not only so, but secretary Sherman, who now in his own report, warns us against repudiation, then gave in a letter dated March 20, 1868, and widely published his idea of what constituted a repudiator. Speaking on this subject, he says:

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, March 20, 1868.

DEAR SIR—I was glad to receive your letter. My personal interests are the same as yours, but, like you, I do not intend to be influenced by them. My construction of the law is the result of careful examination, and I feel quite sure an impartial court would confirm it if the case should be tried before a court. I send you my views, as fully stated in a speech. Your idea that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the "principal" in legal tenders is erroneous. I think the bondholder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he paid for the bonds. If the case is to be tested by the law I am right; if it is to be tested by Jay Cooke's advertisements, I am wrong. I hate repudiation or anything like it, but we ought not to be deterred from what is right for fear of undeserved epithets. If under the law as it stands the holders of five-twenties can only be paid in gold, the bondholder can demand only the kind of money he paid, then he is a repudiator and extortioner to demand money more valuable than he gave.

Truly yours, JOHN SHERMAN.

When it is remembered that the bondholder never paid a dollar in coin for a bond of any description, but purchased them all with government currency, which the government itself had depreciated by refusing to take it for custom dues and interest, the full meaning of this letter becomes very plain and forcible. It is not the offspring of impulse or inexperience. Its author was then chairman of the finance committee of this body, and he wrote, as he says, after "careful examination." By the light which he here throws upon the subject we may see the exact beginning of repudiation and behold the furtive and ravenous movements of the actual repudiators as they hurry up and down the precincts of legislation during the last nine years of our history. By its light, too, we behold the present secretary of the treasury, judged by his own words, as the chief of repudiators, foremost among the violators of contracts, and a leader among those who have in no instance kept the good faith of the government with its own people a moment after they found that bad faith would bring them richer gains. In less than ten months after this letter was written, and after the enunciation of the Ohio platform, the Hon. John Sherman, then a senator, advocated and procured the passage of the act of March, 1869, for the payment of all the bonds in coin which he had declared payable in currency, thereby establishing an open repudiation of a solemn and binding contract, and fastening an extortion of not less than $500,000,000 on the staggering industries of the country as the speculative profits of the operation. In the whole financial history of the civilized world no parallel can be found to this audacious deed of broken faith, deliberate treachery to the people, and national dishonesty. It stands out by itself, towering high above all common frauds, and dwarfing them in comparison with its own vast proportions. It will bear the names of those who enacted it to distant generations amidst the groans, the curses, and the lamentations of those who toil on the land and on the sea; and more deeply engraven than any other name will be forever found that of the secretary of the treasury as the author of what he himself said constituted the twofold crime of repudiation and extortion. Do I state the case too strongly? Does any senator think that I am not justified in the language I use or in the conclusion I state? If so, I pray him to recall the utterances of my lamented and distinguished predecessor in this body. When this monstrous act of repudiation was on its passage here in March, 1869, Senator Morton pointed out in the plainest and most explicit manner four distinct acts of congress under which the people had acquired a vested right to pay the 5-20 bonds in legal tender notes, and which were to be broken and set aside by the measure then under discussion. Among other things he said:

"And now I propound the question. It is either intended by this bill to make a new contract or it is not. If it is intended to make a new contract, I protest against it. We should do foul injustice to the government and the people of the United States after we have sold these bonds on an average for not more than 60 cents on the dollar now to make a new contract for the benefit of the holders."

Again he says:

"It gives to those laws a construction that I do not believe in and that I have shown is contradicted by at least four acts of congress."

And again Senator Morton exclaimed, with that power of statement which always so greatly characterized him:

"Sir, it is understood, I believe, that the passage of this kind of a bill would have the effect in Europe, where our financial questions are not well understood, to increase the demand, and that will enable the great operators to sell the bonds they have on hand at a profit. It is in the nature of a broker's operation. It is a bull movement intended to put up the price of bonds for the interest of parties dealing in them. This great interest is thundering at the doors of congress, and has for many months, and by every means attempting to drive us into legislation for the purpose of making money for the great operators. That is what it means and nothing else."

These are words of intense and overwhelming force. Where in the whole range of debate can be found a more revolting picture of bad faith inspired by base cupidity than is here portrayed by the greatest party leader perhaps ever known in the American congress? He has passed away, his voice is silent, and he rests after his life's fitful fever, but this accusation hurled against criminal wrong doing survives, and will continue to survive as long as it remains to be determined who have repudiated the sacred obligations and the plighted faith of the American republic. In far distant times generations now unborn while examining the sources of the burdens that have descended to them will read the charge made in this presence by the late senator from Indiana, that a combination of stock jobbers, as destitute of conscience as pirates, and inspired alone by greed for money, successfully thundered at these doors and finally drove this government into the most stupendous act of bad faith and legalized robbery ever practiced upon any people since the dawn of history. Five hundred millions made by the great operators and five hundred millions lost to the plowman and the mechanic, who have it all to pay!

And yet the authors, the instigators, the abettors of this crime, and the participators in its proceeds, fill the air with railing on the subject of repudiation, and point their fingers, stained with plunder, at honest men, as repudiators, because they believe that a contract for the benefit of the people should be held as sacred as one for the benefit of the bondholder. Sir, forbearance on this point has ceased to be a virtue. Those who have at all times labored to keep the faith of the government with its citizens, and its creditors alike, can not submit any longer to insult added to injury, to wholesale calumny added to national plunder. In some countries the habit prevails of building a cairn, a pile of stones, to mark the spot where some tragic event has happened. So let American tax-payers, whenever the act of March, 1869, is cited, each cast a stone upon it, to mark the place in American history where repudiation began, and where the rights of the people were mercilessly and treacherously slaughtered.

The next step in the systematic violation of its obligations to its own citizens by the American government was taken in the enactment of the law of July 14, 1870, known as the act for refunding the national debt. The motive which prompted this legislation has never yet been fully exposed. It has always been held up in the innocent guise of an attempt to reduce the rate of interest. It was in fact, however, the offspring of an apprehension remaining in certain minds even after the act of March, 1869, that the work of repudiating the contract for the payment of the 5-20 bonds might not be quite complete and final. These bonds were outstanding, and although the law of their payment had just been repealed, yet their holders feared that the people might sooner or later in turn repeal the faithless act of March, 1869, and declare again for the payment of these original bonds according to the original contract.

Therefore this act of July 14, 1870, called the refunding act, was brought in as supplemental to that of March, 1869, and as one of its joint measures, [illegible] payable in coin. By a sort of moral forgery on the American people the refunding act provides for the issue of new bonds to the amount of $1,500,000,000, with an agreement for coin payment written on their face; and then further provides that these new coin bonds shall be substituted for the original 5-20 bonds, one in exchange for the other, dollar for dollar. Avarice in the ordinary affairs of life has often tempted the holder of a deed, a will, a bond or other obligation for money or property to obtain a false construction, if possible, or even to change the terms of the instrument in order to enhance its value. Here both these objects have been obtained by the money power, first false construction of the contract, and next a direct change of its most vital terms. It is true that a reduction of the rate of interest on the new coin bonds is provided for in the act of July 14, 1870; two hundred millions of these bonds to bear 5 per cent., three hundred millions to bear 4½ per cent., and a thousand millions to bear 4 per cent. This reduction in the rate of interest has, at first, the appearance of a concession to the people, but a moment's calculation will show the amount thus saved utterly trifling in comparison with the enormous loss they suffer by the whole transaction. Nor is it to be supposed that the holders of the 5-20 6 per cent. bonds would surrender them voluntarily in exchange for bonds of a less rate of interest, unless they knew they were getting bonds of higher value and were to reap substantial advantages by the operation. To draw a different conclusion would be to reverse the well ascertained laws of human nature. The archives of history may be ransacked in vain to find a single instance where a moneyed investment relinquished without compulsion a superior for an inferior security. Such a thing was never known and never will be.

When, however, this elaborate scheme for the destruction of the rights of the people in regard to the payment of the 5-20 bonds was supposed to be finished; when the gateways of justice, of law and of public morality had all been closed and double barred and bolted against the tax-payers by the repudiating acts of March, 1869, and of July, 1870, did the practice of bad faith on the part of the government toward its own citizens stop even then? A finality appeared to have been attained. Proclamation was made in every quarter that a permanent settlement had been reached of the manner in which every dollar of our national debt should be paid. We were constantly reminded that from that day forward no law-abiding, honorable citizen would ever again seek to reopen or agitate the question. The bondholders were for the time being content, but they did not remain so a moment longer than a new opportunity presented itself for another encroachment upon the heavily taxed industries of the country. By both the laws of March, 1869, and July, 1870, framed in their interest and under their dictation, it is so plainly written that the bonds then outstanding and afterward to be issued were payable in coin—not in gold alone, nor silver alone, but in coin—that it is impossible to construct an argument against the proposition.

Indeed, it is almost equally difficult to make an argument in its favor, for a truth that is self-evident does not admit the ordinary methods of reason in its support. In the first section of the act of July 14, 1870, the bonds therein authorized are made "redeemable in coin of the present standard value." What is there here for construction? What word here taken from the law can the keenest casuist construe into even a doubtful meaning? We all know what the term coin means in connection with the use of the precious metals in the trade and commerce of the world. Even, however, if we did not, and we desired to seek a still plainer and more explicit guarantee, we have only to turn to the act of March, 1869. It declares its object in the following language:

"That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the government to discharge all its just obligations to the public creditors and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the laws, by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent, of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver."

False and perfidious as this law is known to be, yet it has at least one merit. It is absolutely clear and unambiguous. If human language can be made to convey an unequivocal meaning, then this law pledged the faith of the government to the people, and to the world, for the payment of the national debt in "gold and silver." It is a rule of court, however, in finding the true meaning of a law under consideration, to resort, if necessary, to the opinions of those by whom it was enacted. If we do so in the present instance we are amply rewarded by rich discoveries. William Pitt Fessenden, then a senator from Maine, and who also served as secretary of the treasury, used on this floor the following language:

"Sir, I meant what I said, and the congress of the United States meant what it said, that it would pay so many dollars. What was a dollar? A dollar was defined by statute. It was gold or silver coin."

Senator Morton, when pleading here for the payment of the bonds according to the original contract, made the following statement:

"When you return to specie payments you have nothing to pay any of your bonds with but gold or its equivalent, and therefore the exception here in favor of bonds payable expressly in currency is utterly worthless, because we shall have nothing then but gold and silver with which to pay these bonds."

But the evidence on this point would not be complete if I did not call Senator Sherman, now secretary of the treasury, to refute not only all the present enemies of silver as a coin of legal tender, but especially to refute and confound, as usual, his own subsequent views. In his recent report on the state of the finances, now on our tables, he says:

"If the market value of the silver in the new coin is less than the gold dollar, a forced payment in the new coin is a repudiation of a part of this debt."

Now it is repudiation to pay the national debt in anything but gold. What was his position when the act of March, 1869, was here on its passage? At that time he exclaimed:

"What is the first section of this bill? It is simply a solemn pledge of the United States that all the obligations of the United States, notes and bonds, shall be paid in gold and silver coin, except only those where the law expressly provides that they shall be paid in lawful money.

And again, in speaking of the resumption of specie payments, he says:

"The honor of the country, the good faith of the nation, the interests of the laborer, the rich and the poor, all classes, demand that we should resume specie payments as early as possible, and place all the obligations of the people of the United States upon the solid basis of gold and silver coin."

Sir, this theme becomes humiliating to every honest American mind. It fills with shame every honest, patriotic heart. The naked fact confronts us at every step that no pledge, however high, solemn or binding in law and morals, has been strong enough to compel the authors of our financial legislation to obey it. No sense of national honor or good faith has restrained for a single moment the unbridled avarice of idle, interest-bearing capital whenever it has been tempted, like some hungry, marauding animal, to break over the barriers erected between it and new fields of spoliation that lie beyond. The silver dollar came to us with the birth of our government. It was devised as a unit of value by Thomas Jefferson, and adopted by congress in the days of Washington, Hamilton and Morris. It stood as honored as gold through every storm that beat upon this government. It is associated with all our development, our strength, our growth and our glory. With it as currency, more than any other, the picket lines of civilization have pushed westward. The pioneer in the shadow of the great forests or on the wide prairies toiled to lay it by, one by one, until the coveted sum of one hundred lay before him. Then tightening the girths of his saddle, he rode with speed to the distant land office, where the government took his one hundred silver dollars for eighty acres of land, which thenceforward became that most blessed spot on earth—a home; a home where trees were planted, where children were born and grew to be men and women, and then in turn went forth into the great world, still to the west, there to live over in privation the lives of the father and mother left behind.

The silver dollar is peculiarly the laboring man's dollar, as far as he may desire specie. When specie payments were authorized before the war it was the favorite currency with the people, and it will be so again whenever a general circulation of coin is obtained, if that shall ever happen. Throughout all the financial panics that have assailed this country no man has been bold enough to raise his hand to strike it down; no man has ever dared to whisper of a contemplated assault upon it; and when the hour of its danger and destruction drew nigh, when the 12th day of February, 1873, approached, the day of doom to the American dollar, the dollar of our fathers, how silent was the work of the enemy! Not a sound, not a word, no note of warning to the American people that their favorite coin was about to be destroyed as money; that the greatest financial revolution of modern times was in contemplation and about to be accomplished against their highest and dearest rights! The tax-payers of the United States were no more notified or consulted on this momentous measure than the slaves on a southern plantation before the war, when their master made up his mind to increase their task or to change them from a corn to a cotton field. Never since the foundation of this government has a law of such vital and tremendous import, or indeed of any importance at all, crawled into our statute books so furtively and so noiselessly as this. Its enactment there was as completely unknown to the people, and indeed to four-fifths of congress itself, as the presence of a burglar in the house at midnight is to its sleeping inmates. This was rendered possible partly because the clandestine movement was so utterly unexpected, and partly from the nature of the bill in which it occurred. The silver dollar of American history was demonetized in an act entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices and coinage of the United States." The avowed and ostensible purpose of this act is set forth by Dr. Linderman, the director of the mint, in his report upon money and legal tender. After citing very fully the legislation of this country on the subjects of mints and coinage, he says:

"There were, however, provisions of law, conflicting in their character, as to the relative powers and duties of the secretary of the treasury and the director of the mint. To remedy this and to consolidate coinage enactments were the chief objects of the act approved February 12, 1873, revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States."

This act embraces sixty-seven sections, and fills twelve closely printed pages of the seventeenth volume of the United States Statutes at Large. From this voluminous and prolix measure, proclaiming, as it did, other and totally different objects to accomplish, it was only necessary to silently omit the few words that for nearly a hundred years had floated the old familiar dollar as a full legal tender down the stream of time. This was done in the fifteenth section, which I quote in full in order that the people may see for themselves exactly how this great wrong was effected. It reads as follows:

"That the silver coins of the United States shall be a trade dollar, a half dollar or fifty cent piece, a quarter dollar or twenty-five cent piece, a dime or ten cent piece; and the weight of the trade dollar shall be 420 grains troy; the weight of the half dollar shall be twelve grams (grammes) and one-half of a gram (gramme;) the quarter dollar and the dime shall be respectively one-half and one fifth of the weight of said half dollar; and said coins shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding five dollars in any one payment."

Thus it will be seen that in declaring what the silver coin of the United States should be, the dollar, so long imbedded in our history, was dropped, literally thrown away as useless, and another coin, styled a trade dollar, of no service to the people as a legal tender, was inserted in its place; or, as the director of the mint expresses it—

"Under the provisions of this act the coinage and issue was discontinued of the silver dollar of 412½ grains, the three cent silver piece, the five cent silver piece, and the two cent bronze piece."

And by a subsequent act of congress, July 22, 1876, the legal tender quality of the trade dollar for even the small amount of five dollars was repealed, and now it is not a legal tender for anything, or any amount.

But, sir, having pointed out the false pretenses under cover of which the American silver dollar was eliminated from our money system, it yet remains to inquire into the real reasons for such an act. In the first place, had silver failed in its functions as a specie basis any more than gold? Had it been found any less capable than its twin metal in upholding a paper currency on which the commerce and business of the world has been transacted since the beginning of civilization? These two metals of gold and silver have come down to us together, from the days of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. They were in great abundance and in high favor when Israel built her temple and adorned the city of Jerusalem. They crept along the shores and islands of the Mediterranean, hand in hand, as arbitrary factors in human affairs. They spread over Europe, as inseparable allies, during the dark and barbarous ages that intervened between the downfall of Rome and the discovery of the art of printing, the revival of learning, in the fifteenth century. The cupidity of man has delved into the earth, toiled across the stormy seas, broken solemn treaties, sworn false oaths, murdered his fellow man, and bartered away his soul alike for them both. The Spaniard and the Portuguese swept whole races in the West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America, first into slavery and then out of existence, in their accursed greed and thirst for gold and silver. Throughout all our colonial history these metals were linked together in an embrace that no convulsion could tear asunder. And when our government emerged, weary and blood stained, from the revolution, our fathers found them both standing together on our threshold as a mighty tradition of all the past. They were adopted together as our measure of values because other nations had done the same. They entered their career as American money together, equal in dignity before the law. By the constitution of the United States they were introduced into each new incoming state of our expanding Union on terms of absolute equality. We find by article 1, section 10 of that instrument that—

"No state shall * * * coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts."

From that day to this I challenge every page of American history to show a single instance in which the silver dollar has not been as brave, as firm and as reliable as the gold dollar. I challenge the sad records of every financial alarm, panic or crash that ever befell us to show where for a single day or hour silver was not as intrepid and fearless in the money market as gold.

From 1792 to 1873, from the coinage of the American silver dollar to the day of its insidious destruction, 81 years, gold and silver never fluctuated in their relation to each other but a fraction over 3 per cent., and during most of that time silver money ranked higher than gold money, and did so the day it was destroyed. It is true that both these metals, so precious in the traditions of mankind, broke down at once when this government was called on to fight for its life, when the ultimate and extreme necessity of the hour demanded a money stronger than them both, based on the confidence of the people that their government would live and not die; yet when they fell, they fell together. Neither the one, nor the other, nor both united were sufficient to make even a respectable struggle for national existence, and they abandoned the field on the first roar of hostile cannon, but silver did not flee any sooner nor get under cover any quicker than gold. It may then, I think, be safely assumed in the light of all experience that the real reason for demonetizing silver is not to be found in its failure to be the peer under all circumstances, in all ages, and in all nations of the other precious metal which has now become so strangely, so suddenly, and so surreptitiously exalted in the eyes of the money power as the sole standard of values.

Pursuing our inquiry, therefore, on this point we come next upon one of the principal reasons now assigned for abandoning silver coin as money. It is true that the sincerity of this reason is open to the suspicion which always taints an argument brought forward as an after thought to justify an act which evaded all discussion at the time of its passage, but nevertheless it shall be fairly considered even at this late day. It is now urged with great vehemence by the advocates of the gold standard alone, that because here and there a European monarchy with the hardest worked and poorest paid peasantry on the face of the earth has banished silver, we are called upon by our business relations to do the same. It is urged that we are to follow and not lead in the affairs of the world. According to this argument we are to trail in the footsteps of governments whose principles we denounce, and whose laboring people are fleeing in constant streams from their shores to our own, in order to escape oppression and starvation.

Sir, no one disputes the fact that all civilized governments have certain communities of interest, but to my mind the American republic is less dependent for its strength and prosperity on the conduct and politics of other nations than any other government now in existence. Nature, in her most lavish mood has conspired to make the American people, in fact as well as in name, independent people. Our place on the map of the globe is an isolated one. Mighty oceans stretch out between us and all the first class powers of the world. What foreign neighbors we have on our immediate borders are weak and unimportant. We are not only substantially alone as a political power on the North American continent, and separated by long distances from all the great nations of the earth, but we possess within ourselves, in unfailing abundance, every article and every element of national wealth and glory. Our vast domain will feed uncounted millions, mountains of iron and of all other useful ores respond to every call of enterprise, progress, while the intelligent industry of man, if not paralyzed by bad government, will forever supply all his wants, comforts and luxuries. On such a theater our greatest resource is self reliance, and we have but little need of examples or alliances furnished by less fortunate nations.

Admitting, however, the argument, for the sake of meeting it, that our financial policy in regard to a specie basis ought to be in harmony with the rest of the world, let us examine into the actual facts as they now exist in the various money systems of every people with whom we have even the slightest commercial intercourse. Has silver in the general trade and business of nations fallen into such discredit that we are compelled to cast it aside in order to keep pace with a wide spread financial revolution? Is it held in such dishonor as a medium of traffic throughout the world that we can no longer uphold it with credit to ourselves? On the contrary a careful estimate shows that silver is an enormous and overwhelming favorite. Of the entire trading and commercial populations of the whole earth [illegible] more people have silver alone as their standard of values, and transact all their business upon it as a specie basis, than those who have gold alone for similar purposes. From the same sources of information we learn that 744,200,000 more people use silver alone than use gold and silver both as their metallic currency. In this last statement I include the population of the United States as using the double standard, for we shall return to it at once, as far at least as a specie basis can now exist. The great fact, therefore, is that in the mighty bulk of intelligent mankind more than four times as many people have chosen silver as have chosen gold, and more than five times as many have chosen silver as have chosen gold and silver together.

The following table giving the financial systems and the populations of the various governments of the world will be found in the main correct:

Nations under gold alone.	Population
Great Britain	32,000,000
Canada	4,000,000
Australia	2,000,000
Portugal	4,250,000
Turkey in Europe and Asia	29,500,000

It will be seen from this statement that silver coin, as money, not only meets the desires of four-fifths of the human race, but that those who use it as a standard occupy more than three-quarters of the inhabited parts of the globe. Germany is perhaps prematurely placed in the list of nations using gold alone. It is true she has attempted to adopt the gold standard, but there are still two hundred millions of silver currency in the hands of her people, and they are reluctant to give it up and see it driven away from fatherland. Whether the empire will be entirely successful in depriving its subjects of this favorite money yet remains to be proven. In view of all the foregoing facts, however, in view of the history and condition of the world on this question, the enemies of the silver dollar in the United States who, having first destroyed it, seek now to justify themselves by slandering the reputation of its metal in distant lands, must stand before their injured countrymen covered with shame and confusion. They are utterly overwhelmed and beaten from their position by the general testimony of the civilized races of men, and we are left at this point to follow them next to their final and in fact real reason for their assault upon silver money.

Sir, I touch now upon an issue as old as human society and as universal as the loaning of money at interest and the investment of capital for income. Two classes have existed in every age of history on the question of money. All such as plow, sow and reap; who spin, weave, and make merchandise for sale; who manage and work the caverns of coal and iron, and the blast furnaces and forges; who construct railroads, build ships, and found cities; all such as are in any way pushing on the cause of progress and material development, and who desire to keep their capital, whatever it may be, and especially that greatest of all capital, the bone and muscle of the laborer, actively employed, constitute one class. Those who have stepped aside from the active, moving column of affairs and withdrawn themselves and all they own from the trade and business of the world, intending thenceforward to fasten their idle wealth on the productions of labor as a consumer, and not as an assistance, constitute the other. Of these two classes those who compose the first desire money to be plentiful and cheap, for they are working to obtain it while those who compose the latter desire money to be scarce and dear, because they already have it in abundance to loan and to invest at high rates of interest and profit. And it was in the real and actual interest of this last powerful class that silver was demonetized in February, 1873, not because it was less valuable as money than gold, nor because such a change was demanded by the policies of foreign nations, but simply because retired capital desired to diminish the amount of money of every kind circulating in the hands of the people.

Silver was selected as the victim for sacrifice on that occasion because it was thought, on account of certain circumstances yet to be noticed, that it could be more successfully assailed than the other kinds of money then in existence. The managers of the great money centers in this country and in Europe saw with avaricious alarm the bright streams of silver beginning to increase in volume and in value as they flowed from the mouths of our mines, and now we hear from their angry throats, and from an apparently still angrier newspaper press which they control, a cry without ceasing against silver inflation arising from an overproduction of the metal. They have heretofore filled the world with their hostile clamor mainly against a paper currency not immediately convertible into coin of intrinsic value, but it now appears that there can be, in their own amiable language, an insane inflation of a currency which has this very intrinsic value itself. We have heard much talk to prove that gold and silver are the only real money, that they have an absolute value as such everywhere and at all times; but we now discover that even these precious metals may become more abundant than is agreeable to those who want the purchasing power of money increased by lessening the quantity in circulation until fifty dollars will buy in a farm worth a thousand under the foreclosure of a mortgage. Is it true, however, that for the genuine interests of the American people, for their advancement in trade and development, and for the prosperity of our commerce throughout the world, too much silver has been produced in the United States or anywhere else? Has silver, as now claimed, ever threatened to pour into the channels of business such floods and torrents as would unsettle and sweep away all the landmarks of safety? We will examine this question.

The history of the production of the precious metals is one of great and prevailing interest. Although they have been arbitrarily determined upon as the money of mankind, yet it has never been possible for the highest human intelligence to foretell their supply or to say with certainty that their production will not fail altogether. The quantity of a circulating medium sufficient to meet the legitimate demands of trade can be estimated, but who has ever been able to look into the mines and declare how far their veins of ore extend or how soon, they will cease to yield? Who has ever been able to point out where new mines may be opened into the hidden riches of the earth to take the place of those that are worn out, sterile, and barren? The result has been that while the precious metals have been declared the standard of values, they have themselves always been an unknown quantity, and the irregularity, uncertainty, and insufficiency of their production have caused frequent and crushing disasters in all countries and in every period of history, and have often compelled the strongest governments of ancient and modern times to entirely abandon them.

It is not my purpose, however, to dwell on this point further than to meet the argument based upon an alleged overproduction of silver in recent years. From a report made not long since by a commission in the British parliament it appears, as nearly as can be estimated, that the entire production of silver throughout the world during the last twenty-five years has reached about $[illegible],000. The increase in its production during that period arose from about $40,000,000, in 1852, to $80,000,000, in 1875, and the annual amount produced at this time may be placed at $[illegible]. Of these amounts South America, Mexico, and the United States produced all exceeding about $30,000,000 a year, arising from the silver resources of all other countries. In our own country the development of this great agency of national prosperity has all taken place in the last eighteen years, substantially in the last ten.

The following estimate, made by the commissioner for mining statistics, shows the annual production of silver and its increase in the United States:

1860	$150,000
[illegible]	[illegible]
1861	2,000,000
1862	4,500,000
1863	8,500,000
1864–1869 (average)	11,000,000
1870	16,000,000
1871	22,000,000
1872	25,000,000
1873	35,750,000
1874	[illegible]
1875	32,000,000

Estimating the production of 1876 and 1877 the same as 1875, and we find that the entire amount of silver yielded by the mines of the United States since they began to pay for working them, has reached but a trifle over the comparatively small sum of $250,000,000. This is less than one-half the amount of our present volume of currency; yet when those who are interested in making and keeping a scarcity of money in circulation noticed an increase of only $12,000,000 from 1870 to 1872, they took the alarm which resulted in the act of 1873, proscribing and outlawing it from the companionship of gold as money. It will not do to say that the demand for silver had failed, for aside from what our own people needed at home, the demand from abroad was so great that in the very act of demonetizing it here provision was made for the coinage of a dollar that we found necessary for our foreign trade. It was a dollar of the weight of 420 grains troy, and the secretary of the treasury, in his recent report, says:

"This provision was made at a time when such a dollar was worth in the market 102.12 in gold, and was designed for the use of trade in China, where silver was the only standard."

The great demand for this coin, especially in our trade with China, is shown by "reports made by the two leading foreign banks of China, the Oriental bank and the Hong Kong and Shanghai banking corporation, dated respectively January 31 and 30, 1877, and furnished by the United States consulate at Hong Kong to the secretary of the treasury." I find these reports quoted by the director of the mint, and I extract from them the following statements:

"The United States trade dollar has been well received in China, and is eagerly welcomed in those parts of the country where the true value of the coin is known. It is a legal tender at the ports of Foo-choo and Canton, in China, and also at Saigon and Singapore; and, although not legally current in this colony, it is eagerly sought after by the Chinese, and in the bazaars it is seldom to be purchased. In proof of the estimation in which the trade dollar is held in the south of China, we need only state that the bulk of the direct exchange business between Hong Kong and San Francisco, which is very considerable, is done in this coin, the natives preferring it to the Mexican dollar. Late advices from San Francisco report that so great is the demand for trade dollars for shipment to China that the California mint is unequal to the task of turning out the coin fast enough to satisfy requirements. * * * My opinion is that ultimately it will be current all over China. It is the best coin that ever has been imported, and, being produced at the fountain head of silver, can be laid down more cheaply than any other dollar. * * * China requires many millions of dollars annually, and while the clean Mexican dollar will be imported for the north of China, the trade dollar will be imported for the south. I would roughly estimate that San Francisco steamers will bring from four to six lacs of trade dollars (from four to six hundred thousand) each fortnightly trip all the year round."

The secretary of the treasury also informs us that since the trade dollar was authorized it has been coined to the large amount of $20,710,400, mainly to meet this and other foreign demands for silver money. It is true, however, that he further states that the export demand for the trade dollar has now almost if not quite ceased. It is not strange that this should be so, when this government has done all in its power to dishonor it at home; first limiting it as a legal tender to the insignificant sum of $5, and hastening soon afterward to strip it of even this small badge of respectability. Distant people naturally suspicious of our institutions, would necessarily reject a coin on which we ourselves have placed such a stigma of disgrace, however great, as we have seen, may be their demand for silver money. In fact, no artifice, no cunning device has been spared to bring the silver dollar into contempt and to drive it out of existence, although the American people and the people of all lands and of every form of civilization plead for its restoration to favor and to an ample circulation.

If there are some, however, who still think that these assaults on silver were inspired by any other motive than the fear of too much money, allow me to recall an incident in financial history full of teaching on this point. When the revelation of gold took place in California, and on the other side of the world in Australia about the same time, an impulse was given to the progress of mankind greater than has been produced by any other one event since Columbus discovered America. It quickened every energy of labor, aroused all the great industries everywhere into new and startling activity, revived the drooping sails of commerce in every sea, and sent the loaded caravans of railroad transportation flying in every direction over the face of the earth. The whole world rejoiced with one exception. The creditor class in every clime beneath the sun looked on in sullen distrust and dread. And in 1856, when the production of gold had reached its highest point, and when it was supposed that it would continue to increase, this class broke forth in the different countries of Europe in favor of demonetizing gold, because the supply was making money too plentiful. De Quincey, Chevalier and other writers made earnest and elaborate arguments to show that the increase in the flow of gold was so great that soon it would be within the easy reach of all classes, and then its power to purchase labor and property in large quantities for very small sums would be forever gone. Germany and Austria and some other European governments heeded these arguments, and in 1857 actually demonetized gold in order to maintain the scarcity of money. The reason why this question did not seriously agitate the financial circles of the United States is to be found in the fact that at that time we had no great creditor class in this country; we had no stupendous national debt held as an investment for fixed incomes; no such state, municipal and corporation debts as have since filled all the stock markets with interest bearing bonds, and which are now a draining tax on all the labor and production of the country. Had our situation been then as it is now we would have seen the holders of government securities, and all other bonds wherein the payment of money from the many to the few was nominated, as badly affrighted in this country at what was called an over production of gold as the holders of similar securities and bonds were in Europe. The laws which govern the human heart in its love of gain are the same everywhere. The creditor class is not so much concerned what coin or other material shall constitute money as it is that there shall be no redundancy after its demands are paid.

The report of the monetary commission submitted to this body in March last by the distinguished senator from Nevada (Mr. Jones) comments on this fact as follows:

"In all the European discussions, after 1848 and prior to the German demonetization of silver and its consequences, the point made was not that either metal had depreciated relatively to the other, but that by reason of extraordinary supplies of gold from California and Australia, supplemented, about 1862, by new supplies of silver from Nevada, both metals had depreciated relatively to labor and commodities, and that those having fixed incomes were being injured by a rise in prices. So long as a double standard existed a new supply of either metal was only an addition to and only affected the value of the general mass of money and not the relative value of the metals.

"The 'fall in gold,' which Chevalier lamented in 1857, was its fall in relation to property. He pointed out how the double standard had prevented any change from occurring in its relation to silver and how it would continue to do so until the silver of double standard countries was exhausted. In order, therefore, to protect the interests of the income classes, it was claimed to be necessary to demonetize one of the metals, and gold being the metal which then promised the most abundant yield was selected for the purpose.

"It was the depreciation in the value of the precious metals as a standard of money, supposed to have already resulted from the new supplies of gold, which made [illegible] the conspicuous advocate of the demand that one of the metals should be demonetized in order to 'relieve the situation.'" It appears, therefore, that gold, even gold, the very god of a sordid idolatry in our midst at this time, has committed the mortal sin of inflation, and has been cursed and condemned on that account by the usurers and money changers as well as its more modest companions, silver and paper. And if now both the precious metals threatened to increase beyond the wishes and interests of this class they would be earnestly inquiring and scheming into some plan by which they could demonetize gold and silver alike, and substitute diamonds or some other scarcer and more difficult commodity to obtain as the basis of specie payments and the money in which all debts due to them should be paid.

There remains, however, one other argument in connection with the alleged overproduction and inflation of silver which requires attention. In the name of good faith it has been urged here in this body and elsewhere that although silver is specified as plainly as gold in all our financial legislation, yet it was produced in such meager quantities at the time our national debt was created that the purchasers of our bonds could not have reasonably supposed they were ever to receive it in payment of the same, notwithstanding the law expressly said they should. In other words, it is an argument to release the bondholder from the absolute, definitely written words of the law on the ground that he could not foresee that the government would ever have silver enough to fulfill the law. This is the highest, boldest note of repudiation ever heard in this country; an open admission of the law and an open, square demand for its violation.

No facts or surrounding circumstances at the time the contract was made can for a moment justify such a flagrant abrogation of its most explicit terms, but even if outside conditions, not expressed in its face, could be set up now to defeat it, I assert that the conditions alleged by the advocates of this argument never existed at all. I assert that when the law for the payment of the public debt was construed by the famous act of March, 1869, to mean payment in gold and silver both, the production of our silver mines for that year was $11,625,000, and had annually averaged that amount since 1861. It is contended that the purchasers of our bonds overlooked, when they were first issued the feeble supply of silver. Did an annual average production of nearly $12,000,000 for the space of five years preceding the act of March, 1869, likewise escape their attention, when they were framing that act in their own interest and to suit themselves? But again, by the refunding act of July 14, 1870, authorizing the issue of new coin bonds to be substituted for the original 5-20 bonds, making thereby the new contract of that date, it was agreed that the bonds issued by virtue of that act should be payable in silver as well as gold.

During that very year, the year of the contract which is to be enforced in all its demands against the flesh and blood of labor, the generous silver mines of the United States yielded $16,000,000. Was not this sum sufficient to put the authors of that enactment, the bondholders in Europe and America, on their guard against making a solemn stipulation to receive silver money in payment of their bonds, unless they intended at the same time to do so? During the years 1871 and 1872 many hundred millions of bonds were issued under the act of July 14, 1870, and received in exchange for 5-20s. They were all payable by the express terms of the law either in silver or gold, at the option of the government; and the production of silver, when they were thus voluntarily received, amounted, according to our mining statistics in 1871, to $23,000,000, and in 1872 to $28,750,000. It is no doubt true that the product of these two latter years excited the fear of a silver inflation which has since deepened into the absurd panic now prevailing, but how can it with any fairness be pretended that the bondholder is released from receiving silver according to his agreement, on the ground that we were not producing that metal when the laws governing the contract were enacted?

And if it was not coined in amounts as large as it has been since, yet it was well known that the law made its coinage free and unlimited, and no one has a right to complain of the enforcement of a law of which he had full knowledge at the time his rights and liabilities accrued. The argument is unsound in law and unsustained by the facts. In fact, the entire movement demonetizing silver is to be explained solely and alone on the principle of contraction; and this brings me, in this connection, to consider more fully that destructive principle, and especially to examine the policy and the effects of the law of January 14, 1875, for the resumption of specie payments by an enforced contraction of the non-interest bearing legal tender currency of the country. The law of February, 1873, taking away silver money from the people, and the law of January, 1875, fixing the day, not less than a year in advance, when the greenback shall also perish, are twin monsters of evil, born of the same parentage and linked together for the destruction of all money save gold. In their discussion, therefore, they are entitled to a joint recognition.

Sir, in the entire catalogue of crimes against human society not one can be found so awful in all its consequences, both immediate and remote, as a government commits when it deliberately destroys the money of its own citizens. Wherever in all the regions of time such measures have been accomplished, the horrors of history have taken place. No shrinkage in the amount of money, no contraction of the currency in the hands of the people was ever enforced by law to any considerable extent, except amidst broken lives, ruined hopes, despair, lost honor, and all the vices springing from the lowest depths of poverty and human misery. The worst ingredients of war, pestilence, and famine all flow from the act of a government violently tearing from the hands of the laboring masses the money they so much need. Murder, theft, robbery, prostitution, forgery, embezzlement, and fraud of every hue and mien curse the land that is deprived of a full and sufficient circulating medium on which to give employment to its toiling men and women. The social statistics of mankind will show that wherever the supply of money has been scant and labor poorly paid, or left entirely idle, there the gallows-tree has borne most frequently its horrid burden; there the jails and the penitentiaries and all the haunts of infamy have been most crowded. The well-clothed and well-fed Pharisee may ostentatiously thank God that he is better than such as these, but he is not. When the strong hand of the government is engaged in abolishing money, and thus interposing between the laboring man and the laboring woman and their last chance for bread by honest work, their sins for self-preservation are less odious to their merciful Father than the prayers of the usurers who have driven them to ruin.

It is said in highly intelligent quarters that at this hour there are three millions of our own people unemployed, who have no other dependence for food and shelter than the labor of their hands, and one-half of whom are now tramping from place to place for crumbs of charity. Pitiable and dangerous spectacle! It never happened before in this land of bounteous nature, nor would it now but for the fact that in these later days a class has arisen in our midst which is benefited by the scarcity of money, and the consequent destruction of all those great industries which afford employment to labor. Nor does this frightful spectacle appeal alone to our sympathy with human misery, deep and indescribable as that must be. The loss to the country in actual wealth arising from the absolute idleness of three million persons is very great. It has been estimated that at one dollar per day as wages it would amount to enough in two years to liquidate our public debt. The United States monetary commission make the following valuable observations in their recent report:

"The worst effect, however, economically considered, of falling prices is not upon existing property, nor upon debtors, but upon laborers, whom it deprives of employment and consigns to poverty, and upon society, which it deprives of that vast sum of wealth which resides potentially in the vigorous arms of the idle workman. A shrinking volume of money transfers existing property unjustly, and causes a concentration and diminution of wealth. It also impairs the value of existing property by eliminating from it that important element of value conferred upon it by the skill, energy and care of the debtors from whom it is wrested. But it does not destroy any existing property, while it does absolutely annihilate all the values producible by the labor which it condemns to idleness. The estimate is not an extravagant one that there are now in the United States 2,000,000 persons willing to work, but who are idle because they can not obtain employment. This vast poverty-stricken army is increasing and will continue to increase as long as falling prices shall continue to separate money capital, the fund out of which wages are paid, from labor, and to discourage its investment in other forms of property.

"Labor, co-operating with the forces of nature, is the source of all wealth, and to reach the highest degree of effectiveness, it must be classified through the aid of capital and supported by capital during the process of production and be measured and paid in money, each unit of which is a sight draft on all other forms of property, bearing a value in proportion to the number of such drafts. In order that any country may reach the maximum of material prosperity, certain conditions are indispensable. All its labor, [illegible] by the most approved machinery and appliances, must be employed, and the fruits of industry must be justly distributed. These conditions are only possible when capital is absolutely protected against violence and free from illegitimate legislative interference, and when the laborer is protected in his natural right to dispose of his labor in such manner as he may prefer. They are utterly impossible when the money stock is shrinking and the money value of property and services is declining. Howsoever great the natural resources of a country may be, however genial its climate, fertile its soil, ingenious, enterprising and industrious its inhabitants, or free its institutions, if the value of money is shrinking and prices are falling, its merchants will be overwhelmed with bankruptcy, its industries will be paralyzed, and destitution and distress will prevail.

"The instinct of self-interest is the mainspring of industrial and commercial activity. It is the animating motive alike of the capitalist and of the laborer. Without it, no labor would be performed, nor would capital have an existence. If money capital is withdrawn from productive enterprises, it is from the apprehension of loss and from the same instinct of thrift through which it was acquired. It is natural that the money capitalist should exact from labor all he can in exchange for his money, and that the laborer should exact all the money he can in exchange for his labor. What is known as the conflict between capital and labor, is not so much a conflict between other forms of capital and labor as it is between money and labor. Indeed, the conflict between money and other forms of capital is as distinctly marked and quite as severe as the conflict between money and labor, and in that conflict other forms of capital suffer fully as much as labor, the only difference being that they are better able to endure losses. Other forms of capital must be constantly converted into money in order to pay wages and to meet other demands incident to industrial enterprises. When the stock of money is shrinking and prices are falling, this conversion can only be made at rates continually growing more unfavorable, while at the same time the products of the laborer for whose wages sacrifices have been made are also undergoing a shrinkage of money value. Thus loss and sacrifice are encountered at every turn, and the owners of other capital than money shrink from the friction of exchange, withdraw from productive enterprises, and only exchange as much of their property for money as will suffice to meet the necessary expenditures of living, which are reduced to the most economical level, as it is principal and not income which is being consumed. Little more labor will be employed under these circumstances than is sufficient to support the owners of capital on this parsimonious basis, and as a consequence the labor market will be overstocked, and the competition between laborers will reduce wages to a starvation level. But during this period, when property is being sacrificed to meet current necessities, and laborers are being remitted to idleness and destitution, money fattens on the general disaster."

When, therefore, on the 14th of January, 1875, this government, having already destroyed silver money, determined to destroy within the next four years its outstanding legal paper currency until there should be no more of it left than could be redeemed in gold coin alone on the 1st day of January, 1879, it became responsible for all the appalling consequences that have followed. An attempt to force the resumption of specie payments with gold and silver both as our metallic basis would be a cruel failure at this time; but the proposition to contract, reduce, cancel and burn our present amount of currency until it harmonizes with the meager margin of gold which we can command has stricken the arm of labor with paralysis, dried up the fountains of business prosperity, and placed hollow-eyed want in more than a million hitherto happy homes. The demonetization of silver was purposely accomplished before the policy of specie resumption was declared, in order to make money as scarce as possible in reaching by forced contraction the single standard of gold. We could reach the double standard easier than the single one, but the purpose of the money power was the diminution of money in circulation, and it better accomplished that object by first outlawing silver and then seeking the specie basis composed of but one metal. It can not be denied that great progress has been made in this work of destroying moneys, and all values, except the value of money, which is made greater by being made scarcer and harder to obtain.

At the date of the act of January, 1875, our volume of currency was already reduced in proportion to population far below European nations, where labor commands barely sustenance wages. We had nearly one-half less per capita than Germany, England or France. Financial distress was even then upon us. Business wrecks were afloat on every hand. We had the warnings of the nine preceding years during which the money of our country had been diminished nearly $400,000,000 by contraction, and during which time the liabilities for commercial failures and bankruptcies had arisen from an average of about $11,000,000 per annum to nearly $300,000,000. A panic had just swept over the country with sufficient havoc and ruin to extort the admission from General Grant in his message of December, 1873, that our volume of currency was too small for our business, even at its dullest stages. We had less than $735,000,000, not counting fractional currency, and yet against the supplications of every active business and industry a still further reduction was dictated, and has been effected to the extent of nearly one hundred millions. If, however, the law for the enforced resumption of specie payments is to stand unrepealed on our statute books, then there still remains a work of destruction to be done in this country far more extensive, dangerous and full of wretchedness than we have yet witnessed. That law declares that—

"On and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, the secretary of the treasury shall redeem in coin the United States legal tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50."

The term coin here used means only gold now, and the law, in order to enable the secretary of the treasury to carry out this plan for retiring the greenback money from circulation, authorizes him to sell interest-bearing bonds to obtain gold and to use such surplus revenues as he may have on hand.

The government has undertaken two things; first, the shrinkage of the amount of currency, and second, the possession of gold in such quantity that the one can be converted into the other. The smaller, therefore, the quantity of gold that can be obtained, the greater must be the reduction of paper money in order to rest dollar for dollar on such a narrow metallic basis. It becomes important in this view to know what has been done under the law of January, 1875, in accumulating gold as a basis for specie payments a year hence. Many efforts have been made to ascertain the exact amount of actual gold which this government now owns, none of which have been entirely successful, for the reason that the sum is so small, but it is perfectly safe to state, after deducting the amount due as interest on bonds, that there are not this day fifty millions of gold in the United States treasury and in all the national banks besides. If resumption is to take place on that basis, the gigantic task of this poor pittance will be to stand good for the redemption of $350,007,388.50 of legal tender notes, commonly called greenbacks, and $321,874,256 of national bank note circulation, making in all the sum of $641,881,544.50. It is very plain, even to those who believe that $1 in gold is sufficient for the circulation and redemption of $3 in paper, that our present condition of $1 in gold to about $14 in paper must be radically revolutionized against the day fixed for specie resumption. What probability is there of any large increase of gold in the vaults of the treasury? Will specie resumption be reached within the present year by leveling up the amount of gold in our possession or by leveling down the amount of currency in circulation? No one claims that foreign nations will supply our want of gold.

On the contrary, nearly all the produce of our mines goes to them to pay interest on public securities held abroad. But even if this government could turn the entire gold yield of every American mine into the treasury between this and the 1st day of January, 1879, the supply would fall far short of a specie basis for one-tenth part of our present circulation. During the year that has just closed, 1877, the gold coinage of our mints reached only the sum of $44,078,199. The bulk of this sum went abroad, a portion of it is hoarded by private parties, and a small fraction, perhaps, found its way into the coffers of the government. An examination of the report of the director of the mint for 1877 shows that the entire coinage of gold in the United States to the present time amounts to but $983,159,694. This is the slow and comparatively small production of gold money in the long space of 84 years—nearly the whole lifetime of the American republic; less than $1,000,000,000; less than enough to pay for one single crop of agricultural products in the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska, and less than one-half enough to pay the national debt as it exists to-day. Is there no lesson of wisdom in these figures for the statesman of these times? They are the experience of almost a century. Do they encourage any reasonable being to believe that gold enough can be obtained by this government in the next twelve months to redeem its currency and to enable its citizens to do business on a specie basis? Is there anywhere in America or in the whole universe a new fountain of gold, pouring forth increased volumes, from which our parched and scanty resources may be replenished?

The very reverse is the fact; old fountains are drying up; their streams are diminishing; no wizard's rod can smite the earth and indicate where new supplies will break forth. But the requirements of the government for gold constitute but a small portion of the demand. The American people at this time are enormously in debt—more than any other people beneath the sun. Their state and municipal debts of all kinds, and their private debts to each other, have been variously estimated at from six to ten thousand million dollars. Every dollar of this vast indebtedness will call for gold coin after the 1st day of January, 1879. Where are the people to obtain sufficient gold with which to pay their debts and transact their business? The question is one that may well terrify every man who owes his neighbor anything, for there is not now, and never has been at any one time, enough gold in circulation as money on the whole face of the earth to meet this demand. If, therefore, specie payments are in reality to be resumed in January, 1879, the government has yet to destroy at least two-thirds of its present paper circulation, and the people on this reduced basis, and under the gold standard alone, will be compelled to meet their debts and their taxes, which have undergone no diminution.

Sir, here the bad faith of this government toward the great mass of its citizens culminates. To the people in debt the destruction of their money is the virtual increase of their indebtedness to the extent of the money destroyed. If a man makes a contract to pay $100 on a given day, and has just that sum of money in his possession at the date of the contract, he is doing business securely. If, however, $50 are taken from him by force, and he is left to meet his contract on one-half the amount needed, his bankruptcy necessarily follows. The American people were supplied with one amount of currency on which to control debts, both public and private, and they are now to have another and far smaller amount with which to pay them. They entered into all their existing obligations with comparatively plenty of money in their hands. By the laws of this government now they are first to be deprived of one-half their money, and then required to pay every obligation in full. The national debt was contracted on the basis of inflation, and is to be paid on the narrowest basis of the most merciless contraction. A thousand dollar bond, for which only $500 in gold was realized by the government, in its distress, at the time of its issue, has now to be taken up and paid for with over a thousand dollars in gold by the tax-payers. The farmer who bought land with deferred payments; the mechanic who purchased a house and lot and made a mortgage for the balance of the purchase money; the business man who used his credit as a part of his capital, have all found the weight of their obligations largely increased by being deprived of the means of meeting them. They must be met, however, and property itself, in the absence of money, changes hands from the debtor to the creditor classes in payment of debts. It changes hands, too, at such reduced values that the business man is sold out and closed up, and homes are swept away, often for the want of a very small sum of money.

Since the act demonetizing silver, supplemented as it has been by the act for a forced resumption of specie payments, the property of the people of the United States has shrunk not less than 35 per cent. in value. What could be sold for $100 five years ago can be bought now for $65 on an average all over the country. This is a criminal confiscation of property amounting to not less in value than $10,000,000,000 when the estimate is applied to every state and section alike. In this vast shrinkage of all values, arising from the shrinkage of money in circulation, is to be found the immediate cause of that general bankruptcy and ruin which now fill the land with the sound of falling business houses, commercial failures, broken savings banks, and the lamentations of the poor who have been robbed of their hard earnings and of the opportunity to earn more. Under the influence of this policy nearly forty thousand business failures have taken place in this country since February, 1873, with liabilities amounting in the aggregate to over $1,000,000,000. The heart sickens in thinking for a moment of the sorrows, the broken hearts, the shattered hopes, the suicides which these figures represent. If the policy of this government has been to inflict the greatest misery on the greatest number its success has been complete. It is in vain to attribute such widespread disasters to other causes. We sometimes hear them ascribed to what is vaguely styled overproduction. I would gladly know what is meant by this oracular term. Overproduction? What is it that we overproduce? Is there too much food, clothing, and other necessities of life? Has the soil yielded too much wheat, corn, hay, cotton, sugar, rice? The producer is one who creates wealth, and overproduction would therefore signify too great an amount of wealth. It will be hard to convince a sane mind that an overflow of wealth is the cause of depression and gloom, of financial calamities and rapidly increasing poverty, and of laborers praying, and praying in vain, for the privilege, once afforded to slaves, of working for the bare means of subsistence. The mission of wealth produced by toil from the bosom of the earth is far different from this. Unless deprived of its natural functions by pernicious laws it brings abundant happiness to a people and establishes smiling content in their midst.

But the cause most commonly assigned by the authors of our financial policy for its baleful effects on the business and labor of the country is that the currency has been and is yet in an inflated condition, and that real prosperity can only be attained by its reduction to the gold basis. The evils of inflation have been painted in the darkest colors for years past, and on all occasions. I am not an inflationist in any sense that would disturb the true interest of trade and commerce, nor would it ever be necessary to discuss the question at all, if the contractionist had only been willing to let the volume of our currency remain at the point where the country prospered most and the people were happiest. A comparison between the periods when our paper circulation was greatest and the years of contraction which have followed, is crushing to the advocates of the latter policy. During the whole four years of 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, when the volume of our currency averaged over a thousand millions, the business failures of the country reached only 2,167—less in number than occurred in any three months of the year just closed. Is this an argument against a full and generous circulation of money? During the period which is now stigmatized as one of inflation the windows of business houses were not darkened, and business men did not go as mourners about the streets. The laborer did not go home without bread to his wife and children; helpless millions did not cower and tremble at the approach of winter for lack of food and shelter; the public peace was not broken by riots in resistance to starvation wages; the courts were not principally occupied in enforcing collections, foreclosing mortgages, ordering sheriff sales or in punishing the destitute and outcast. These are some things which did not take place. Others that did are equally striking. Good wages and good prices stimulated every laboring man's muscle, every business man's brain, and every power of machinery into the highest and most productive activity. Hope and encouragement was in every heart. New farms were bought and cultivated; new workshops were opened; new manufactories were established; new towns and cities were founded, and old ones expanded and improved; new railroads were built, giving employment to millions, and bringing the remotest and most obscure regions into immediate contact with trade and civilization; new mines of coal, iron and silver were sunk in the earth, whose contents in return assisted in the glad work of a universal, individual and national prosperity. Am I to be reminded that this well known condition of general welfare and happiness was a delusion; that it was unreal and could not last? Why was it a delusion? Were not its comforts and blessings a reality to the American people? But why did it not last? But one answer can be given. The money power determined it should not last. The Garden of Eden before the fall was not more hateful in the eyes of Satan than was this picture of plenty and prosperity to those whose gains and profits depended on the scarcity of money in the hands of the people, and consequent hard times. They began their work of spoliation in 1866, and they have made the downfall complete. They have haunted these halls; they have thundered at these doors; they have fortified themselves in the high places of the government, and, whether by deceitful persuasion, artful speech or open menace and assault, they have not ceased to bring blight and ruin to the people. The very madness of avarice has impelled them from blow to blow, from act to act. The picture of general welfare that I have drawn, indeed, did not last. It has been defaced, torn, stamped under foot by the repeated acts of legislation inspired by remorseless greed. The people asked for no such change. They never sent petitions here asking for any of the enactments of the last 12 years. They would have been glad to be let alone and to allow the natural laws of trade and business to work out a safe solution of every financial problem. Loud complaint is now made by thoughtless or designing persons that the question of our finances is under agitation. Every act of legislation thus far has been dictated by invested capital, and not one by the people. Every agitation of this question in congress, until the present, has been made in the same interest and to gain additional advantages.

The people thus far have borne their wrongs in the forbearing hope that they would cease, and if now they rise at last and see to it that their rights are better respected, it is because the full measure of their patience is exhausted. When their prostrate and suffering condition, however, is forced on the unwilling recognition of the money power, we are often met with the impatient argument that it is not for the government to make money for the people. I might content myself with answering that it is certainly not for the government to destroy money for the people. Those who deny the right of the government to regulate the amount of currency in circulation overlook the fact that they have been dictating that very policy to be pursued for themselves; only that they have always caused it to be regulated downward instead of upward. But what is the duty of the government in this regard? Is it true that the people are not dependent on the policy of their government for money on which to do business?

Is it true, as often asserted, that in some way or other those who are willing to work, or have something to sell, can always obtain money regardless of all financial legislation? No greater fallacy than this was ever put forward in defense of wrong and injustice. Money is the creature of government both as to quality and quantity. It exists merely by the assertion of law, and in no other way. Article 1, section 8, of the constitution of the United States, provides that "The congress shall have power * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures," and section 10 of the same article denies all such powers to the states, thus making congress the exclusive creator of money for the American people. Without the action of congress not one dollar can exist in the United States. If the article called money, whether of gold, silver or paper, is necessary at all in the transactions of life, here alone is the fountain from which it emanates. How then shall this high power be exercised? Shall only enough lawful money be created, in proportion to the labor and other commodities which it is designed to pay for, to give ten cents a day to the laborer, and $10 for a horse; or shall it be furnished in sufficient amount to afford a just equivalent for labor and for every other thing of value? On the answer to this question has depended the prosperity or the adversity of the American people in all the past; on it their present deplorable condition can alone be explained, and their future fate foretold. A circulating medium being a recognized necessity of civilized nations, and its existence depending solely on national authority, that government which, for any reason, fails to make a supply adequate to the business prosperity of its citizens, violates that fundamental compact of duty which must prevail in every free political commonwealth.

Not only, however, has this government failed in this great duty, but the manner it has adopted to furnish the people with their limited and insufficient supply of currency was conceived and perfected by the owners of retired and inactive capital. The system of national banking now in use is the most elaborate and complete scheme for making the people pay tribute to wealth, in order to obtain a circulating medium, ever known in the financial history of the world. There is not a dollar to-day in the hands of the people on which they have not paid a tax for the privilege of having it put in circulation by the government. The national bank is the middle man between the government and the people, and is enormously paid for doing what the government ought directly to do itself. According to the report of the comptroller of the currency there were two thousand and eighty national banks October 1, 1877, and they owned in even numbers $330,000,000 of government bonds as the basis of a bank note circulation of $321,000,000. The interest paid by the people on the bonds thus used to secure a currency on which to transact their business amounts to not less than $16,000,000 per annum. This is the tax paid for the bank note circulation. The bondholder has been made the banker of the country, and he is banking on the interest bearing debt of the people. For every $100 of currency they pay him nearly $6 interest on the bonds which secure that hundred. His advantages, however, only begin with this bonus of sixteen millions.

The report of the comptroller shows that, October 1, 1877, the national banks had loans outstanding to the amount of $891,000,000. No one will pretend that these loans are made on an average interest of less than 10 per cent. This makes an interest account of eighty-nine millions per annum, and this is an under rather than an over estimate. Of other bonds, stocks, debts, real estate, specie, currency, clearing house exchanges, United States certificates of deposit, and all other resources, the property of the national banks, at the above date, amounted to something over $514,000,000, which, at the low rate of 5 per cent., makes an additional interest income of $25,000,000. The following statement will therefore correctly represent the facts:

October 1, 1877:

National banks	2,080
Resources	$1,741,000,000
Interest on resources paid by the people per annum	130,000,000

In return for the establishment of this stupendous money power it simply acts as an agent in transmitting the currency of the United States from the treasury to the people. Will any one pretend that a cheaper and more equitable mode of supplying the country with a circulating medium can not be framed by our legislative wisdom? In fact can any one for a moment defend such a system of monopoly and oppression? He who desires its permanence desires also the permanence of the national bonded debt.

The two are inseparable. One rests upon the other. If the national banks are a blessing then our public debt is a blessing, for the debt supports the banks. This idea is embraced in the act of January, 1875. Provision is made in the third section of that act for an increased number of "banking associations" to be based on an increased number of interest bearing bonds sold for that purpose. They are armed too by this section with hostile powers against the legal tender greenback. With the aid of the secretary of the treasury they are authorized to exterminate this favorite money of the people. For every $100 issued after the date of the act of January, 1875, by the national banks then in existence or organized afterward $80 in legal tender notes are to be withdrawn from circulation and destroyed until that currency is contracted to the limit of $300,000,000. The purpose of this legislation is to make the banks completely master of the financial situation and to subordinate all the wants and interests of the American people to their will and pleasure. And in order to facilitate this purpose the greenback dollar has been denounced with every epithet of contempt and derision known to the English language. I will not pause now to defend this great money in its contest with those who are bent on its destruction. Its reputation in peace and in war is known to all. The soldiers and the sailors knew it in the great hour of peril; their widows, their orphans, and their maimed and crippled comrades have known it ever since.

The people of every class and of every party engaged in business and labor know that, in spite of all assaults, in spite of the fact that the government dishonors it by refusing to take it for government dues, and in spite of the fact that there is not gold enough in the treasury to redeem it at ten cents on the dollar, yet to-day it ranks but three per cent. below gold in the money markets that are most hostile to its existence. All these things are known and treasured up, and I do not dwell upon them now.

Sir, thus far I have spoken in pointing out what I conceive to be the vicious legislation of this country on the great and paramount question of its finances. There are two opposing ideas on this subject now thoroughly aroused into vigilance and activity. On the one hand is the vast money power in all its various developments of bonds, banks and loaning associations, and on the other are the great industries, the active business and the laboring people. The issue has been years in making up, but it is now joined. Nobody need be deceived. All the widespread influences of capital are organized and combined. The holders of public securities in America and in Europe work together. They think and act in concert.

The national banks of the United States have a solid organization to protect what they have and to get as much more as possible. [illegible] are asking now to be relieved from pay[illegible]xes on their circulation and deposits, in [illegible] that they may enjoy their enormous pr[illegible] free from all burdens for the support of the government. Associations of capitalists, engaged in obtaining mortgages at 12 per cent. interest on western farms, on account of the scarcity of money in that section, are not only striving to make all such mortgages payable in gold a year hence, but they are threatening those in pecuniary distress that they shall have no further favors at the same rates unless they agree in advance to pay gold in return for greenback loans. The power of money in the midst of times like these is very great, but I am much deceived in the people if they have not turned at last in defiance and bold warning upon their oppressors. They are not in favor of repudiating a single dollar of their public or private debts. They intend to pay everything they owe, but they intend to submit to no more changes of contracts, violations of obligations, and breaches of public faith, in order to increase their indebtedness or to take away their money to pay it. They demand, too, these certain specific wrongs shall be redressed.

1. Those for whom I speak demand the restoration of the silver dollar exactly as it stood before it was banished by the act of February, 1873. They desire that it shall have unlimited coinage, not fearing that it will become too plenty for their wants, and that it be made a full legal tender, believing that it is as good now with which to pay all debts, public and private, as it was during 81 years of American history.

2. They demand the repeal, unconditionally, of the act of January 14, 1875, compelling a resumption of specie payments in January, 1879, holding that the question of a return to a specie basis for our currency should be controlled entirely by the business interests of the country. They do not believe that the country should be dragged through the depths of ruin, wretchedness and degradation in order to reach a gold standard for the benefit alone of the income classes.

3. They demand that the national banking system be removed and a circulating medium provided by the government for the people, without taxing them for the privilege of obtaining it. And they ask that the amount thus placed in circulation shall bear a reasonable and judicious proportion to the business transactions and the population of the United States.

4. They demand that the currency circulated on the authority of the government shall be made a legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, including all dues to the government, well knowing that it will then be at par with gold or more likely at a premium over it.

5. They demand that hereafter the financial policy of the country be framed permanently in their interest; that they shall not be discriminated against in future legislation as in past, and that their prosperity, and not the mere growth of income to retired capitalists, shall be the primary duty of the government.

In my judgment, these demands are just and moderate. I implore senators not to suppose that they can be disregarded with safety. If they are rejected now they will be renewed hereafter with still greater determination and perhaps with others added. I plead for the financial credit of the government. It rests on the popular will alone, and that will can no longer be defied or menaced with impunity. The people are sovereign, and they can bind and they can loosen. If the money power is advised with wisdom it will stop and retrace its steps. It confronts a power now mightier than itself; a free people at the ballot box, inflamed by a sense of injustice and oppression. If, however, it is joined to its golden idol; if its heart is hardened and its neck stiffened by its vast possessions; if the burning lust of avarice has made it deaf to the voice of reason and blind to all human experience, it will push on in its career until it works its own destruction; for, sooner or later, the people, irrespective of party names, will unite in their own defense and establish justice.

They have been slow to believe that there was a deliberate purpose to degrade and impoverish the great producing classes, but they are being rapidly educated now. The condition of the country is a teacher whose awful lesson is engraven on all their hearts. They have also recently read the proclamations of the great organs of the money power, removing all disguise as to the meaning of our financial legislation and the misery it has created. In the columns of one they have read that—

"The American laborer must make up his mind henceforth not to be so much better off than the European laborer. Men must be content to work for low wages. * * * In this way the workingman will be nearer to that station in life to which it has pleased God to call him."

In the columns of another organ of consolidated capital they have read the following revolting sentiments:

"There seems to be but one remedy. It is a change of the ownership of the soil, and the creation of a class of land owners on the one hand and of tenant farmers on the other; something similar in both cases to what has long existed and now exists in the older countries of Europe."

And in every form in which the English language can be used the American people, and especially the people of the west, have been notified, not that their consent will be asked, but that they will be compelled to submit to the legislation which results in this British system of baronial landed estates, a dependent tenantry and pauper wages for the workingmen. Sir, I have no word of menace to utter on this floor, but in behalf of every laborer and every owner of soil whom I represent, I warn all such as value their investments that when these doctrines of despotism are sought to be enforced, this fair land will again be convulsed in agony, and the fires of liberty will blaze forth again, as they did a hundred years ago, in defense of the natural rights of man. May the wisdom of our fathers and benignity of our God avert such an issue, but if it shall come, if infatuation has seized our hearts, the result will only add one more instance to the long catalogue of human crimes and folly, where avarice, like ambition, overleaps itself, and in its unholy attempt to rob others of their possessions, loses its own.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY.

The Indianapolis Weekly Sentinel is the best weekly paper published in the state.—Lewisville Democrat.

The Sentinel is still furnishing the most news of any paper in the city. It is especially valuable in this season of the year for its reports of markets.—Odd Fellows' Chronicle.

The Indianapolis Weekly Sentinel is a large and ably conducted democratic paper, full of state news and correct in its market reports. Every family in the county ought to have it this year.—Rochester Sentinel.

The Sentinel, both daily and weekly, is an excellent paper. When our citizens send out of the state for their news, they not only commit a blunder, but work against the interest of the democracy.—Tipton Times.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

Only $1.50 will pay for the Weekly Sentinel and the Sentinel's new map of Indiana, both postage paid, or Ropp's Easy Calculator, a work that no farmer, mechanic or business man should be without, sent in place of map, if desired.

Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup is perfectly safe. Extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitas, Catarrh, Asthama, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for general debility and all nervous complaints, after having thouroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. The receipt will be sent free of charge, to all who desire it, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Address with stamp naming this paper. Dr. J. C. Stone, 44 North Ninth Street, Philadelphia Pa.

A Timely Suggestion.

The following dialogue is reported as having taken place between a gamekeeper and a patient looking through the iron gate of a French lunatic asylum.

Patient—"That's a fine horse; what's it worth?"

Keeper—"Five hundred dollars."

Patient—"And what did that gun cost?"

Keeper—"One hundred dollars."

Patient—"And those dogs?"

Keeper—"Eighty dollars."

Patient—"What have you got in that game-bag?"

Keeper—"A woodcock."

Patient—"Well, now, you had better hurry on, for if our Governor catches a man who has spent $680 to get a woodcock worth thirty cents, he'll have him under lock and key in no time, I tell you."

Wishing to Die.

When a man goes round the house sighing and wishing himself dead you needn't trouble to put the bottle of opium away! He wouldn't touch it for worlds. If he should be suddenly attacked by colic you would hear him screaming out for a doctor at the top of his voice. One day Pompey said he wanted to die and go to glory. He wrought himself into an ecstatic state, and told the people at the prayer meeting that he positively couldn't wait much longer. That night, at twelve, some one knocked at his cabin door. "What you want?" said the colored man, trembling. "I want Pompey to take him to glory," replied a gruff voice. The darkey thought a moment and then said, "Mister Angel, Pompey done moved up Norf three months ago, and don't never expect to come back again. Now, go way!" White or black we are all the same.

Children's Stockings.

The question of short socks instead of stockings for children is, says a physician, I am glad to see, being noticed; and I trust the result will be that the custom of congning children's limbs in hot, and especially dark colored stockings, will, at least in summer, give way before the pretty fashion—now almost universal in France, Italy, Belgium and Holland—of keeping boys and girls, especially the latter, in socks. As a medical man, I am convinced that, provided a child is healthy, and otherwise warmly and suitably clad, it is all the better at any time of the year, for having its limbs exposed. In summer there is no doubt about it. There is no finer health-giving agent than fresh, warm air and bright sunshine. Children cannot have too much of either. Their limbs ought to be bathed in qoth. Those who see our little people wading on the seashore, delighting to paddle for hours in the waves, their scanty clothing tucked up charmingly, know that children are never so happy as when their arms and legs are bare and free.

Temperance Meeting.

A very large and inteligent audience assembled last Thursday evening at the Baptist Church, to hear Rev. Dr. Stone, and Mason Long, Esq., on the subject of temperance. Dr. Stone, one of the most profound and eloquent of Fort Wayne's clergy, opened the meeting in one of those elegant little speeches that always catch the sympathy and interest of an audience. Our old friend Mace Long, followed in an earnest plea for the cause. He began by giving his experience as a gambler, and a saloon-keeper, and closed with a touching description of his reformation. Abounding in pathos, vivid description and earnest expression, it was received in almost breathless silence by his hearers, while many a moistened eye attested the sympathy that was felt for the speaker in his effort to "Dare to do right." Mr. Long never was a bummer in his dissipated life, but a fellow of quick intelligence and sensitive heart. Such characters wield an influence not posessed by the low dead beat class, and we believe the recital of his story here will be prolific of good.

The above item should have appeared last week.

Dr. Seguin, a French physician of international reputation, in a report submitted to the Vienna International Exposition emphasizes the importance of training children to use and exercise both arms. He says; "By this means may be restored to our use an inexpensive power more permenant than steam and equally applicable to mental and physical labor. Through the restitution to our children of this natural capacity (the equal use of the left hand and arm), the diseases and infirmities which attack one side of the body would become unknown or rare."

Suppose a Case.

Indiana Farmer.

Suppose at a certain time red wheat and white wheat were worth the same price per bushel. Suppose at that time you became indebted to A. B., the miller, and he agreed with you to take pay after harvest in 100 bushels of wheat, "either red or white," each being of the same value at the time of harvest and pay day arrived. A. B. discovering that the farmers are growing more red wheat than white, and that white wheat is going to bring the better price; and suppose he quietly draws his pen through the word "red" in the agreement and when pay day arrives presents the note to you and demands payment in white wheat only. Now would A. B., the miller, differ from the bondholders who their bonds payable in the coin of the country, gold or siver, and now demand that payment be made in gold only? Who would be guilty of fraud, you (the people) for refusing to pay in white wheat (gold) or A. B., (the bondholders) for striking out the word "red" (procuring the passage of the silver-demonetizotion bill) from the agreement?

St. Joe Items.

—Will Newville let St. Joe know when that gravel road is finished from Butler to Newville. St. Joe will enlarge it's lines so as to take in that gravel for Driving Park. By all means hurry up the road. We congratulate D. H. Murray on his prospects to sell the gravel.

PINTS.

Hints to Housekeepers.

Boil everything slowly.

Tea does not give strength.

Milk is the most perfect food.

Apples are the healthiest fruit.

Herrings are very strengthing.

Add your fuel to the fire slowly.

Do not make your bread too light.

Guessing is never good in measuring.

Fat is not cheap at the price of meat.

Tea and coffee are injurious to children.

New flour takes up more water than old.

The French spice their dishes into flavor.

Fish will boil in from five to ten minutes.

Stale bread may be steamed into freshness.

Women eat on the same allowance as boys.

Never cut broiling meat. The juices escape.

Apples are more substantial than potatoes.

Broil your steak from ten to fifteen minutes.

Scalded skimmed milk will go as far as fresh milk.

"Middlings" flour contains the best element of wheat.

Slow and long cooking will make tough meat tender.

Your fat must be boiling when you put your meat in to fry.

Salt meat should be simmered. They should not be fiercely boiled.

Do not boil your cabbage after the stalks are tender. After that there is waste.

Baking meats is not cheap unless you surround them with flour paste to keep the juice in.

Celery salt is made of grated dried celery root mixed with one-fourth its quantity of salt.

Vegatables supply the place of meat. Vegatable should be cooked, if possible in water in which meats have been cooked.

THE MARCH OF OPINION.

The Shylocks might as well make up their minds first as last that they can not longer rule this country. The people, who have been deceived and defrauded, will no longer submit to their rule. The repeal of the resumption law and the remonetization of silver are fixed facts, and may as well be recognized now as hereafter. These measures are absolutely necessary for the welfare of the country, and the bondholders will be compelled to stand by their contract with the government, and they may as well get ready to take a little silver with their gold. We like the outlook exceedingly. It is always pleasant and assuring to see the people acting in concert upon important questions. Having suffered from contractions, which has been the prolific parent of numberless ills, they have determined upon a change. Resumption will be indefinitely postponed. Contraction of the currency and the shrinkage of values will cease. Silver dollars of 412¼ grains will be coined, and made a legal tender for all debts. Business will revive. Confidence be restored, and the whole country will enjoy the blessings of wise legislation. But this suspicious outlook must not dampen the ardor of democrats. If "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," it may be said with equal propriety that eternal vigilance will be required to overthrow and completely demolish the radical party. The democratic party is accomplishing wonderful results for the welfare of the people. The south restored to liberty, military despotism removed, carpet-beggers exiled, radical scoundrelism undergoing investigation, resumption postponed, and the silver dollar of the fathers remonetized, an era of prosperity in the near future may be anticipated as the great blessing the triumph of the democratic party has secured for the country. It is now understood that Hayes will not interfere with his veto. He will let the people controls their business and financial affairs. John Sherman sees the folly of antagonising the people, and the outlook is cheering. If the shrinkage of values can be averted, if honest silver dollars can be coined and sent broadcast through the land it is believed that business will revive, bankrupts will be less numerous, and idle men will have employment. The march of opinion has been in all regards grand. It has confronted the Shylocks and neutralized their power. It has stocked into the white house and overawed the miserable fraud that plays president. In congress it has commanded audience, and the votes of the people's representatives give assurance that public servants will heed public opinion. Already there is a better feeling in the country. Business will soon revive, and laboring men will have work. The march of opinion has been stately, and its triumphs in all regards in the interest of the people.

Invited to a Wedding.

"There are palliating circumstances in my case,' remarked Augustus Cæsar Paddington as he crossed the Danube and appeared on the dead line.

"No doubt—no doubt," blandly replied his honor, "and we will now take them into consideration. You were found lying on two sides of an old board fence, far from the scenes of busy strife and the hum of industry. You had evidently intended to crawl through the fence, but at the half-way point you got tired and took a rest. You were arrested in halves sir, there being an officer on either side of the fence."

"I now desire so say to you,' continued Augustus, "that I was invited out to a wedding.'

"And you went?"

"And I didn't go. I was on my way there when—when—this—fence you spoke of insisted in crossing my path. I tried to dodge it. I sought to climb over it—I offered to fight it, and finally I tried to crawl through it. I think I must have been temporarily insane."

"Certainly you were. I know just how you felt. The ground seemed to be skylarking around—all buildings were on the move—there were more than a million lamp-posts around. I suppose your defense is that a clean shave and a top-dressing of bay rum produced the mental and physical condition spoken of."

"I kind o' lay it to that,' replied the prisoner.

"Yes, you might as well, for the fine will be five dollars in any case. Please proceed to hand over the cash as fast as possible, as the clerk isn't very well this morning.—Free Press.

OUR SCHOOL DAYS.

BY T. [illegible].

Crowded back, we look upon them—
  Past, yes, past—forever gone—
Scenes of pleasure, hours of treasure,
  Sweet to gaze and look upon;
Past, yes, like a fleeting [illegible],
  Oft they constitute no age;
Budding forth from early childhood,
  Soon we turn life's gayest page.

Mingling with our infant comrades
  Life stamped naught upon our mind;
But when school days dawned upon us,
  Footprints, then, were left behind;
[illegible] of a new-born era,
  On the way by which we trod,
Like the plow which marks its furrow,
  Leaves behind the upturned sod.

Thus do we in pensive silence
  Wander thoughtfully through the field,
Gathering flowers of early childhood,
  Fragrant with life's morning seal;
Straight, perhaps, our course has led us,
  Sweetly smells each glowing flower,
Planted well and watered duly,
  Index of a happy hour.

Not alone we find we've labor'd,
  Many hands came to our aid;
Cheering words, like dews of heaven,
  Gave a vigor not to fade.
Helping hands and toiling comrades
  Made our interests all but one,
While our troubles, light and narrow,
  Soon were lost in blithesome fun.

Passed we've now the span of boyhood,
  With its memories flooding on,
As the bosom of a river
  Ever bears its tide along.
Launched upon more ruffl'd waters,
  And beset by greater fear,
Swift our bark floats down the current,
  And the verdant leaf grows sere.

Pause we then—yes, stop to wonder
  How our happy school days sped;
Years rolled by and days long numbered—
  Would we could again but wed.
Thus we look upon life's morning,
  Ushering in a noonday sun;
Veering round, it shrouded leaves us—
  Thus the race of life is run.

WILD AND DARING HEROES.

Thrilling Narrative of a Terribly Tragic Enterprise.

In March of 1862 the Confederate Army of the West was concentrated at Corinth, Miss., under Beauregard. This army received its supplies from the rich Georgia and Carolina fields, and its re-enforcements from extensive drill camps in these States. These troops and supplies were forwarded over a single line of railroad—the Western and Atlantic—running from Atlanta, Ga., to Chattanooga, Tenn., which had been, not inaptly, called "the backbone of the rebellion." The movements, present and prospective, of the Federal armies rendered it very important that Beauregard should be cut off from the camps and granaries in his rear. But as this railroad that was his channel of communication ran through the very heart of the Confederate country, and was guarded by numberless soldiers on all sides, it was felt to be impossible to isolate the wily commander.

Just at this time a man named J. J. Andrews, a Kentuckian, and thoroughly devoted to the Union cause, sought an interview with Gen. Mitchell and offered with a detail of twenty men to penetrate the enemy's country in disguise, capture an engine and burn the bridges of the Western and Atlantic road. The project was considered impossible; but Andrews persisted that he could accomplish it, and at length he was empowered to make the attempt. It was agreed that if he succeeded he was to be paid $50,000. He selected as his Lieutenant, Wm. Campbell, a Kentuckian, and was furnished with a detail of twenty men from the Second, Twenty-first, and Thirty-third Ohio regiments. Only one man was taken from each company.

On the 6th of April, at 4 o'clock, the men, in the disguise of citizens, left their camps to rendezvous at Shelbyville, the Federal camp being at Murfreesboro. At about midnight the twenty-two determined men met in the woods beyond Shelbyville, and the daring plot was for the first time unfolded to the detailed soldiers. The council over, the raiders scattered into squads of two or three and started for Chattanooga, the northern terminus of the Western and Atlantic road. To reach this they were compelled to march through 133 miles of the enemy's country, with soldiers standing guard over every road. After exciting adventures, the whole party reached Chattanooga, and, in company with hundreds of Confederates who were hurrying to the front to join Beauregard, boarded the train. They had arranged to ride to Marietta, rest there during the night, and start back toward Chattanooga the next day and burn the bridges as they came. They reached Marietta, went to the hotel, registered and turned in for a night's rest. They were in the very heart of the enemy's country, with no possible succor within two hundred miles, and were determined on the next day to burn the bridges and destroy the rails of a road that was the vital artery of the Confederacy, and that was literally lined with soldiers. Indeed, their devotion seemed fatuous, their heroism fool-hardy, their martyrdom self-chosen and foreordained.

At 4 o'clock in the morning the men were awakened and hurried on the train. Their general scheme involved the seizure of the train by some means or other. The train once captured, they were to push ahead, burn the bridges, and destroy the track. The details of this plan were not arranged. Whether the train should be captured by a trick, or by a direct assault upon the forces commanding it, was not determined upon. The whole affair was intrusted to Andrews. His men were to watch him closely, and obey his slightest sign.

The train pulled slowly out of Marietta, and after an hour or so reached Big Shanty, where it stopped for breakfast. Big Shanty was a drill camp, and about 10,000 soldiers were stationed there. The engineer, conductor, and passengers were in the hotel at breakfast. The "Yankees" had gone in with the rest, and were quietly eating their breakfast. Suddenly Andrews appeared at the door of the eating hall and said, in a leisurely way:

"Well, boys, if you are done, let us go and get our seats." Immediately his twenty-one men arose and started out of the hall. Their hearts were bounding wildly within their breasts, and their faces must have paled with resolution, for they knew that the hour of their trial had come. And yet they walked coolly and tranquilly out of that room, conscious that they must move so leisurely as to avoid all suspicion. When they reached the door they found Andrews awaiting them. As they came out he gave each man a hurried, whispered word of instruction. Then, taking three men with him, he walked slowly, and apparently aimlessly, in the direction of the unguarded engine. In the meantime, one of his band had slipped in between the baggage and passenger cars and uncoupled them, leaving only three cars attached to the engine. The other members of the band stood by the open doors of the baggage cars, ready to leap into them at a moment's notice. Several thousand Confederate soldiers were standing around in sight, many of them almost touching the cars. As soon as Andrews and his three companions reached the engine, they leaped briskly upon it, he having first given a subtle signal with his hand that whisked the other raiders into the baggage car as if by magic. Then the throttle of the engine was opened, her lever was pulled back to its utmost stretch; the great iron monster thrilled for a moment, trembled uneasily, then flattened to the track, and went flying away toward the west. Not until the engine was fairly out of sight did the crowd begin to understand what had been done. When the truth was realized the most frantic uproar arose; the mass of soldiers, citizens and train hands huddled upon the track in pitiable confusion; yells of rage swelled into the air and the sharp crackle of comment broke the monotone. Suddenly two men, hatless and coatless, sped from out this bewildered crowd, and, with pale, determined faces, started in pursuit of the engine. These were the conductor and engineer, Messrs. Fuller and Murphy, who, on foot, amid the sudden and uncontrolled laughter of the crowd, started out to catch the men, who were flying away at the rate of sixty miles an hour with their train.

The twenty-two men upon the engine had an almost impossible task before them. They had to burn the bridges upon their route—they had to cut the telegraph wire as they proceeded to prevent the alarm preceding them—they had to meet and pass two of the regular trains of the road—they were followed by maddened enemies—and even if they should reach Chattanooga, the terminus of the road, in safety, they would find themselves in a strongly fortified post of the enemy—a hundred miles from their own lines—and in momentary expectation of the sight of their pursuers.

And yet they went ahead, bravely and carefully. When out about one mile from the station (where there was no telegraph operator) they stopped and cut down the wire and pulled up a rail or two. Remounting their engine, they hurried on. When they reached the first station above Big Shanty they told the tank-tender that they were pulling through an extra powder train for Beauregard, and asked for a schedule. He gave them one, and they found that they would meet the down passenger train a few stations above. Having more than enough time to make the schedule, they pulled leisurely along, stopping occasionally to tear up the track. They had no tools with which to take up the rails, and had to batter them down with hammers. While engaged at this work they were astounded at hearing a short distance behind them the whistle of an engine in pursuit. With one convulsive effort they tore up the rails they were hammering at and remounted their engine. As they did so they saw the engine manned by their pursuers rush around the curve. It was stopped by the torn track, and in the meantime the raiders flew out of sight. They had to stop so frequently, however, to cut the wires that their pursuers kept in sight nearly all the way. The chase was a headlong one. Two men stood on the cow-catcher of the pursuing engine, to leap off and remove obstructions from the track and to tear up rails from behind the engine and lay them down in front. At length, just as they were nearing the station where they were to meet the down train, the raiders succeeded in tearing up the track very badly and loading their baggage car with some fifty rails. They then drew in on the siding and waited for the down train to clear the track. They told the powder-train story to the conductor of this train.

As they pulled out they saw their pursuers reach the broken track and halt their engine. Two men (the conductor and engineer of the stolen train) jumped off and ran toward the down train. They boarded it and hastily turned it back and pushed, wrong end foremost, in pursuit of the flying Yankees. Then there was an open track and a fair race. Through village after village the two trains flew like lightning. Having to stop occasionally to cut the telegraph wires, Andrews saw it was necessary to force his pursuers to halt also. Consequently he knocked the rear end of the last baggage car out, and dropped crossties and rails upon the track in front of the pursuing train. At last when he was pushed very close, he uncoupled one of the cars and left it drifting upon the track. The Confederates halted an instant, coupled it to their train, and hurried on again, pushing it ahead of them. Another car was finally dropped, and at length the last car was kindled into a blaze and left upon a high bridge, in the hope that it might burn the bridge and thus check the pursuers. But it was impossible, with the whirling at such enormous speed, to get the blaze fully started, and it went out before it enkindled the bridge. The pursuing train coupled this car and swept on.

Chattanooga was now only twenty miles distant, but the foremost engine was in a sad plight. Its brass journals were all melted down; its wood and water were exhausted, and progress was virtually ended. A hurried council of war was held, and a bold and brilliant plan was determined upon. It was decided to let one of the raiders pull the Yankee engine out of sight around a curve, while the others disembarked, tore up the track, and hid in the brush near the road. Then, when the train of the pursuers arrived, and the forces on it were engaged in repairing the track, the ambushed men would spring upon them, and send their train sweeping back down the road to wreck everything behind it, and give the raiders time to escape. But just as this plan was determined upon, the pursuing train rushed in sight, and bore down rapidly on the doomed engine. Seeing that they would inevitably be run down in a very few moments, Andrews ordered his men to take to the woods and save themselves, and, shaking the hands of his comrades, who were huddled upon the tender, leaped from the flying engine, and was soon lost in the woods. He was followed by his men, who jumped from one side or the other and took to the nearest shelter.

We recur to Messrs. Murphy and Fuller, who set out upon foot from Big Shanty in pursuit of the stolen engine. As absurd as that foot race appeared, it was the means of baffling the scheme of the determined raiders. Murphy and Fuller ran on foot for about three miles as fast as they could hurry, having no definite plan except to go ahead. After they had gone three miles they came upon a hand car, which was lying upon the side of the track. It was used to move the road-workers about. Putting this car upon the track, and impressing a force of negroes, they hurried on, pushing it up grade with poles, and letting it fly down grade of its own weight. They made pretty good time with this, and at last reached a station where a side road ran out to a coal mine. An engine ready fired was standing here. They impressed it, and put it through its best paces until they reached Kingston, where the engine of the Rome railroad (a branch of the Western and Atlantic railroad) was awaiting the up train. They seized this and continued their pursuit. With this engine they came in sight of the stolen train. They followed it until they came to the place where the track was so badly torn they could not replace it. They then started on foot again, and soon met the down passenger train which they at once turned backward, and pressed the runaways so close that they had to take to the woods. Thus it will be seen that three engines and a hand car were used consecutively in this wild and headlong chase after the raiders.

As an evidence of the tremendous speed made in this run, it is said that the down passenger train which was reversed went fifty-two miles in sixty-one minutes, pushing a train ahead of it for several miles, stopping frequently to remove obstructions.

Of course the Yankees who leaped from the stolen engine had very little chance to escape. They were surrounded on every side by enemies. Within a few hundred yards of where they left their engine two regiments of cavalry were encamped. It was muster-day at Ringgold, two miles away, and hundreds of farmers, armed and mounted, were collected there. The road was lined with soldiers. The alarm had been sent to Chattanooga by telegraph, and trains, loaded with troops and scouts, were hurrying to the scene. The day was dark, cloudy and rainy. The raiders were unacquainted with the country, and, with the stars and sun hidden, did not know the south from the north. They plunged into the woods, however, and struck out for the Tennessee river. In an hour the whole county was alive with scouts and hunters. There was not a by-path or cross-road that was not thoroughly explored. To add to the terrors of the situation, well-trained hounds were put upon the track of the fugitives, and trailed them down with unerring certainty. The hunt, though an exciting, was not a long one. In twenty-four hours from the time they left the engine every member of the band was captured. They were in a pitiable plight when taken. They were drenched to the skin—covered with dirt and filth—in the last stages of exhaustion, and almost starved. The story of their adventures in the Georgia forest that night is a wild and thrilling one. It was a night of horror.

At first the prisoners denied any complicity with the train-wrecking. They claimed to be citizens of Kentucky, disgusted with Lincoln, and trying to join the Confederate army. Being confronted with citizens of Kentucky, however, they were not able to carry out this fiction, and they then told a straight story—claiming that they were soldiers of the United States army, detailed for special service, and entitled to be held as prisoners of war. The Confederate authorities charged them with being spies, and ordered them to be tried by a court-martial. They were given able counsel, Judge Baxter, of Tennessee, being in charge of their case. Before the trial opened, Andrews, the leader, who was never put upon the same footing with the others, was carried before a court-martial and condemned to be hung as a spy. The witnesses against him were the men from whom he had stolen the train, though his own admissions were held to be sufficient to convict him. A scaffold was prepared for him at Chattanooga, but the near approach of the Federal troops caused his removal to Atlanta. Just before his death he made a daring attempt to escape, and succeeded in making his way nearly through the lines. He was finally discovered, naked, and nearly starved, in a tree, by some little children who were playing in the woods. They reported his presence, and he was speedily surrounded and captured. He was then hanged almost immediately. His scaffold was erected a short distance outside of Atlanta, about the center of what is now a cotton-field. He died very bravely, protesting against the manner of his death, and claiming that he was executed in violation of law. He was a magnificent specimen of manhood, and was engaged to be married to a beautiful young Kentucky girl within a few days of the date of his hanging. There were no unusual circumstances attending his execution. He died quickly, and apparently without much suffering.

When the trial of the rest of the band had begun, it was discovered that the court-martial had determined to make a difference between the men who had been promised a share of the $50,000, to be given at the close of the expedition, and those who were simply detailed for service without knowing the precise nature of the expedition. The prisoners relied upon the fact that the whole twenty men were detached for this service from the same brigade, and that their raid was hence a military expedition, and not the work of spies. They defended their having adopted citizens' dress by citing instances where Morgan's raiders, having been captured in squadrons in civilians' clothes, were treated by the Federals as prisoners of war. The trial was a lengthy, tedious one, and the decision was reserved for some days.

One day the men were in their prison playing checkers upon the floor and singing quite merrily, when some one called attention to the fact that a large body of horsemen had halted in front of the jail door. It was noticed that an immense mass of people was collected in the streets near the prison. The door was thrown open and an officer standing in the doorway called for William Campbell, of Kentucky; Geo. D. Wilson, Marion A. Ross, Perry G. Shadrack, Samuel Slavens, Samuel Robinson, and John Scott, of Ohio. The men arose as they were called, except Robinson, who was very ill with a fever, and had to be raised to his feet and supported while he stood. The officer commanded the men to follow him, and they left the room with him. The prisoners who were left were in a deplorable state of uncertainty. They did not know whether their comrades had been carried out for exchange or parole or death. No intimation of the decision of the court had been given. At length they returned, headed by George Wilson, who, with a face as pale as death, said: "Boys, we are to be hung immediately!"

The guards came in with the men, and tied them hand and foot. During this preparation, the condemned men took a last farewell of their comrades. Wilson, who had been for years an unbeliever, turned to Pittenger, a comrade who was quite religious, and said, "Oh, Pittenger, I know that you are right," and then, turning to his friends, he said, "Boys, when you come to die, try to be better prepared than I am now!" Shadrack, who had been the wit of the party, but a profane and reckless man, said, "If I were only prepared to meet my God I would be satisfied." He was urged by Pittenger to calm himself, and think of heaven, but he replied, "It is too late, now—but I'll try, I'll try!" Slavens, who was a man of immense stature, turned toward his friends, and said, "Oh, boys, tell my wife and children!" and then broke completely down, and could say no more. Young Scott, who was married only three days before he left for the army, never said a word from the time his sentence was announced. His lips were drawn tight across his mouth, and his hands clasped in front of him. He never spoke a word. Ross is said to have been the firmest of them all. He said: "Boys, if any of you escape, tell them I died for my country; that I died like a man, and do not regret it." Robinson, so ill that he could hardly speak, and could not stand, had to be carried from the room. Only about three minutes were consumed in the preparations. The men were then carried through the front door and placed in an open cart. The cart was surrounded by a heavy force of cavalry, and an immense throng of sight-seers accompanied it.

The place selected for the hanging was within the city limits. An enormous scaffold was erected, it being a notably low one. The scaffold was furnished with a trap-floor, which sank from beneath the feet of the men at the springing of a trigger. After the men had ascended the plank, and the nooses had been adjusted, Geo. Wilson asked to be allowed to make a statement. Permission was granted him, and, standing there, in the shadow of a violent death, with the fatal rope about his neck choking his voice down, he made a speech that went to the heart of every man that heard it. He spoke without a tremor, and with calm and distinct utterance. He said it was not the part of brave men to murmur at death when they were brought face to face with it, and that he had nothing to say against the decree of the court that had brought him to the scaffold. He decried, however, in the name of his comrades and in the name of justice, the manner of the death to which they had been brought. It was not such a death as soldiers deserved. He said that he and his comrades had been moved by nothing but an honest and patriotic love of the Union. He deplored "the wickedness of the Southern leaders" who had "misled and deluded the people into making an unholy and hopeless war." He dwelt with great enthusiasm upon the cause of the Union, and predicted that in a short time the star-spangled banner would wave over the very spot on which this scaffold then stood. He then closed his speech, and announced that he and his friends were ready. His comrades listened attentively to his words, turning so that they might face him. They seemed to be very much moved. Robinson was an exception, as he was very ill with a fever.

After Wilson had concluded, the trap was sprung, it is believed, by the Sheriff of the county. The trigger was concealed, and it was not definitely known who touched it. The men fell simultaneously, and the crowd averted their faces for an instant. When they looked at the scaffold again only five men were hanging. Slavens and Campbell, who were very large men, had broken the ropes and fallen upon the ground. They were writhing there in great agony, half strangled, and the noose still pressing about their necks. The crowd made a rush toward the prostrate men. The Lieutenant in charge of the hanging drew his sword, and, standing over the men, drove the crowd back. The rope was speedily loosed from the necks of the victims, and they were assisted into a sitting posture. They recovered their senses in a moment, and both begged for a drink of water. This was given them, and revived them very much. The ropes were then readjusted, and the two men were made to reascend the scaffold. Their comrades were corpses. The trap was set again, and the fatal trigger was touched once more.

The men fell with a dull, heavy thud, Campbell's neck being apparently broken by the fall. Slavens, however, was doomed to still further torture. His immense weight and size were such that his feet touched the ground. His convulsions were terrible. His feet would touch the ground and relieve the strangulation, and then his convulsions would renew it. At once a bystander seized a shovel, pushed the ground from under Slavens' feet, and the brave man's sufferings were soon at an end. The bodies were buried near the scaffold.

Of the remaining prisoners none were hanged. By a most daring sally from their prison, eight of the men escaped. They seized the inside guard of the prison, gagged him, took his keys, opened the front door, overpowered the sentinels, and wrested their arms from them, and, after a terrible hand-to-hand combat, fought their way through to the Federal lines, which were now quite near to them. These men were W. W. Brown, Wm. Knight, J. R. Porter, Mark Wood, J. A. Wilson, M. G. Hawkins, S. A. Dorsey, and John Wallam, all of Ohio. Their comrades attempted to escape with them, but were all wounded or driven back before they could get beyond the yard. These men, J. Parrott, Robert Buffum, Wm. Bensinger, Wm. Reddick, E. H. Mason, and Wm. Pittenger, all of Ohio, were kept in prison for several months, and exchanged in March. The United States Government gave very handsome medals to the survivors of this terrible raid, and provided for the families of those who were killed. The first medal was given to Jacob Parrott, a mere boy, who is said to have been punished severely in order to make him disclose the names of his comrades, which he refused to do.—Detroit Free Press.

National Savings Banks.

Representative Waddell, of North Carolina, has introduced in Congress a bill to establish and maintain national savings depositories, as a branch of the Postoffice Department. It is, in many respects, similar to the bills heretofore introduced for that purpose. In order to give complete and direct security to all depositors, the credit of the United States is pledged for the repayment to the depositor, or to his legal representative, of every sum of money deposited. There is to be a chief office at Washington, and the Postmaster General is authorized to designate such suitable money-order Postoffices, at which the salary of the Postmaster is not less than $800 per annum, as the business of the postal savings depository may require. The rate of interest on the deposits shall not exceed 3 per cent. per annum, and shall on the 30th day of June and 30th day of December, in each year, be added and become a part of the principal. The aggregate amount of principal and interest to the credit of any depositor shall not exceed $1,500, and money due to a depositor, whether remaining on deposit in said depository, or invested in bonds, for which the bill makes provision, or in the inscribed debt, shall not at any time, while in the custody of the United States, be liable to taxation under any State or municipal authority; and any such money shall not be liable to demand, detention, seizure, or withdrawal without the voluntary consent of the depositor, by reason of any debt due against the depositor or his legal representative.

The Steamboat Bill.

The national House of Representatives has passed an act known as the Steamboat bill, for codifying the general laws of the United States regulating steam navigation. This measure has been pending in Congress for several years, and has twice before passed the House, in pretty much its present shape, but was defeated in the Senate, generally through the persistent efforts of Mr. Conkling, who has steadily opposed it. The bill passed by the House contains most of the amendments that have been made in the Senate in previous sessions. One amendment changes the rates of officers' licenses. The present rates are $10 for a first-class license and $5 for a second-class. The rates now proposed are $8 and $4, with $1 each for renewals. Another amendment requires vessels to carry howitzers and lines for the purpose of establishing communication with the shore in case of shipwreck. Still another amendment declares that none but citizens of, or persons actually in the United States, shall be licensed as pilots and engineers. As thus amended, the bill passed by a vote of 173 to 80.

Where is the Moral?

On Wednesday evening, as the down Napa train was flying into Yountville, a gray-haired man named Dewitt, drunk, staggered upon the track directly in front of the engine. It was too late to stop the iron monster; on it came, and the shuddering crowd expected to see him crushed under its feet. The pilot struck him, but, instead of hurling him down and passing over his body, picked him up gently as an elephant would lift a child in a circus, and carried him along on its arms until it reached the station, some distance off, and then turned him out upon the platform as carefully as if he were a basket of eggs. The conductor approached him with mingled relief and wrath on his brow, as he was getting up and shaking himself in an unconcerned sort of way, and said: "Old man, after this experience, I should think you would never touch another drop of liquor in your life." "Umph," grunted the old man, "if I hadn't been drunk, I'd be a dead man now," and he staggered off.—Vallejo Chronicle.

Not Entirely Destitute.

He had been gone from the parental home six months—left home in the first bloom of summer, with a smile upon his brow and a pickax in hand. The Black Hills his destination, glory and gold the goal. A summer spent amid the auriferous rocks—industry, perseverance, and a rare knowledge of chemistry and mineralogy his useful tools, in addition to the pickax. Results are such that he is enabled to return sooner than his most sanguine expectations had allowed him to dream of doing. Almost home, he pauses outside the town until nightfall and sends to his waiting, expectant parent the following suggestive message: "Bring me a large blanket and a pair of old pants—I've got a hat!"—*Bainbridge (Ga.) The Metric System.

The metric system has found its way into Congress, where a bill has been introduced in the House by Mr. Maish, providing that on and after Jan. 1, 1879, for all postal purposes, fifteen grammes shall be substituted for half an ounce, and so on in proportion; that the Postmaster General shall furnish all Postmasters with postal balances denominated in grammes of the metric system, and that on and after Jan. 1, 1880, the metric system of weights and measures, as legalized in the Revised Statutes, shall be obligatory. Mr. Maish has also introduced a bill to establish the metric system in coins of the United States, and to provide for and regulate coinage, including the new coin metal called "goloid."

How Seal-Skins Are Dressed.

When the seals have reached the killing ground, they are allowed a certain time to rest and cool, after which about 100 are driven together into an inclosure, and the fittest are selected for slaughter. The others are then allowed to go down to the nearest water, whence they make their way back to the sea. The instrument of destruction is a long club of hard wood, with which they are struck a violent blow on the head. One is usually sufficient. A long, sharp knife is then thrust into the vitals, and the carcass laid aside, and so till about 1,000 have been slain, when the work of skinning commences. When taken off, the skins are salted and sent home in that condition.

THE ONION.

BY [illegible].

Draw off his satin waistcoat,
  Tear his silk shirt apart;
And, shedding tears of pleasure,
  Creep closer to his heart!

Wrapt in this modern mummy
  In conscious fold on fold;
Yet what a wondrous power
  These endless wrappings hold

Of all the vegetables
  From garden's length to length
He is the one most mighty—
  Epitome of strength.

Whene'er his person enters
  All noses sniff the air,
And epicurean stomachs
  For gastric treats prepare.

A subtle spirit rises
  Of dinner in full bloom—
An appetizing odor
  Pervading all the room.

When at the well-laid table,
  How is the palate blest!
He betters other dishes,
  Yet is himself the best.

But then call on a lady;
  Why is her smile so grim?
Before a word is spoken
  She knows you've been with him.

Tickle the public and make it grin!
The more you tickle the more you'll win;
But teach the public—you'll never grow rich,
But live like a beggar and die in a ditch!

Take, O, take that bill away,
  That, alas! long since was due!
Call again some other day,
  When the trees do bud anew—
Mebbe, dimly distant spring
Some financial change will bring.

When you a see a man with a long willow switch in his hand sneak cautiously down to the back fence, and stealthily pull himself up until his head is above the top of it, and then look anxiously, longingly, and with a disappointed expression withal, up and down and all around a vast, lifeless and uninhabited scope of vacant lot, without a sign of human life about it, you may safely bet your little pile that there is a broken window in that man's home, and a 12-year-old boy about a mile away, and still going.

Steam on the Erie Canal.

The State Engineer and Surveyor, in his annual report, makes a presentation of the subject of canal transportation. The different modes of steam propulsion are considered and estimates furnished of the cost of transportation by the several modes which have been used with success. Steam has been used on the canal this year to a greater extent than ever before. Its use, however, has not been general, a small portion only of the tonnage having been moved by it. It appears from the estimates furnished in the report that the Baxter steamer, making ten round trips this season, accomplishes a given result at a slightly greater cost than the horse-boat that, in the case of the Belgian system, towing trains of three boats, and the towed boats making either eight or nine round trips, the same result is obtained at a cost of from half a cent to a cent per bushel less than by either of the first two modes mentioned; and that by the steamer and consort system, the boats making nine or ten round trips, the same result is accomplished, at a cost about one and one-sixth cents per bushel cheaper than by the horse-boat or Baxter steamer singly.—Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

An Abstract of Gen. Banning's Bill.

The bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Gen. Banning, Chairman of the Military Committee, for the reorganization of the army, reduces the number of enlisted men to 20,000, and the number of regimental organizations as follows: Cavalry regiments, from ten to six; artillery regiments, from five to three; infantry regiments, from twenty-five to fifteen; makes infantry regiments consist of three battalions of four companies each, of which two battalions constitute a peace establishment; provides for the reorganization and reduction of Adjutant Generals' and Inspector Generals' departments, and for the filling of certain grades by details from the line of the army; abolishes the Bureau of Military Justice and provides for the detail of an officer and Judge Advocate with the rank of Colonel; provides for the consolidation of the Quartermasters' and subsistence departments into one organization, to be known as the department of supplies, making a great reduction in the number of officers and filling the grades by details from the line of the army; requires the Secretary of War to report to the next session of Congress what reductions can be made in the medical department; reorganizes the pay department, making the Paymaster General a Colonel; abolishes the grade of Deputy Paymaster General, and fixes the number of Paymasters at twenty-five, being a reduction of twenty-seven Paymasters; provides for the constitution of a board to consist of the three Major Generals to report a plan for the reorganization of the corps of engineers and ordnance department; for ridding the army of the officers rendered supernumerary by the provisions of the bill, and for the reduction of the number of Major Generals and Brigadier Generals to one of the former and three of the latter, as vacancies occur in those grades; provides that general officers shall have the following aids: General, three, no limit to rank; Lieutenant General, two, not above the rank of Major; Major General, two, not above the rank of Major; Brigadier General, two, from First and Second Lieutenants, no increase of rank or pay on account of detail, to have first served five years with their commands, no detail to be made for more than five years. No officer below the rank of Colonel shall be promoted until he shall have passed an examination before three officers of his own branch of the service, senior to him in rank. Failing to pass the first examination, he is to be suspended for one year, and to be re-examined. All promotions shall be lineal to all grades below the rank of Brigadier General. All appointments to the grade of Second Lieutenant shall be from graduates of West Point and non-commissioned officers of the army. The headquarters of the army in time of peace are to be at Washington, and all orders are to be issued through the General of the army. Details of officers, as Presidents of colleges, etc., shall be only made from officers on the retired list. Officers are to be retired at the age of 62, or after forty-five years' service.

The Army Pay bill introduced by Gen. Banning fixes the annual pay of officers of the army as follows:

	Per Year.
The General	$10,000
Lieutenant General	8,000
Major General	6,000
Brigadier General	5,000
Colonel	3,000
Lieutenant Colonel	2,500
Major	2,000
Captain (mounted)	1,800
Captain (not mounted)	1,600
First Lieutenant (mounted)	1,600
First Lieutenant (not mounted)	1,400
Second Lieutenant (mounted)	1,300
Second Lieutenant (not mounted)	1,000
Ordnance Storekeeper	1,800

The second section makes considerable reduction in the allowances for forage and for rent of quarters.

Section 3 increases the monthly pay of non-commissioned officers as follows: Sergeant major, from $23 to $34 per month; quartermaster sergeant, from $22 to $33; chief trumpeter, from $22 to $24; first sergeant, from $22 to $33; sergeants, from $17 to $24; all corporals from $15 to $20 per month. The bill reduces pay of commissioned officers, including allowance for quarters, fuel and forage, in round numbers about $1,250,000 per annum. It increases the total pay of non-commissioned officers about $55,000 a year; but this will be much more than compensated by the reduction in the number of these men provided for in Gen. Banning's bill to reorganize the army. The two bills reduce the cost of the army between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000.

Hints on Cleanliness.

Once a week is often enough for a decent white man to wash himself all over, and whether in summer or winter that ought to be done with soap, warm water and a hog's-hair brush in a room showing at least seventy degrees Fahrenheit. Baths should be taken early in the morning, for it is then that the system possesses the power of reaction in the highest degree. Any kind of bath is dangerous soon after a meal or soon after fatiguing exercise. No man or woman should take a bath at the close of the day, unless by the advice of the family physician. The best mode of keeping the surface of the body clean, besides the once-a-week washing already mentioned, is as follows; As soon as you get out of bed in the morning, wash your face, hands, neck and breast; into the same basin of water put both feet at once, for about a minute, rubbing them briskly all the time; then with the towel, which has been dampened by wiping the face, feet, etc., wipe the whole body well, fast and hard, with mouth shut and breast projecting. Let the whole thing be done within five minutes. At night, when you go to bed, and whenever you get out of bed during the night, or when you find yourself wakeful or restless, spend from two to five minutes in rubbing your whole body with your hands, as far as you can reach in every direction. This has a tendency to preserve that softness and mobility of skin which is essential to health, and which too frequent washings will always destroy.—Hall's Journal of Health.

A French engineer returned to Paris from a honeymoon in Nice, and after securing a room at the hotel for his wife went out and shot himself in the Bois de Boulogne. His bride, after asking several times whether he had returned, went out to search for him, and finally drowned herself in the Seine. Two letters were found in their room—one from the husband to his mother-in-law, speaking of their happiness and promising a speedy return to Epernay; the other from the wife, declaring that she could not live without her husband.

FLAYED ALIVE.

An Instance of the Extraordinary Cruelty of the Turks.

The following is a translation in the Cleveland Herald of a private letter from a Russian officer:

Coming to a place where the road somewhat widened, about two miles from Telis, we halted, and, after driving away and cutting down in a short skirmish a party of Turks who were busy robbing our dead, we stopped to form before going on. As I rode along the front, shouting out orders to my men, an agonized cry for help arrested my attention. I looked around. Nothing but heaps of dead everywhere. Of these none needed me. But hark! once more, and again, and again these piteous cries. Hastily dismounting, I threw the bridle over my sound arm and ran toward some bushes from behind which the sounds proceeded, and there, in a pool of clotted blood, lay that which I at first failed to recognize as a human being, though human it certainly was in its piteous cries, and the seemingly gloved hands that clutched air and earth in their agony. The rest, from the waist upward, was one mass of raw, quivering flesh—the face featureless, eyelids and eyes cut out, the man flayed alive, all but the hands, whose white skin at first gave the impression of their being gloved. This ghastly object lay a few steps from a dead horse, one of our own regiment's golden bays. Faint at heart I bent over the sufferer, evidently one of our own men, but now mangled beyond recognition. He prayed for death with his poor, torn lips, and in a minute more W., our surgeon, and two more of our officers were by my side. I made room for W., who stooped for a few seconds over our comrade, and then rising, sadly shook his head, murmuring, "No help."

A sudden impulse prompted me to seize the poor, helpless hand in my own, and, pressing it, whisper a few words of comfort. At the sound of my voice came the sadder appeal: "Nicolai, for old friendship's sake send a bullet through my heart." This voice sounded so strangely familiar, and yet I could not recognize it. "Who are you?" "Alexis S." Alexis, my old schoolmate, who had a few hours ago shared my breakfast by our bivouac fire, and then rode away, handsome and bold, at the head of our gallant first squadron. He had fallen wounded, helpless, his horse shot under him, and the fiendish Turks were slowly torturing him to death when our approach drove them away. Clasping my hand in his, he still begged for death. My revolver was empty, discharged in the scuffle a few moments before. I looked at W., who silently drew out his, and, shuddering in every nerve, placed the muzzle against S.'s breast, and with averted face, fired twice in succession, while I still pressed the poor hand in mine. We wrapped him up in my cloak, and, placing him in the shallow ditch, rolled a bowlder over him, and then, with our hands still moist with his blood, we swore to each other never to empty the last chamber of our pistols, but always to reserve a shot for ourselves and friends should any of us, wounded, have to be left behind. May a quick death, a soldier's death, be ours.

As I rode away I thought of S.'s young wife and of my own, a few weeks' brides, one widowed, the other likely to be; and my heart burned with indignation within me as I thought how, in the face of a warfare waged by the Turks with such fiendish, savage atrocity, any civilized nation, or paper edited in a Christian land, would ever have the heart to waste their sympathies upon the Moslems.

Readjusting Postmasters' Salaries.

The Committee on Postoffices and Post-roads of the lower house of Congress have prepared a bill to regulate the compensation of Postmasters. It divides Postmasters into four classes. The first class receives $3,000 and upward; the second less than $3,000 and not less than $2,000; the third class from $1,000 to $2,000, and the fourth class less than $1,000. It provides that classes one, two and three shall be appointed by the President, and the fourth class by the Postmaster General. The three higher classes receive annual salaries, to be ascertained from their respective quarterly returns to the Postoffice Department. The compensation of Postmasters of the fourth class shall be the whole of the box rents collected at their offices and commissions on unpaid letters, postage collected, or amounts received from waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter and twine sold, etc. Their commissions are regulated by the amount of receipts from these sources. On the first $100 it is 60 per cent., and on all over $300 per quarter, 40 per cent. It provides that when this commission and box rents amount to over $100 the Postmaster General shall fix a salary. In no case is there to be allowed to any Postmaster of the fourth class a greater compensation than $250 in any one quarter, exclusive of money-order commissions. It further provides that the salaries of the first, second and third classes shall be readjusted every two years. No Postmaster is to receive exceeding $4,000, except in the city of New York, which salary shall remain as now fixed by law.

Discretionary power is given to the Postmaster General to withhold commissions on returns whenever he is satisfied that a Postmaster has made a false return. The penalty of a violation of the provisions of the bill in making returns is a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $5,000.

A Curious Experiment.

A curious experiment has been tried with buttermilk by testing it against claret. One who is in the secret will bet with one who is not that the latter, if blindfolded, cannot distinguish claret from buttermilk by the taste. Several glasses are filled with claret, and an equal number with buttermilk, and they are handed alternately to the blindfolded person, who tastes them. For a few turns he will name the respective liquors correctly, but after awhile his sense of taste becomes confused, and he insists that buttermilk is claret, and vice versa.

The paragraphists have discovered the best method of heating a street-car: "Carry a woman a block farther than she wants to go." It will be hot enough."

POPULAR SCIENCE.

BLIND FISH.

Blind fish are found in some Swiss lakes, but they are not as large as similar animals obtained from subterranean waters. This fact is explained by the fact that in the illumination of the open lakes they encounter a rivalry from their better-furnished brethren that prevents them from obtaining a full supply of food.

HONEY IN FLOWERS.

The wonderful magnitude of the least operations in nature is illustrated by the quantity of honey that can be gathered from flowers. Two hundred thousand pounds have been taken from bees kept within an area of ten miles, and on this basis it is plain that our continent might be made to produce thousands of tons yearly, and the honey crop outdo the sugar crop.

PROPAGATION OF EELS.

The Fishmongers' Company of Berlin has offered a prize for the discovery of a parturient eel, sufficiently developed to enable Prof. Virchow to ascertain how the race is propagated. Thus far the artificial culture of eels has defied all the researches of scientific men, and information on the habits of this fish is diligently sought.

TO DISTINGUISH BUTTER FROM OLEOMARGARINE.

Artificial butter now so nearly resembles the genuine article that it is difficult to distinguish one from the other. M. Jaillard submits the following plan: When the butter is placed between two slips of glass the animal fats appear under the microscope as arborescent crystallizations. Pure butter is seen only as fatty globules.

ELECTRICITY.

The days of the lamplighter are numbered, and the time is at hand when he will exist only in story. Electricity is certain to take his place, because it can work more cheaply. It has been tried for the purpose of lighting and extinguishing 220 street lamps in Providence, R. I., scattered over a district nine miles long. One man attends to the whole business, and does it in fifteen seconds. The method has now been on trial for some months, and a saving of $10 per lamp per year is reported.

A NEW KIND OF LOOM.

A newly-invented loom bids fair to work quite a revolution in the art of weaving. This loom is built entirely of metal, even to the shuttle, and is entirely different from any now in use. It is upright instead of horizontal. The shuttle passes through the warp instead of over it, as is commonly done, thereby making better goods, for the reason that the warp is not frayed. It does away with the tied twine harnesses, and in place of them has ingeniously contrived metallic ones, which are not only very durable, but do not chafe the yarns. Instead of the heavy, cumbersome, noisy sley, the shuttle-boxes are stationary, the reed only moving to beat up the filling. The picker's tick is also dispensed with, its place being supplied by an independent shuttle motion of novel design, and which acts at the proper time, no matter at what speed the loom is running. There are two looms in one frame, driven by a single pulley, thus requiring but half the usual space; it also requires only a comparatively little power, and is capable of great speed.

Another illustration of the fact that inventors seldom realize the benefit of their own inventions is the recent death of John Young, the inventor of the clothes-wringer, at Amsterdam, N. Y., in comparative poverty. He once sold a conditional right to a Boston firm for $5,000, when he might have realized $100,000.

Remarkable Success.

The success of the leading literary paper of the West, The Chicago Ledger, is truly remarkable. Since its introduction to the reading public, six years ago, The Ledger has steadily advanced in favor, and is now acknowledged second to no paper of the kind in the country. Its circulation is national, and has been obtained through the efforts of its publishers to produce a paper of high moral character, and at the same time sell it at a price consistent with the present hard times. That they have succeeded, and well, too, the thousands of readers of The Ledger scattered from Maine to Texas and from Oregon to Florida will bear testimony. The Chicago Ledger is a large forty-eight column weekly paper, which contains stories both complete and continued, in each number, written by the best authors of the day, and a great variety of information interesting to every one. The subscription price of The Ledger is only $1.50 per year, postage paid, and it is equal in every particular to other papers of the same character which sell for $3 a year. Three copies of this valuable paper will be sent to any one who sends 10 cents and their address to The Ledger, Chicago, Ill.

A Wonder-Working Remedy.

No remedial agent has ever been offered to the sick and debilitated at all comparable to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, in cases of remittent and intermittent fevers, constipation, nervous ailments, rheumatism and disorders involving constitutional weakness or physical decay. It literally "works wonders." The botanic ingredients, which its spirituous basis holds in solution, act like a charm upon the stomach, and through the stomach upon the brain, liver, bowels and nervous system. There is nothing in its composition that is not salubrious. It contains some of the most potent tonics of the vegetable kingdom and the juices of the best aperient and anti-bilious roots and herbs, combined with a perfectly pure, stimulating element. The Bitters are peculiarly adapted to those engaged in exhausting or unhealthy occupations, as by its use strength is sustained, and the ability of the system to resist atmospheric and other influences prejudicial to health largely increased.

The possession of riches will bring you no enjoyment unless you have good health; therefore, if you are troubled with any Disease of the Heart, no matter how slight, it is well to look to its immediate cure. Your physician may say, "I will give you relief," but notice that he does not say he will cure, but in Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR we have a cure, and can substantiate it by the many testimonials we have received. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. Ingalls, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists, price 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

Mt. Vesuvius.

Should an eruption occur in this volcano and cause the destruction of one-half of the inhabitants in the vicinity, the remainder, who barely escape with their lives, immediately move back upon the half-cooled lava, and there live in constant fear of another eruption, foolishly fancying that the only tenantable portion of the earth rests within the shadow of the great volcano. This fairly illustrates the force of habit and the persistency with which people cling to opinions when once formed. For example, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures incipient consumption, coughs, colds, and all affections of the liver and blood, yet some still depend upon physicians and remedies that have naught but repeated failures to which they can refer. And, although Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is sold under a positive guarantee to cure those weaknesses peculiar to women, and, notwithstanding that thousands of women bear testimony to its efficacy, and the truth of all statements made concerning it, many yet submit to [illegible] the [illegible]. Again, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, no larger than mustard seeds, will positively cure constipation, where it is dependent upon dyspepsia or torpid liver; yet some still depend for relief upon the "blue pill" or huge doses of drastic cathartic medicine. In the face of such facts, can we wonder at the blindness of the poor Italians?

Caution to the Public.

To avoid imposition, purchasers of Waltham Watches will observe that every genuine Watch, whether gold or silver, bears our own trade-mark on both case and movements.

Gold cases are stamped "A. W. Co.," and guarantee certificate accompany them. Silver cases are stamped "Am. Watch Co., Waltham, Mass., Coin Silver," or "Am. Watch Co., Waltham, Mass., Sterling Silver," according to quality, and are accompanied by guarantee certificate signed R. E. Robbins, Treasurer. The name "WALTHAM" is plainly engraved upon all movements, irrespective of other distinguishing marks.

This caution is rendered necessary by reason of the fact that our cases are frequently separated from our movements and put upon worthless movements of other makers, and vice versa, thus affecting injuriously the performance of the Watches, and vitiating our guaranty, which is intended only to cover our complete Watches [illegible] made by us. Every buyer should make a close inspection as indicated.

Richardson's New Method
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
Price, $3.25. By Nathan Richardson.
250,000 copies sold. Sales have surpassed those of all other books combined. Be sure to order by the above full title, and do not accept instead of this, The Modern School, which is an older book, by the same author. Mr. Richardson's opinion of the merits of this first effort may be gathered from the following, taken from the Preface to the New Method:
"Becoming at length satisfied of the truth of these criticisms (by many eminent composers and professors), and convinced that great improvements were obviously needed, I determined, if possible, to remedy the defects. Profiting by the experience and advice of the best practical teachers, I commenced a thorough and critical examination of my first method, and concluded that the only remedy would be to bring out a new work on an improved plan."
This new work, substituted for the defective Modern School, was Richardson's
NEW METHOD FOR THE PIANOFORTE
which has been revised and reenvised, until it is the most perfect of music books, is a great favorite with the profession, and is the only true "Richardson."

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 14 1878

Meeting of the Democratic Central Committee.

The Democratic Central Committee met at Auburn last Saturday, pursuant to a call of the chairman. Though the weather was stormy, the attendance was large, nearly every township being represented.

On motion the chairman was authorized to appoint a delegate to the State Convention from each township. The following delegates were then selected:

TOWNSHIPS.	DELEGATES.
Butler	W. I. Work.
Jackson	Joseph Walters.
Concord	S S Shutt.
Newville	B. F. Blair.
Stafford	Daniel Bordner.
Wilmington	A. D. Moore.
Union	C. A. O. McClellan.
Richland	L. D. Britton.
Fairfield	G. W. Dowas
Smithfield	Free Kelly.
Franklin	Joseph Sewell.
Troy	B. F. Cornelius.
Keyser	B. D. Thomas.

The following resolutions were then adopted:

RESOLVED, That the delegates this day appointed to cast the vote of this county, at the State Convention, to be held on Feb. 20, 1878, are hereby directed, in case of the absence of any of the delegates, to fill said vacancy from such members of the Democratic party from this county as may be in attendance, and all Democrats present from said county are invited to participate in said convention.

RESOLVED, That it is the sense of this meeting that our county convention should be held in the month of June, next.

RESOLVED, That we warmly recommend the nomination of Wm. Fleming, Esq., the democratic war horse of Allen county, Ind., for Treasurer of State.

RESOLVED, That the chairman of the Central Committee be instructed to notify the Democrats of the several townships to meet in mass convention at the usual places of holding elections in said tp, to elect delegates to cast their votes at the county convention the same as in a delegate convention. On motion the following resolutions were adopted:

RESOLVED, That we are in favor of, first, the remonetization of the silver dollar of 412½ grains, with free coinage, and full legal tender capacity for all debts, public and private.

Second, The unconditional repeal of the odious resumption act of 1875, now bankrupting the country.

Third, That the ruinous policy of withdrawing the greenback currency from circulation should be stopped at once, and that, Congress should, without delay, authorize its volume to be so increased as to meet the wants of the people.

Fourth, The total abolition of the National Banking system, and a withdrawal of National bank notes, their place as a circulating medium to be filled by the issuing of greenback notes with full legal tender capacity.

Fifth, That in view of the enormous depreciation of property, both personal and real, and the depressed condition of the times, entailing unusual burthens upon the producing, laboring, commercial and debtor class, that the war rate of 10 per cent. interest on notes and judgments, should be abolished and the old rate of six per cent. interest be made absolutely the legal rate in this state.

Sixth, That the attorney fee law in this state, should be either entirely repealed, or so modified by a judicious fee bill, regulating the charges to be made for collections, as will be just between creditor and debtor.

Seventh, That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders in the Republican party who secretly connived and with bare faced revolutionary effrontery, carried out the scheme, by and through venal Returning Boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for President and Vice-President, were wrongfully defrauded from the positions to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against a free government, a crime against the elective franchise and a crime that only can be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the Presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to oblivion by the people whom they have outraged.

—Weather cold.

—Cutting harness has ceased to be a joke.

—Subscribe for the COURIER, and don't borrow from your neighbor.

—The protracted effort conducted by the Rev. Mann, is progressing finely.

—Sol Barney spent two days in Fort Wayne, disposing of his cloverseed.

—John Provines can do more work than any two men in the township. So says the secret detective of the town. John says Muggins can't associate with his dog and coon, not having a good character.

—Isaac Depew, son of Jas. and Sally Depew, died very suddenly last Saturday evening of heart disease. He had been down town in the evening, and returned feeling quite well as usual, and went to bed. By some means his condition was discovered, and it is thought he had not been in bed ten minutes when he expired. He was 20 years and 7 months old.

MUGGINS.

—Four men and two bears appeared on the streets last Saturday and performed several feats to the amusement of a large crowd. When the "manager-in-chief" passed the hat around the crowd, imagined themselves in a Sanky and Moody meeting, to judge from the few pennies that were dropped into the hat.

Garrett Items.

—Business on the B. & O. continues lively. There has been a decided change in the transportation of freight since 1878.

—The new flour mill at this place is giving good satisfaction to all who patronize it. It is one of the best mills in Northern Indiana, and in fact there is no mill in the west that has better machinery. Farmers will do well to give it a trial, as the proprietors are gentlemen of experience in the business and will do justice.

—The change in the agency of the Loan and Improvement Co., has had quite an effect on some of our sports. Fredericks has been troubled very much since the change, with the "sore head," while on the other hand his successor, Connett, has received a severe attack of "big head."

—I understand that M. L., of this place, who wrote such an able article in defence of religion, for the COURIER of last week, became so sanguine on its merits that he has taken up the study of theology, and that he retired to the tamarack last Sunday, and there, in solitue, amidst the tamarack poles, delivered his first sermon, and as there were no pebbles to be found in that secluded spot, with which to enable him to subdue his perplexed embarrassment, a large snow ball was submitted.

—A certain would-be high-toned "rooster" who has been assisting the protracted meetings by exhorting and rehearsing the talk of old women, in regard to who is going with the ladies, etc., and then apologize and take it all back the next evening, has been trying to get a job to preach for the Christian congregation, and as he did not get the position, it is reported he is going to preach the Baptist doctrine. The question is how much would it take to employ such a "rooster" to crow for Old Nick.

D. O. C.

Another Door Keeper of the House of Representatives is being investigated, for trying to be a "biger man than old Grant." Well, if he is guilty, kick him out and get an honest man to fill his place As long as the Democracy will follow the policy of discharging dishonest scamps from office, we will be satisfied.

—List of unclaimed letters in Auburn P. O., Feb. 11th, 1878:

John Crates, Zila Cook, E. S. Downey, Jonah Goshua, David W. Harner, Mary Hurni, E. Hale, Mrs. Freman Houser, Mrs. M. J. Johnson, Mrs. Ellen Miller, W. B. Osborn, Mrs. John Plum.

JOSEPH RAINIER, P. M.

—The Press is the only advocate of the bondholding fraternity, of arrogant aristocratic demanders of gold for interest, and gold for principal, in the county. And there is not one Shylock note-trader, or mortgage-getter, but what endorses a gold basis.

—Capt. white, of the Fort Wayne Fruit House, has made another reduction. Currants reduced from 9c to 7c per pound. Shoulders from 7c to 6c and tobacco from 50c to 40c per pound. Teas and sugars are also put down to the lowest figure.

—The Garrett Herald came to us last week looking as neat and bright as a new pin. It has been enlarged to eight columns, and filled with local and miscellaneous news. We are glad to welcome so able an adjunct on the silver question.

—The Albion New Era is informed that Butler is no pet of ours. If he is guilty of half charged to him, we want to see him kicked out. But Republicans should hold their heads in shame until Kellogg is wiped from senatorial existence.

—It is said that Johnny Picker is making arrangements to place upon the stage a new and attractive dramatic play, before long. There will be no reserved seats, but "Michael Snyder" will appear between scenes as in the past.

—We learn there was no debate at the Junction Saturday evening, owing to one of chosen sides not preparing any argument for the subject in question. The failure is attributed to the cause of too many dances in the neighborhood.

—Our farmer boys lead the "city broadcloth" in sleighing parties. They pass through town nightly, with their merry voices sounding sweetly upon the mid night air, while the B. C's, take their'n out in pool, and let the "gals of the period" ride on hand sleds.

—The Presbyterians, at Waterloo, elected church officers last week: F. W. Willis, Elder; Newell Buckland, Deacon; J. A. Barnes, Trustee; Henry Willis, Treasurer; S. B. Johnston, Secretary and Chorister.

—A father fearing an earthquake in the reign of his home, sent his two boys to a distant friend until the peril should be over. A few weeks after the father received this letter from his friend: "Please take your boys home and send down the earthquake."

—Al Dawson was the recipient the other day of a box of raisin grapes, from his mother, Mrs. S. Cary Evans, now residing at Riverside, San Banardino County, California. They were the nicest we ever saw.

—Persons writing to us will please write on all sides of the paper, closing each article with a few lines at the top of first page. It is very convenient, and then if you want to see your article in print, never sign your name.

—Our correspondents have been doing nobly for several weeks, and we beseech of them to continue in their kind endeavors to make the COURIER a paper for all communities within the county lines.

—To-day is St. Valentine's day and the little "cogers" are looking anxiously for their fellow playmates to call on the P. M. Ugly, disagreeable surprise. The Smiths' and Jones' will receive their usual supply.

—Lewis J. Geugier, late of Edgerton, has permanently located among us, near the Catholic church, and will give instructions on the piano or organ. He will also start a night school in both German and English.

—Seven-eighths of the married women in this country don't care a hairpin whether they ever get to vote or not. What they want, to keep peace in the family, is a spitoon that can't be upset, —Hiram Randall and wife, extend their heartiest thanks to the many kind friends, who assembled at their residence last week, and made them the recipient of a handsome bed quilt.

—Wm. Wallace, living east of the city, was having a little sport in Sommers' saloon last week, in the way of a wrestling match, in which he had a limb dislocated, and has not been able to get out of his bed since.

—We learn that a family in this county by the name of Jno. Strophs, recently had a lot of silverware stolen from their residence, during the family's absence. The ware amounted in value to several hundred dollars.

—Some of our young kids have left home without the consent of their Pa's and Ma's. If this snow should last for a few days, it will make bad walking for them on their return.

—Klotz is agent for the St. John and Singer Sewing Machines. They are the best lightest running machines made, and if you are in need of a machine don't fail to see them. They are warranted to give satisfaction.

EXAMINATION OF TEACHERS.—Examinations will be held in Auburn on the first Saturday, and in Waterloo on the last Saturday in each month, beginning March 4, 1876. Examination begin at 10 o'clock A. M.

JAMES A. BARNES Co. Sup't.

—Mr. C. T. Murray, the brilliant, spicy editor of the South Bend Herald, has withdrawn from the Herald and will go to Washington to take a position on one of the leading dailies of that city. We wish him success.

—Mr. John Stoner, owner of the Stoner Mills, in south part of the county, died at 5 o'clock a. m last Friday morning. Mr. Stoner had been serving as a minister of the gospel for several years back.

—When in town and in want of a good square meal at hard-time prices, go to Humes' restaurant, next door to Abright's, and you will be well treated Parties attending court should bear this in mind.

—The ground hog is ahead of Prof. Tice this time. It wouldn't be a bad idea, however, for these two distinguished gents., to allow themselves to be used for a target in the spring.

—The coming campaign looks now as though it will be full of life and vigor. That's the way to win, boys, and let us all push forward with honesty, friendship and truth for our motto.

—The Butler Record will not be issued for two weeks, as Mr. Kist intends introducing new improvements in his paper, requiring some time for their accomplishment.

—No cough or cold however obstinate can resist the healing qualities of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup It completely cures when all others fail. Try it. Only 25 cents a bottle, larage size 50 cents. Sold in every drug store.

—When Weamer attempts burlesque, we hope he will either make it a success or leave our name out of his list of subjects. His last effort was terribly flat and pointless.

—H. F. Long sold the Corunna R. R. Club an organ at last. A resolution was also passed at the Lutheran Sunday school last Sabbath, in this place, for the purchase of one.

—It is reported on the streets that Sam Searight, hardware merchant at Butler, made an assignment last week. We are sorry that Sam has met with this misfortune.

QUERY: "Why will men smoke common tobacco, when they can buy Marburg Bros. "Seal of North Carolina," at the same price?" DEC. 27.1y

—We learn that Jno. Casebeer will erect a new hotel near the sight of the burnt one, at Lagrange, in the spring.

THE INDIANAPOLIS SENTINEL'S EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

Only $1.50 will pay for the Weekly Sentinel and the Sentinel's new map of Indiana, both postage paid, or Ropp's Easy Calculator, a work that no farmer, mechanic or business man should be without, sent in place of map, if desired.

The Sentinel is in every sense the paper of the people.

It advocates justice and fair living opportunities for industry and labor.

That there be no more class legislation.

A reduction of the present ruinous rate of interest.

An immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption law.

The remonetization of silver.

Withdrawal of national bank notes—greenbacks and silver to be made a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, without limit,

The bondhold to be paid no more than the contract and to share equally the burdens of government with industry and labor.

ON TRIAL We are confident the Sentinel will not be stopped where once tried, and therefore submit the above extraordinary offer.

Addres SENTINEL COMPANY,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

—The following gentlemen were elected Directors of the Fort Wayne Jackson & Saginaw railroad, at their last meeting: P. B. Loomis, D. Merriman, E. A. Webster, W. D. Thompson, W. R. Reynolds, H. H. Smith, Jackson, E. O Grosvenor, Jonesville, A. P. Edgerton, John A. Clark, John H. Bass, O. P. Morgan, Fort Wayne, C. A. O. McClellan, Waterloo.

—A horse with the blind-staggers plunged through a grocery store at Defiance, Ohio, and injured several persons therein, damaging counters, showcases, &c., to the amount of $30.

—People at Corunna are so well pleased with their school this winter that an effort will be made to raise money for an extra month, after the township purse weakens.

—J. W. Case's Scroll factory resumed work Monday, after a lay off of several months. This will give employment to several men who are in want of work at present.

—A large party from Garrett came over last evening, and seemed to enjoy themselves greatly to judge from appearances.

—Geo Heusler's hardware store, at Butler, was burglarized last week.

Diamonds.

Why is a an infant like a diamond? Now, dear wife, answer and I will buy you a plated castor at Ward's. Wife, with a sigh—Because it is a dear little thing. Now, dear husband, it is rather a damper to one's elation of feeling at a public ovation, to think that though the people rush and crowd to get a look at our dear husbands, they would be just as ready to rush and crowd to see him "if he was going to be hanged." Set of French China dinner ware for $65.00; 108 pieces Tea and Dinner $10. We warrant every bit of our solid silver ware and silver plated ware to be of the double and tripple plate, and all stamped with the named of Meriden Britanna Co., the best and largest plating company in the world. Tea set, $35 to 100, water set, $18 to 60; castors, $4 to 50. Card and Cake stands, pickle castors, knives, spoons, ladles, sugar shells, fruit knives, the best stock of plated at Ward's Cheap Crockery Store, No. 9 Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

—He went to the west end of Eigth street to "see the pride of his heart," last Sunday evening, and on entering, through a timid sensation that another fellow might be there, forgot to relieve his "clam" of a huge chew of tobacco. The carpet presented a neat and tidy appearance and there was no spitoon, wood-box or stove draft, in which he could gently lay his cud away, or relieve himself of a "slop-pail" full of the nasty juice. The only thing remaining was to swallow it and swallow it he did. In the course of time it operated, and all he had swallowed for the past two weeks was be-spattered from the sitting room to the front gate.

—The Auburn Republican is very solicitous that Dan Voorhees be defeated in his aspirations for an election to the U. S. Senate. Now, if the "financial theory," advocated by that paper last week, is correct, why should Voorhees be defeated? He is the most prominent and able advocate of the repeal of the resumption act in the State, and as the Republican wants the resumption act repealed, it betrays a lack of consistency in this matter. In the same issue in which Weamer declares in favor of repeal, as the only hope of an oppressed people, he copies approvingly the nomination of Gen. Harrison for Senator, on a hard money platform. We don't apprehend it makes much difference on which side Weamer is, in this contest; but he ought make an effort to stay on one side or the other long enough to publish one number of his paper.—Waterloo Press.

Our sentiments exactly, but a sense of delicacy has prevented us from saying as much. It's no pleasant task to take Weamer to account, for his blunders and mistakes, and we feel like a father when punishing a child, rather take than inflict the castigation.

—Dr. James Yarnell, proprietor of the Mineral Springs' Health Institute, at Rome City, Ind., who is making regular monthly visits to Auburn during the present winter, can be consulted again at the Central House, on Thursday, Feb. 21st, and at Long's hotel, Waterloo Tuesday, Feb. 26th. The doctor represents an institution of high standing and undoubted responsibility, and has the largest and most successful practice in the treatment of Chronic Difeases of any physician in the west. Often examining and prescribing for more difficult cases in a single day than come under the observation of an ordinary physician in a life time. Those who wish to avail themselves of this convenient opportunity now offered, of consulting this experienced physician, should do so at once, as he will be unable to leave his institute after the opening of the summer season. Besides the treatment of chronic diseases in all their complicated forms, he gives special attention to the manufacture of surgical apparatus for the correction of physical deformities, including spinal curvatures, club foot, high joint disease, weak ankle paralysis and all cases requiring mechanical support.

A Bad Case of Brother-in-law.

Last Friday evening terrific screams were heard upon our streets from some one in distress, and hastening to the spot our reporter found that a pair of brothers in-law were engaged in a destructive conflict. It seems that our friend Gregg, of the "Little Cigar Shop on the Corner," and George Washington Weamer were trying to settle an account, when a difference of 12 cents arose, and this being demanded by Gregg, was responded to by George, by applying an epthet not very complimentary to his wife, who was present. Now, Gregg is a quiet, peaceable, industrious, good natured fellow, poor but honest, and a cripple. But however much a cripple, he had the manhood to resent an insult so foully offered by the husband of his sister, and in a few minutes George was disappearing down stairs at a two forty gate, and Gregg held the field, flushed with pride and feeling as proud as a two-year old colt behind a brass band, while George looked like an army mule pulling a load of pig-iron. Take it all in all it was a most disgraceful affair for a public educator to indulge in, and to make amends he might defray expenses incurred, which will distress a worthy, and hard working citizen and a cripple, and apologise for his rudeness. Little acts of this kind go a good ways to make amends for the shortcomings of human nature.

The Problem of Life

—LECTURE BY—

Theodore Tilton!

—ON—

Tuesday Evening Feb. 26, 1878.

On the above occasion the people of this corner of Indiana will have the rare opportunity of hearing Mr. Tilton in his lecture on the "Problem of Life." The lecture will take place at the M. E. church, Auburn. Tickets have been placed for sale in the neighboring towns with the following parties:

Waterloo,....F. VanAuken,
Angola,......Dr. E. Leas,
Butler........G. B. Hoopingarner,
Spencerville..G. A. Bishop,
Garrett......Jno. Robbins.

Such arrangements will be made with the railroads as to accommodate all from abroad. Persons desiring to have seats assured them will need to engage tickets, or send in their names before hand.

M. SEILER,
A. ROBBINS, } Auburn.

Read what our most prominent papers have to say about these lectures:

[From the Springfield Republican.]

Mr. Tilton's address was really a high moral lesson throughout. Eloquence, analysis, analogy, imagery, description, deduction—all were there, and their effect was unmistakable. As he warmed with his subject, Mr. Tilton rose to that fervid, splendid oratory that seems as essentially his own as the air itself. It reminded his hearers of old of the days when his vioce was a clarion call and his gray hairs now seemed the emphasis of time on the ardent nature that spoke then.

[From the N. H. Daily Union]

Theodore Tilton's lecture last evening was a grand, a noble one, and we think that every person who heard him, and whose noblest aspirations were not quickened, and who did not for the time loathe within himself all motives not of the purest and holiest, must have failed through some fault of his own. We venture the assertion that more forcible words, heavy with the pure gold of heaven itself, have dropped from his lips in the two lectures he has delivered in this city, than will be heard here for a year to come. There is a masterly eloquence, an apparent earnestness in his speech, which touches the heart.

[From the New York Sun.]

Theodore Tilton was greeted with as large an assembly in Brooklyn last evening as the spacious Academy could hold, and the wealth, the character, and the respectability of Brooklyn were notably represented. The Academy walls rang with applause and cheers as Tilton passed on the platform. After round upon round as applause, he arose slowly and said: "In the presence of so magnificent an assemblage, and in the face of a demonstration so unexpected, at least to me, I don't know what I can say to you to show my gratitude. I have no words to speak of that which cannot be spoken of in words. All I can say is, thanks, thanks, many thanks.' The applause which followed was a greater outburst than that which preceded. The lecture on "The Problem of Life" was a stream of pure language, brightened by wit and humor, strong with philosophy, useful with ripe suggestions, and powerful with impassioned oratory.

Summit Items.

EDITOR COURIER.—In last week's Press I noticed a slanderous item written by a person signing his name Union It appears that his main object is to slander the greenback movement and run it down in the minds of the people. From his item I judge he is a low-bred ignoramus, who has always lived in the back woods and just been weaned, has started out to make his living by his wits, but he had better change his course or he may make a complete wreck of himself, as I think his capital is scarce. He speaks of an ex-sewing machine agent who was the leading figure at the Ridge school house, Saturday evening, Feb. 2nd. He says this agent wants to raise the price of machines to where they were in past years. Any one can see that man Union, is a lunatic, or he would not make such assertions as he did and without cause whatever, or at least he stated none in his item. I think any editor of good common sense can see at the first glance that an item of this kind is based on pure jealousy, and any editor who will publish such an item is no better than the writer, and his paper should not be supported by the people. E. M.

Billy Stewart.

The above third-rate dead beat, of Fort Wayne, with his congress of stars (?) appeared here last Monday evening, and tried to entertain the boys with one of the worst shows with which our town has been disgraced for some time. We did think Billy had some little sense, but his talk about his name being a household word and his brass in puffing his own show on the stage is too disgusting for any intelligent mind. His troupe, with the exception of a clog dancer, and a dutch comedian, both of whom are good, is a fraud. His lady (?) artists were anything else but good singers and the whole attempt at minstrelsy was a complete failure. Billy came up here about three years ago and succeeded in beating us out of small bill, but we dealt with him kindly, hoping he would mend his ways. He tried again this time by getting away on a frieght train, and then pretending he had sent the amount in by mail, but it never came to hand. Such little acts as these lessen our confidence in traveling showmen.

—The marshal should stop the small boys from throwing snow-balls at parties riding in sleds.

—A German, chopping wood for Tom Cool, came near giving his foot a severe cut while splitting bolts.

—Circuit Court commences next Monday week. There are about the usual number of cases on the docket.

—Our farmers in the south-eastern part of the county are complaining of the hog cholera again.

—The sale of delinquent lands took place last Monday. We are glad to state they were light.

—The B. & O. railroad pays about ten thousand dollars to the people of Garrett, each month.

—The stock holders of the Ft. Wayne Jackson & Saginaw railroad held their annual meeting Tuesday.

—Justice of the Peace must pay their fines over to the county treasurer every six months, sayeth the law.

—We have not heard of any accidents as yet resulting from sleigh riding. It's a hard winter for local editors.

—28 days in this month. Will some of our "weather cocks" tell how high the creek will be on the last day.

—The "slight of hand" show left on the B. & O. 4 o'clock p. m. train, and Mr. Ensley yearns for his hall rent.

—The Eel River and Grand Rapids railroads have formed a union depot at LaOtto. This should have been done long ago.

—There is talk of another paper at Defiance. That place wants three papers about as bad as this one does two—just about.

—A. K. Gubb has taken a contract to furnish 21,000 cigars for a Ft. Wayne firm. They expect to wrap up the last ones this week.

—Our ladies should keep up their church societies. Meetings of this kind give evidence of a more thrifty congregation.

—Pius ix, Pope of Rome, died last Thursday afternoon. The cardinals will soon assemble in conclave and elect a new one.

—We have heretofore neglected to state that ex-Sheriff Meese has been conducting a successful religious effort near New Era.

Clark's store, at Waterloo, was burlarized last week of about $100 worth of cutlery. That is slashing into one firm pretty lively.

—Preparations are being made for the spring elections. All offices will be open for converts, except the one held by Justice Altenberg.

—A man went to Swan last week, registered at the hotel and went to bed with a revolver and shot himself. It is not known who he is.

—The M. E. protracted meeting at Garrett, closed last week. They did a noble work, adding some fifty new members to the church.

—The 17th of this month we will have an eclipse of the moon. We are not informed where it will be visible; probably at Garrett or Sedan.

—Senator McDonald made a strong speech in favor of silver and against resumption Tuesday. Indiana seems to be well represented in the Senate.

—We notice invitations scattered here and there for a dance at Huntertown, under the management of Tom. Stevens—windy Tom. Go down, boys.

—We request all mothers to stop using Laudanum for their babies, but use Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup, a good medicine. It contains nothing injurious. 25 cents a bottle. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

THIEVES.

On last Monday night the hardware store of Geo. Hensler was entered by some unknown persons who stole about three hundred dollars worth of knives, compasses, brace bits, razors, files, razor straps, spoons and revolvers. The entrance was effected by boring a piece out of the door in the rear end of the building, and then removed the iron bar that fastened the door. After they had secured their plunder they took the lock off the front door and probably left the building by that door.—Butler Record.

—We trust all our local correspondents will send in their items by Tuesday of each week. We would prefer having them written on one side of the paper only, and in ink, and all proper names should be spelled correctly and written legibly. On application we will furnish stamped envelopes already addressed, and paper on which to write.

ONE CENT REWARD.—This reward will be paid for the return of one Wilbur Jaynes Austin, who left home on Tuesday morning last, and was to return that night but didn't. He was last seen in Fort Wayne eating a milk stew. There is no fear but that he will turn up as soon as hungry, but there is such a demand for goods at the boot upside down, that Dave is about flaxed out and he needs assistance.

—We had not time last week to mention the death of Miss Sadie Grogg only in a small space, as we were just going to press when the news reach us. We learn that she died easily, being fully aware of the fate that was awaiting her. She spoke loud and distinctly until a moment before she expired, and gave the family her desire for burial, and also requested that Rev. Johnson preach the sermon. The people of the city will miss her in their entertainments. She was nearly 24 years of age.

—A lady who is very deaf stopped a milkman as he was passing the house the other day, and ask him how much he charged for a quart of milk, and then put up her ear trumpet to catch the reply. The man drew a quart of milk and emptied it into her trumpet, and the result has been that he goes three miles out of the way to keep out of sight of the lady, who sits on the porch with a shot gun waiting for him to pass.

A Bear Fight.

A strolling band of bear tamers passed through here last Saturday to Waterloo, where they purchased the larger of Si Lock's black bears. On Sunday they tried to ring its nose, and had a desperate struggle with the animal. Throwing it on its back they did their utmost to introduce the ring, during which two of them were bitten and another clawed severely. Finally they poured water into its mouth to keep it from biting, and soon choked it to death. They afterwards bought the other one from Si, ringed it and went to Kendallville

A Card.

It has been reported in and about the vicinity of Auburn, that the New York store was going to be removed to some other point, but such is not the case. We wish it distinctly understood that the New York store is one of the fixtures of Auburn. We wish to say further that we are now making arrangements to buy our spring stock, which we expect to open early. We will have one of the largest and best selected stock of dry goods ever offered in this market. We will also be in the wool trade, and expect to buy all that is offered.

Yours, &c., G. H. FORKNER & Co.

New Marble Works.

We are glad to state that Abner Niebel, Esq., one of the reliable solid citizens of Tiffin, Ohio, and largely connected with the manufacturing industries of that city, will establish his head quarters at Auburn, and erect large marble works, the coming season. It is always a pleasure to announce the coming of new enterprise into our county, and especially when under the management of men of large experience and capital.

—The ladies social connected with the M. E. church, will be entertained by Mrs. J. B. Casebeer, at her residence next Wednesday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all, and a large attendance is desired, as there is important business to be transacted. No refreshments, by order of society.

MRS. T. C. MAYS, Pres't.

—During the year 1877, 42,360 paupers in Indiana were cared for at the expense of the various counties in the State, at a cost of $600,626. Here is a chance for the narrow contracted cuss, who corresponds for the "Republican," in regard to our county asylum, to twist his steam valve again.

—Charley Murray, of the Goshen Democrat, has sold his interest in that office to Billy Bean and will go to South Bend to take charge of the Herald. Let his enemies say what they will, Charles Murray is an able, vigorious writer and a close, persistent student. We wish him unbounded success.

—A young man by the name of Harry Potter, recently of South Bend, Ind., was arrested at Garrett last Friday for theft. Several articles of jewelry, revolvers, &c., belonging to John Stoops were found on his person, which gave sufficient evidence for his arrest. He now boards with Sheriff St. Clair.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE METROPOLIS DISASTER.

The story of the loss of the steamer Metropolis is that related by James F. Alcorn, formerly an officer in the navy, and temporarily attached to the ill-starred vessel:

On Wednesday night at 8 o'clock I was called by the mate to assist the carpenter in stopping a leak aroun . the rudder trunk. Found the stern-post loose, and so reported. Remained at the post, using all possible exertions to stop the leak or prevent its increase, until about 5:30 a. m., when I was called on deck, and found the ship a partial wreck. One of the port boats was hanging over the side by her bow-tackle to the davit, the smoke-stack gone, and the ship heading for the beach. Reached the fore cutter and, in obedience to an order from the Captain, commenced to start the water in the casks stored forward to lighten the ship; was assisted in so doing by the carpenter and one of the quartermasters, who was afterwards drowned. The mate suggested that sail should be made by setting the foresail, and, on getting his consent, went aloft and, assisted by Charles Seaman, loosed the foresail and succeeded in setting the sail, which remained but a few minutes until carried away, and it was necessary to clew up the port wing of the sail. The ship struck heavily amidships, evidently breaking her back, but she continued to drive on the beach. The admirable management of the helm, assisted by the foresail, maintained the ship's position head on until fairly beached. Soon after this the main-mast went, and she began to break up rapidly, the first seas that boarded her having destroyed or crippled all the remaining boats but the dingy, which was attached to the starboard forward davits. Upon that boat I placed my chief hope of safety, provided I could maintain possession of the boat for sending a line ashore at low water. But while my attention was otherwise engaged the boat was lowered and my purpose defeated, while she, without any management save the providence of God, was borne to the beach—a perfect "ark of safety" for the six or seven poor fellows who had the courage to secure the opportunity. During the trying hours of the day several of the ill-fated passengers, bravely intrusting themselves to the tide, evidently lost heart with the passage of the first breaker over their heads, and, abandoning all hope, sank without a struggle. Others, either washed or leaping off the wreck, would almost seem to have committed suicide, so deliberately did they bury their heads beneath the waves and meet their doom. The foremast falling aft, and the foresail being still partially spread, several were either killed by its fall or buried beneath the mass of the sail in such a way as made death certain....At about 4:30 or perhaps 5 p. m., the midship body of the hull, the fore body being already gone, began to break up rapidly, while I urged all who would listen to me to trust themselves to Providence, the waves and their life-preservers. Many did so, and the majority with success. At length the closing scene was upon us. The lower-deck beams gave way and the starboard broadside, giving a few more heavy shocks from the surf, sank slowly beneath the waves.

THE EAST.

Philadelphia has just had the most destructive fire that has visited the city in three years. The loss is estimated at $500,000. H. P. & W. P. Smith, dry-goods commission merchants, were the heaviest losers....Boston, on the same day, had quite a costly blaze. The large furniture factory of F. W. Holmes & Co. was burned, involving a loss of $200,000, and throwing 500 people out of employment....Mr. Thomas Lord, the aged New York millionaire, whose marriage to the dashing widow Hicks created such a rumpus among the relatives of the bridegroom, has emerged from his retirement, and will hotly contest the legal proceedings brought against him by his sons. The old gentleman says it was on account of his children's threats that he and his wife kept secluded....New York city reports 129 commercial failures during January, the largest number of any one month since the panic of 1873.

The gale that swept along the North Atlantic coast on the night of the 1st inst. exceeded in violence anything of the kind experienced on that coast for many years, and was attended with serious loss of life and property. There was wreck and ruin in the track of the gale for hundreds of miles along the shore. Vessels were beached, houses demolished, telegraph poles prostrated, and houses, bridges, and railroad tracks swept away by the heavy sea. A schooner was driven ashore on Plum island, and all on board lost. Three sailors belonging to a disabled brig were drowned in Chesapeake bay while attempting to reach the shore in a small boat. On Coney Island, N. Y., several houses were swept away by the angry waves, and two women and five children were drowned. Numerous disasters at other points are reported. The wind at times assumed the velocity of a tropical hurricane, and was accompanied by a furious fall of snow, which in some places reached a depth of two feet on the level.

There recently arrived at Baltimore, in a vessel from Demerara, a boy answering in some respects the description of Charley Ross. It was firmly believed by the Baltimoreans that the long-lost boy had at last been found, and there was great excitement for a little while. To settle the matter M. Christian K. Ross visited that city and took a look at the boy. He at once declared that it was not Charley....The good people of Mauch Chunk, Pa., have a genuine sensation in the shape of an alleged miraculous cure. One Amelia Greth was taken sick and apparently died. Father Heinen, a Catholic priest, was called in, and by some hocus pocus, it is claimed, restored the dead to life. Amelia, at the call of the priest, was instantly transformed from a cold corpse to a living, breathing, talkative woman. She immediately arose, dressed herself, walked a long distance to church, and declared herself as well and strong as ever. Whether or not it is a real miracle, it has certainly produced a great sensation among the Mauch Chunkers and all the people round about that region.

The criminal carelessness with which banking institutions are conducted in these modern days is forcibly illustrated by the case of the Bank of North America, of New York. The teller of this bank, Augustus M. Turney, in 1869 commenced speculating with the concern's funds, and lost. He endeavored to repair his losses, but ill-fortune attended every venture. He has continued these speculations ever since, until, despairing of ever restoring the stolen funds he now comes forward and makes full confession. The defalcation, which has been accumulating for a period of eight years, now amounts to over $109,000....The Pacific Print Mills, at Lawrence, Mass., have been destroyed by fire. Loss, $125,000.

THE WEST.

Chicago has had a criminal trial of unusual interest. A constable, while in the act of levying upon the household goods of Miss Alvina McKee to satisfy a judgment for rent, was shot and killed by the woman. An indictment for murder followed, and, after a trial lasting six days, the jury rendered a verdict of not guilty. It was proved on the trial that the woman had been subject to unusual annoyance and persecution from constables, that the one who met his death at her hands gained admission to the premises by false representations, that he demeaned himself in a rough and unseemly manner, and, finally, that the warrant with which he was armed was illegal in form, and therefore void. Popular feeling ran strongly in favor of the accused, and few criminal trials in that city have excited such deep interest....Gen. Miles reports that his forces have set out from the post on Tongue river to look after the hostile Sioux, of whom so many rumors have lately been heard.

The Academy of Music, a theater hall located in the West Division of Chicago, has been destroyed by fire.

There is stored in Chicago elevators 1,280,916 bushels of wheat; 679,767 bushels of corn; 313,904 bushels of oats; 183,417 bushels of rye, and 758,802 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 3,216,306 bushels, against 5,060,186 bushels at this period a year ago.

R. E. J. Miles, of the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, has recovered a verdict of $40,000 damages against P. T. Barnum, for a libel published two years ago.

THE SOUTH.

J. Madison Wells was arrested, last week, by the Sheriff of Orleans parish, at a station on the New Orleans and Mobile railroad, where he had been sojourning since his departure from New Orleans.

The revenue officers who are engaged in the detection and arrest of illicit distillers in Winston county, Ala., have been resisted by overpowering numbers of armed men, and prevented from enforcing the Revenue laws....The Treasurer of Lee county, Miss., is missing. About $40,000 of the county's funds are also missing.

Both houses of the Mississippi Legislature last week adopted a resolution instructing their Senators and Representatives to vote for the Silver bill.

The trial of Thomas C. Anderson, of the Louisiana Returning Board, was brought to a conclusion at New Orleans on Feb. 7, and resulted in a verdict of guilty after fifty minutes' deliberation, by the jury. The jury considerately recommended the accused to the "mercy of the court." J. Madison Wells was still in jail at that date, and claimed that he was unable to give the bail ($10,000) demanded by the court.

In a duel at Brownsville, Texas, between Hon. Nestor Maxan and M. De La Pena, the former was shot through the body and killed. Deceased was a leading lawyer....By the sinking of the steamer Lessie Taylor on the Atchafalaya river, in Louisiana, a colored woman and child and four or five deck-hands were drowned.

GENERAL.

Business embarrassments: Althof, Bergman & Co., toy importers, New York, liabilities $150,000; the Topeka Bank and Savings Institute, Topeka, Kan., deposits $140,000, nominal assets $290,000; Eli Parsons, hats and clothing, Toledo, Ohio; Cooley, Palmer & Co., dry-goods jobbers, Dubuque, Iowa; Merchants' National Bank, Fort Scott, Kansas; First National Bank, Kansas City, Mo.; the Commercial National Bank, Kansas City, Mo.; James Watson, coal dealer, Pittsburgh, Pa., liabilities $100,000; George Park, manufacturer of edge tools, Buffalo, N. Y., liabilities $60,000, assets $11,000; Peoria Furniture Company, Peoria, Ill., liabilities $22,000; Young, Smith & Co., sugar importers, New York, liabilities $260,000; Howard, Snelling & Co., coal dealers, Boston, liabilities $130,000; the Casement Savings Bank, Union City, Pa., liabilities $40,000; James H. Batchelder, lumber dealer, Middlebury, Vt., liabilities $60,000, assets $25,000; Henry McCulloch, stock dealer, Wells county, Ind., liabilities $100,000; Donovan, Williams & Shannon, boots and shoes, Montreal, liabilities $200,000; G. F. Seebold, china and queensware, St. Louis; the Providence County Savings Bank, Pawtucket, R. I.

William Wieners was hanged at St. Louis, on Friday, the 1st inst., for the murder, in January last, of A. V. Lawrence, a barkeeper in a low theater. A tremendous effort was made to save the condemned man from the gallows, but the Governor of Missouri was inexorable. On the same day Joseph Woods was hanged at Malone, N. Y., and Philip Watson (colored) was similarly disposed of at Cincinnati. The crimes for which this trio of culprits suffered death were all of a peculiarly atrocious nature.

Edmund Jussen, of Chicago, brother-in-law of Carl Schurz, and attorney for the Chicago whisky crooks, has written a letter in which he sharply attacks the administration for refusing to pardon his clients.

The members of the Louisiana Returning Board appealed to Judge Bradley, of the United States Supreme Court, to issue a writ of certiorari ordering a transfer of the cases from the State to the United States Court. Judge Bradley, in a decision of some length, refused the application. The decision sets forth that the Returning Board make application on the ground of prejudice and inability to secure their rights and the fact that the Jury law of 1877 is hostile to colored citizens. Justice Bradley says the application raises three questions: First, was the presentation of the petition sufficient to amend the jurisdiction of the State court, or had that court the right to examine into that sufficiency? Second, if the State court had the right to examine, had the Circuit Court the right to re-examine and issue a certiorari or other writs? Third, if the Circuit Court had such rights, did the petition show sufficient ground to the first two questions? Justice Bradley answers that, in the Jury law of 1877, there is nothing open to constitutional objections, and also the prejudice is not such a cause as warrants a transfer. Neither the Fourteenth amendment nor the Civil-Rights bill was violated. There is no State legislation hostile to either.

It is charged, and the facts appear to prove, that the lost steamer Metropolis was sadly unseaworthy and as rotten as punk. An eye-witness describing the wreck says: "In the immediate vicinity of the scene was a true realization of the terrible word 'wreck,' and, to the shame of humanity and civilization, there was vandalism, evidences of which were hard to believe. It was ghoulism almost incredible, committed mostly by negro residents of the beach close by, and aided by a number of whites. They took all the valuables and even the clothing from the dead that washed ashore. The sacred person of a female was not a bar to the worst sort of barbarism. There was a very large South American mail on board. The bags were cut open and rifled of their contents. The letters, after being opened, were strewn along the beach."

Two vessels are to sail from this country on the 25th inst., with goods for the World's Exposition at Paris next summer. Commissioner McCormick reports that the American exhibit will be creditable, but would have been better had longer time for preparation been given.

An excited mob visited the Parliament house in Quebec, Canada, a few evenings ago, burned an effigy of the Solicitor General in the esplanade, broke some windows, and raised a lively rumpus generally. The cause of the demonstration is the unpopularity of the Government on certain questions, notably their railway policy.

WASHINGTON.

The Third Assistant Postmaster General has telegraphed and written to the Postmaster at New York as follows: "Trade dollars not being a legal tender, you are not obliged to receive them. A joint resolution of Congress, approved July 22, 1876, is the authority upon which the above decision is based. The second section of the law referred to contains the following explicit provision: 'The trade dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender.'"

Col. Bob Ingersoll is said to have the most extensive Congressional practice of any man in Washington....It is rumored that the President will shortly tender Gen. Bristow a high office....The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics has prepared a statement of imports into and exports from each customs district of the United States during the calendar year 1877. The aggregate value of merchandise exported was $620,000,000; imports, $480,000,000; excess in value of exports, $140,000,000....The rejection by the House of Representatives of a joint resolution introduced by the Ways and Means Committee extending the time for the withdrawal of spirits from bond, and the passage in its stead, by an emphatic majority, of a resolution declaring it inexpedient to change the tax on distilled spirits, is in the nature of a peremptory instruction to the Ways and Means Committee, and may be regarded as settling all attempts to raise the tax on whisky for this session at least.

It has been determined by the Secretary of the Treasury that trade dollars shall not be coined at the Philadelphia mint.

Various reports that have reached the Government with reference to the whereabouts of Sitting Bull and his band have not been disregarded at the War Department. There is a settled determination, says a Washington dispatch, to make a thorough war upon that party wherever and whenever found in our dominion....The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Joseph W. Huston, United States Attorney for the Territory of Idaho; Thomas Adamson, of Pennsylvania, Consul General for Rio de Janeiro; Ernest L. Oppenheim, of New York, United States Consul at Guttenburg; Edward Wheeler, Collector of Internal Revenue for Arkansas.

A significant vote, showing the existence in the House of a very strong majority in favor of restoring the income tax, was taken last week upon a motion to suspend the rules and instruct the Ways and Means Committee to report such a bill. The motion received 165 affirmative and 88 negative votes, or only 11 less than the two-thirds requisite to its passage. The New England States gave for this proposition 6 votes to 18 noes; New York cast 8 votes against to 3 for it; New Jersey 1 yea and 3 nays, and Pennsylvania 5 yeas and 14 nays. The Southern States cast 89 votes in its favor to but 6 nayes. The vote of the Western States was as follows: Ohio, 11 yeas and 10 nays; Indiana, 11 yeas and 1 nay; Illinois, 11 yeas and 7 nays; Michigan, 8 yeas and 1 nay; Iowa, 9 yeas; Wisconsin, 5 yeas and 2 nays; Minnesota, 3 yeas; Kansas, 3 yeas; Nebraska, 1 nay. The Pacific people voted 2 yeas and 3 nays. This indicates a certainty of the passage by the House at least of an income tax of some kind.

The members of the Grasshopper Commission appeared before the House Committee on Appropriations last week, gave an account of their battles with the locusts on the plains last year, and asked for an appropriation of $25,000 to enable them to continue their researches for another season.

The following is the list of Honorary Commissioners to the Paris Exposition: Andrew D. White, New York; Levi P. Morton, New York; George W. Childs, Pennsylvania; W. H. H. Davis, Pennsylvania; A. L. Coolidge, Massachusetts; Frederick Smythe, New Hampshire; Frank Millward, Kentucky; James H. Smart, Indiana; Alfred Hibbard, Iowa; William A. Moore, North Carolina; Edwin Cowles, Ohio; Benjamin E. Gallup, Illinois; E. H. Knight, District of Columbia; William Seligman, California; S. T. Merrill, Wisconsin; J. M. Safford, Tennessee; J. A. Tonner, Arizona; Austin Savage, Idaho; William Hayden, Utah....The Educational Committee of the House of Representatives has decided, by a big majority, to report in favor of giving all proceeds of public-land sales hereafter to the States for educational purposes, the division to be made on the basis of "illiteracy."

POLITICAL.

The Washington Post publishes an interview with Charles Foster, of Ohio, on the subject of the alleged bargaining which preceded the final declaration of the electoral count. Some of the points made are these: The Wormley conference was not called to make a bargain. The conferees were Ellis, of Louisiana, Henry Watterson, John Sherman, Stanley Matthews, Gov. Dennison, Gen. Garfield, Maj. Burke and some others. Foster did not represent anybody. He got there by accident. The letter from Hayes to Foster had been received long before. That letter simply favored withdrawing the troops from the South. It made no contingent promises. Maj. Burke read a paper at that conference. It was a document pledging the Nicholls Government, if it were sustained, to protect the Republicans of Louisiana, and to insure them peace and happiness in that State. It was not an agreement. There was no bargain. The paper simply set forth what Nicholls was willing to do, and was not signed by anybody.

The Republican Congressmen who visited Louisiana pending the electoral count and were present at the canvass of the votes, generally known as the visiting statesmen, held a conference one evening last week. The object of the meeting, says a Washington telegram, is understood to have been carefully to consider the present situation in Louisiana, and the duty which the visiting statesmen owe to the Returning Board. The interchange of views was informal, and the definite plan has been determined upon. These gentlemen, and most of the Republicans in Congress, think that nothing should be omitted that can be done to sustain the Returning Board in their present trouble.

The Committee on Federal Relations of the Maryland House of Delegates, to whom were referred Montgomery Blair's resolutions and memorial calling upon Congress to reopen and investigate the electoral question, have reported adversely to their adoption.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

The war situation on the 4th inst., as gleaned from the cable dispatches of that date, was about as follows: Russia had granted an armistice, and the preliminary conditions of peace had been signed by the representatives of the belligerent powers; the lines of demarcation had been fixed, the Russians provisionally to occupy Erzeroum and Silistria; Russia had accepted Austria's proposal for a conference for settling the questions resulting from the war; there were rumors of an alliance between England, France, Austria and Italy for the purpose of opposing Russian aggrandizement; Gambetta, the French statesman, giving color to these rumors by publicly declaring that the Russian conditions were a flagrant violation of the treaty of 1856, and intimating that a peace based upon those conditions will not be tolerated by the French nation.

The preliminary peace conditions signed at Adrianople are as follows. They differ very little from those proposed by the conquering power, and heretofore printed in this column: 1. The erection of Bulgaria into a principality. 2. A war indemnity or territory in compensation. 3. The independence of Roumania, Servia and Montenegro, with an increase of territory for each. 4. Reforms in Bosnia and Herzegovina. 5 An ulterior understanding between the Sultan and Czar regarding the Dardanelles. 6. The evacuation of the Danubian fortresses and Erzeroum.....The closing action of the war took place on the 1st of February, the Servians having stormed and taken Vrania pass with about 1,900 prisoners, and great quantities of stores.

The Czar, in an address to the troops the other day, spoke as follows: "I congratulate you upon the armistice, the satisfactory conditions of which are due to our brave troops, who proved that for them nothing is impossible of accomplishment. We are still, however, far from the end, and must continue to hold ourselves prepared until we obtain a durable peace, worthy of Russia."

Cable dispatches announce the Russians in possession of Constantinople. The delay in signing the protocol is now explained. It gave the Russians an opportunity to cut the telegraph lines on the shore of the Sea of Marmora, and thus to permit the entry of the Russians into the Sultan's capital without the knowledge of the British, whose fleet might have given them some temporary trouble. The Russians seem to be in a position now that will enable them to remain masters of the situation, whatever the chattering diplomats of the conference may say or do.....Russia's reply to Austria's invitation to the conference, is in the affirmative, but intimates that another place of meeting besides Vienna would be preferable.

Cable telegrams of the 8th inst. report that England had assented to Austria's proposal for a conference; that England had asked Russia for explanations; that there was tremendous excitement in London on account of the manner in which the Bear had outwitted the Lion, crowds thronging the streets, clamoring for war, singing "God Save the Queen," and stoning the house of Gladstone, and the office of the Daily News; that the opposition to the vote of credit of £6,000,000 had been withdrawn by the opposition in the House of Commons; that Constantinople was not in actual possession of the Russians, who held only a portion of the outer line of defenses, thus leaving it in a practically defenseless condition.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

Italy is reported to be ready to join England and Austria in opposing the aggrandizement of Russia....Greece has concluded to strike for freedom from Ottoman subjection, and orders have been given by the Hellenic Government for the occupation of Thessaly, Epirus and Macedonia by an army of 12,000 men.

Austria has taken the initiative in calling a European conference to take cognizance of points in the pending treaty between Russia and Turkey which trench upon the rights or interests of other powers. Her recent intimation to the Czar that, while Russia and Turkey might freely enter into stipulations affecting their own interests, no contracts for the modification of European treaties could be recognized without the concurrence of the signatories, has been answered in a friendly spirit. Russia in effect admits all that Austria demands, and no objection seems to be made in any quarter to the proposed congress.

The cable brings the intelligence of the death of George Cruikshank, the English caricaturist of world-wide fame. He was born in London in 1792, and was consequently in his 86th year.

The Greeks have entered Thessaly, and captured Domoco at the point of the bayonet. Thirteen hundred Turkish prisoners were taken....Nine millions of people are reported destitute in Northern China. The Foreign Relief Committee appeal to England and America for aid....At Calais, France, during the performance at the circus, there was a false alarm of fire, which caused a great rush of the audience. Ten persons were suffocated or trampled to death, and several others were hurt....Advices from Shanghai, China, state that an asylum for women and children at Tien-Tsin has been burned, and over 2,000 persons perished in the fire....It is reported from Paris that Marshal MacMahon meditates resigning the Presidency of the French republic.

The Prince of Montenegro has accepted the armistice and ordered a cessation of hostilities....A Constantinople dispatch makes the important announcement that the office of Grand Vizier has been abolished and a new Ministry formed, at the head of which figures the name of Ahmed Vefik Effendi as President of the Cabinet and Minister of the Interior. This constitution of the new Ministry under European forms and designations seems to indicate a further step in the promised reforms....A general war is threatened among the little republics of Central America....A Russian paper estimates that about 40,000 bushels of wheat will be ready for shipment from Black sea ports as soon as there is absolute assurance of peace....There has been great excitement in St. Petersburg, owing to a vicious attempt to assassinate the Prefect (Mayor) of the city. He was shot and dangerously wounded by a woman, for some cause as yet unrevealed....Austria is represented as ready and willing to join England in the movement to oppose the designs of Russia as indicated in the armistice conditions....In the course of a discussion in the British House of Lords, Lord Derby stated that he had tolerable confidence that England would not find herself in an isolated position at the conference.

During the negotiations for a definitive peace, the armies of the Czar and his allies will occupy five-sixths of Roumelia, including Adrianople and Philippopolis, nearly the whole of Bulgaria, the whole of old Servia, and the territories bordering on Montenegro; while a Greek force of 12,000 men will have entered Epirus, Thessaly, and a portion of Macedonia. In Asia, Russia will hold the fortified towns of Kars, Ardahan, Erzeroum, and Batoum, with the larger part of the province of Armenia. More than three-fourths of the Sultan's European and a portion of his Asiatic dominions will thus remain in the hands of the Russians pending a final settlement....The German Parliament convened on the 6th of February....The reported capture of Domaco by the Greeks was false.

Pope Pius IX. died at Rome on Thursday, Feb. 7. He had been ill for a long time, was very feeble in body, and the final collapse was no surprise to his immediate attendants, or the world at large. Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti, who was elected to the Pontificate of the Roman Catholic Church, June 16, 1846, was born at Sinigaglia, May 13, 1792. He received priest's orders in 1819; in 1823, he was chosen Secretary to the apostolic delegate to Chili, S. A.; was nominated Archbishop of Spoleto in 1827; was created Cardinal in 1839, and proclaimed in 1840. On the death of Gregory XVI., in 1846, he was invested with the Papal tiara. The deceased Pope had outlived all the Cardinals who elected him, save one or two, and was the oldest reigning sovereign in Europe, Queen Victoria alone excepted....The official news has been transmitted from Rome to the heads of the Roman Catholic Church of America that the late Italian King, Victor Emmanuel, died a Catholic.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, Feb. 1.—Senate.—Not in session. House.—Mr. Phillips introduced a bill to provide for the funding of the national debt in home bonds convertible into currency. Referred....There was an animated debate in the House over the charges against the Doorkeeper, Polk, of Missouri, and the incidents connected with them. Mr. Baker, of Indiana, called the attention of the House to numerous rumors which have been about the Capitol for a long time, and which were fully stated in affidavits that Mr. Baker made a part of his speech. After a sharp discussion the investigation asked for was ordered, and the matter committed to the Civil-Service Committee. After investigation had been ordered, Mr. Ellsworth, of Michigan, moved that the affidavits against Polk, on the ground that they were ex parte, be eliminated from the public records of the proceedings. The motion was in fact to expunge a portion of Mr. Baker's speech. Baker was absent from the hall and arrived just as the House had voted to mutilate the records. Baker immediately moved a reconsideration, and, after an impassioned speech, in which he demanded that his rights as a member be protected, succeeded in carrying the point....Adjourned to Monday.

Monday, Feb. 4.—Senate.—A large number of petitions were presented from all parts of the country, most of them remonstrating against changes in the present tariff duties, and the restoration of the tax on tea and coffee, all of which were referred. Other petitions, favoring the organization of a Department of Industry, the head thereof to be a Cabinet officer, were presented and referred....The following bills were introduced: Mr. Davis, from the Committee on Judiciary, reported a substitute for the bill to prevent abuses in respect to mileage of District Attorneys of the United States; by Mr. Dawes, a bill regulating the authentication and use of proxies in the meetings of shareholders of national banking associations; by Mr. Spencer, to incorporate the National Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Company; by Mr. Saunders, supplementary to the joint resolution in relation to the Paris Exposition. It authorizes the President to appoint eighteen additional Commissioners....Mr. Bayard addressed the Senate in opposition to the passage of the Silver bill.

House.—A resolution ordering the preparation of a graduated income tax was offered in the House, and received 165 yeas, the nays numbering only 88. As it required a two-thirds vote, the resolution did not pass. The affirmative votes came chiefly from the Democrats, and the negatives from the Republicans....The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Southard, authorizing the payment of customs in legal-tender notes; by Mr. Mills, providing that all bonds hereafter issued by the Government shall be payable, principal and interest, in gold, silver, or legal-tender notes; by Mr. Davis, of North Carolina, to reduce the tax on brandy made from apples, peaches or grapes, 35 cents; by Mr. Riddle, for a constitutional amendment providing for the election of President by the direct vote of the people; by Mr. Saxton, making the receivers of railroad corporations amenable to processes and judgments of the courts of the several States through which said railroads are run....Mr. Ellsworth presented an affidavit from the Doorkeeper denying as utterly without foundation the charges against his official integrity, and earnestly requesting an investigation on the part of the House. Referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform.

Tuesday, Feb. 5.—Senate.—Mr. Conkling presented the petitions of a large number of citizens of many counties of New York in favor of the remonetization of silver....Mr. Wallace, from the Committee on Finance, reported, with an amendment, the bill introduced by him some time ago to authorize a long bond for investment for savings, and gave notice that he would call it up for consideration at an early day. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $500,000,000 coupon bonds of the denominations of $20, $50 and $100, each of equal sums of each of said denominations, redeemable in coin after fifty years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable semi-annually in coin, at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum....Mr. Eaton continued the discussion of the Silver bill, taking ground against it. He was followed by Mr. Howe, who spoke in favor of the measure....Mr. Conkling presented a petition from citizens of New York setting forth the appalling famine raging in Northern China, and suggested the appointment of a commission from the residents of China to act in connection with the United States Minister in procuring and distributing relief....Mr. Ferry, from the Committee on Postoffices and Post-Roads, reported, with amendment, the Senate bill to regulate the compensation of Postmasters and for other purposes.

House.—The bill extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad ten years was reported and recommitted....Mr. Hewitt, of New York, presented two petitions, one from New York and one from Boston, asking Congress to adopt appropriate measures to mitigate the hardships of the famine now raging in China....The bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at Memphis was taken up, briefly discussed, and referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the Union....The Military Academy Appropriation bill was discussed and amended.

Wednesday, Feb. 6.—Senate.—Mr. Davis, of Illinois, presented the proceedings and resolutions of a meeting of the friends of silver held in Chicago, Dec. 15. He quoted from the resolutions which favor the remonetization of silver, and declare that the Government "cannot waive its right to pay its bonds in silver or gold."....Mr. Ferry presented a petition of wool-growers of Michigan remonstrating against any change in the duty on foreign wool. Referred....Mr. Bruce presented joint resolutions of the Mississippi Legislature in favor of the passage of a bill remunerating certain citizens of Mississippi, mill-owners and log-men, for damages sustained by them on account of the seizure of certain lumber and logs in the lumber district by agents of the United States....The Senate bill to remit the taxes on insolvent savings banks was called up by Mr. Davis, of Illinois, and discussed until the expiration of the morning hour, when consideration of the Silver bill was resumed, and Mr. Thurman spoke in favor thereof. Mr. Thurman was followed by Mr. Kernan, who opposed the bill, and then by Senator Christiancy, who submitted a substitute for the pending bill. It provides for the coinage of silver dollars of 412½ grains at the mints of the United States, but that gold shall be the standard of value. The present subsidiary silver coins are to be made legal tender in all cases to the amount of $10. Silver dollars and subsidiary coin and bars stamped at the mints or the New York Assay Office, with their weight and fineness, and trade-dollars, are to be made legal tender according to their market value, to be fixed monthly by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, and the Director of the Mint.

House.—The debate on unseating Pacheco, Republican, and seating Wigginton, Democrat, of California, was begun in the House, but no vote was reached....A resolution was adopted directing an inquiry into the Metropolis disaster.

Thursday, Feb. 7.—Senate.—The Senate took up and passed Judge Davis' bill relieving insolvent savings banks from the taxes on their capital......The discussion of the Silver bill was continued, Mr. Blaine having the floor. He opposed the Bland bill, but expressed himself in favor of silver under certain conditions. He proposed, as a compromise, a dollar of 425 grains, giving the profits of the coinage to the Government, and addressed the Senate at length in support of his idea. Mr. Blaine was followed by Mr. Johnston, of Virginia, who advocated the Bland bill....There was a spirited debate, in executive session, over the nomination of Henry W. Hilliard, of Alabama, to the Minister to Brazil. His confirmation was opposed by many Republicans, but particularly by Messrs. Conkling, Edmunds and Hamlin. The nomination was defended by Messrs. Lamar, Hill, Butler of South Carolina, Matthews and Burnside. Messrs. Conkling and Edmunds directed their efforts toward establishing the fact that Hilliard was a Democrat, and had never been a Republican. The nomination was finally confirmed by a small majority, Messrs. Matthews, Hoar, Burnside and Christiancy voting with the Democrats.

House.—The House took up the California contested, election case of Pacheco vs. Wigginton, and by a strict party vote, after a long debate, declared Wigginton, the Democratic claimant, entitled to the seat. This was the only business disposed of by the House.

The Proposed Tariff.

The bill prepared by the sub-committee of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives for the revision of the tariff has been published. Following are some of the leading provisions of the bill:

Books, periodicals, pamphlets, blank books, bound or unbound, and all printed matter; engravings, bound or unbound; illustrated books and papers, and maps and charts, 20 per centum ad valorem. Type, plain book and newspaper, 15 cents per pound. Type, jobbing and ornamental, 30 cents per pound. Cottons, plain goods, are classed under three heads, and are taxed, unbleached, 2 cents; if colored or printed, 3 cents. These are now taxed at a rate equivalent to 35, 33, and 42 per cent. The new average rate is about 25 per cent. The finer goods are taxed about 35 per cent., as against an average of 50 per cent. at present. The present tax on jeans, denims, drillings, ginghams, cottonades, etc., bleached, printed, or colored, are now taxed from 40 to 65 per cent., and the duties are reduced to an average of 35 per cent. The bulk of cotton goods imported is made up of hosiery, laces, braids and cotton yarn; the hosiery and laces now pay 35 per cent., and are reduced to 25, while the duty on the kind of yarn principally imported is raised from 60 to 80 cents per pound. The duty on spool-thread is reduced from 9 to 7 cents per dozen spools of 100 yards. The duties on glass are somewhat increased, and are generally specific, being computed by the square inch or foot, the rate of duty increasing as the size increases—the average rate aimed at being 40 per cent., which is higher than the present rate. Earthenware, china, porcelain, are taxed 40 per cent., which is no reduction. Undressed flax is reduced from $20 per ton to $10; dressed flax from $40 to $30 per ton. Hemp and jute and manufactures of them remain, with little or no change, at about 30 per cent. Spirits and brandy are to pay $2 per gallon—no change; champagne to pay $6 per dozen quarts; still-wines in casks to pay about 60 per cent.; other wines in bottles, 60 per cent.—no change. The duties on iron manufactures are made specific on a basis of 35 per cent.—a very slight reduction. Pig-iron is reduced from $7 to $5 per ton. Sheet-iron is reduced from 1½ to ¾ cents per pound. Steel railway bars from 1¼ to 1 cent per pound. Copper is reduced from 5 to 2 cents per pound. In regulating the duties on wheat, barley, rye, oats, etc., the duty is fixed per bushel, instead of by the 100 pounds, and the duty on coal is levied by the ton of 2,240 pounds, instead of by the round ton. The classification of sugar is amended, and the duty ranges from 2¼ to 2½ cents per pound. Candy is protected by a duty of 40 per cent. The duty on silks is reduced from 60 to 50 per cent. Woolen carpets are fixed at 50 per cent., and woolen goods generally at the same rate. In consequence of the changes from ad valorem to specific rates, it is not practicable to state accurately the changes. There is supposed to be a general reduction of 20 per cent. in the rates, but in this reduction is included the long list of articles made free.

Capt. Eads' Big Contract.

Capt. James B. Eads has received from the Government $1,000,000 for improving the navigable waters at the mouth of the Mississippi river. The whole amount to be paid by the Government is $5,250,000, and that is when a depth of 30 feet and a width of 250 feet of water shall have been attained. The Captain claims that about 75 or 80 per cent. of his contract work is finished, and that he has as yet received only 18 per cent. of his rightful compensation.

It is when a dry-goods clerk of ninety-seven pounds' weight attempts to help from a farm-wagon a farmer's wife of 203 pounds avoirdupois that the reporter seats himself contentedly on the curb-stone and waits for the catastrophe.

A Soft Voice.

An old poet said "a low, soft voice was an excellent thing in a woman." Yes, it probably is, but of what account is it when she suddenly has occasion to call her oldest son off the top of the house, shout after the departing milkman, shoo a cow out of the garden, shriek down into the cellar that the baby had fallen into the cistern, and howl "fire" for her neighbor's blazing barn, all at the same time.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

KING SHYLOCK'S TRIBUTE.

One Thousand Millions Clear Arising from No Investments at All—A Startling Exhibit.

In the United States Senate recently, Senator Beck, of Kentucky, spoke at length on the remonetization of silver, and, in the course of his very able speech, he quoted from Mr. Voorhees, of Indiana, a history of all the bonds which were sold each year and the prices that were paid, and that were given, and which revealed the fact "that the bondholders had up to 1869 received over $100,000,000 of profit before they even got the principal of their bonds made payable in gold by the act of 1869." The following is the statement quoted by Senator Beck, and we recommend it to our readers as suggestive of the rapacity and arrogance of the bondholding class, unparalleled probably in the history of the world:

In 1862 the Government sold 6 per cent. 5-20 bonds to the amount of $60,982,450, and received for them greenbacks at their face, dollar for dollar. The demand now is that these bonds shall be paid in gold at their face; and yet, owing to the depreciation of greenbacks at the time of their purchase, only $44,030,649 in gold was paid for them. This makes a clear speculation of $16,951,801 in favor of the bondholder in this first transaction. On this clear speculation the bondholders have received interest for eleven years, amounting to $11,187,188, which, added to its principal, makes the sum of $28,138,989 already received in that single transaction, for which not one dollar was ever paid.

In 1863 the Government sold of the same kind of bonds $160,987,550, for which it received an equal amount in greenbacks. A standard authority placed the average price of gold during that year at $1.58 in currency. It will thus be seen that these bonds cost their purchasers but $101,890,854 in gold, leaving a profit of $59,096,696, without including the interest. For ten years, however, the Government has paid interest on this naked profit, this principal, without any consideration. The interest thus paid amounts to $35,458,017, which, added to this fictitious principal, makes $94,455,713 now in the pockets of the bondholders on that year's operation, for which they never paid anything.

In 1864 the Government sold these bonds, amounting on their face to $381,292,250. Again the Government received only depreciated paper for these bond obligations, and at that time our currency was enormously depreciated, if tried by the gold standard. The price of gold during that year was at an average of 201 in currency. The sale of these bonds therefore, which are now assumed to be gold bonds, only realized to the Government $189,697,636 in gold, less than one-half of their face value. There was left to the capitalists who speculated in them as purchasers the immense profit of $191,594,614. This was the amount of the broker's shave, and on it he has drawn interest from the people for ten years, amounting at this time to $114,956,768. Add this to its principal, which stands as pure speculation, and we find that the bondholders have made as clear gain, as something for nothing, the sum of $306,551,382 on the one year's transaction of 1864.

In 1865 the Government sold bonds to the amount of $273,746,150, on which it suffered a discount of $71,532,060 at the hands of the capitalists. The interest already paid by the people on this discount reaches $38,627,307, making this year's operation realize for the bondholders $110,159,367, for which not one cent was ever paid.

In 1866 the Government sold $124,914,400 of its bonds, for which it received depreciated paper currency amounting to $88,591,733 in gold, according to the then price of gold. The difference between the face of these bonds and the amount they realized to the Government was $36,332,627. Eight years' interest received on this shave amounts to $17.434,556. Adding this interest and principal together, and we find that the bondholders have received $53,757,188 out of this years' sale of bonds, for which not one dollar ever left their coffers or reached the United States treasury.

In 1867 the Government sold of its bonds the immense sum of $421,469,550. The purchasers paid for them $303,215,503, leaving a clear profit to them on the operation of $118,254,047. Taking the interest on this profit for seven years, amounting to $49,661,694, already paid, and the speculators have in their pockets, if these bonds are to be paid in gold, the sum of $167,915,741 on this year's brokerage, and for which they never gave a farthing in consideration.

In 1868 the Government sold its bonds to the still further amount of $425,443,800. Their purchasers paid $312,326,323 for them, clearing by that annual speculation the sum of $112,617,477. Add six years' interest on this bonus, amounting to $40,542,228, to the bonus itself, and we find that these traffickers in a nation's perils have received in this operation $153,159,765 of the people's money, for which not the slightest equivalent was ever paid into the United States treasury.

In addition to the foregoing 6 per cent. bonds, the Government at different times during the years mentioned issued and sold $195,139,550 of bonds bearing 5 per cent. They realized to the Government $122,957,410, thus leaving to the purchasers a net profit of $72,182,140. Interest already paid on this profit amounts to $26,115,724, which, added to the profit itself, makes the sum of $98,297,864 as the amount now in the pockets of the bondholders growing out of their operations in the 5 per cent. bonds, and for which there is not the slightest consideration.

An account of the bondholders' clear profits arising from no investments at all may therefore be stated in the following tabular form:

1862	$28,138,989
1863	94,555,713
1864	306,551,382
1865	110,159,367
1866	53,757,183
1867	167,915,741
1868	153,159,765
On account of 5 per cent. bonds	98,297,864
Total	$1,012,536,004

This most remarkable statement was, as Senator Beck declared, "carefully and truthfully prepared." The proof is in the official records. "It will satisfy the country," said the Senator, "and ought to satisfy the bondholders and their advocates, that they ought not to insult a suffering people whose hard earnings have gone to enrich them by any complaint of want of good faith to them in the effort we are making to save the country from bankruptcy."

One thousand millions of profits, and yet the bondholders cry for more! Let workingmen see in this statement, the truth of which is beyond question, the main cause of the sufferings which they are now enduring. Let prostrate and helpless industry understand that this is the system which has made it the prop of King Shylock's throne, and which still continues to wring from it, exhausted as it is, $700,000,000 annual tribute. Let Greenback men arm themselves with such facts and figures as are given above, and so be prepared to overthrow King Shylock, raise industry to its feet once more, and bring back the prosperity and happiness that were ours are yet the bonds that bind us had begun to tighten on us and bear us down to vassalage.

New York Bulldozing.

The New York bankers have held several meetings recently, having for their purpose the agreement upon a plan of action with which the Southern and Western States are to be threatened unless they withdraw their support of the remonetization of silver. The plan includes: 1. No more sale of goods except on condition of payment in gold; 2. No credit or discounts to any Western or Southern banks, merchants, corporations, or municipal governments, except on contracts payable in gold; 3. The refusal of all dealings with persons who will not make contracts to pay past and future debts in gold. This threat is to be sent all over the country as the determination of the men who claim to represent the "center of capital." Do these gentlemen think that the "center of capital" is immovable? Within the memory of even young men and merchants, New York was the "center of trade" in the United States, and every man who dealt in dry goods or groceries all over the land had to go to New York or send to New York to purchase his stocks. Times have changed. New York was once the center of the provision trade, and every pound of packed beef, pork, lard, bacon, and cut meats had to be sent to New York to be sold—both to the foreign and domestic markets; but the center of the provision trade has moved a thousand miles westward.

The day has long since gone by when the West and South depended on New York city. That city might be buried, and the business of the West and South would go on just the same. If the banks and merchants of New York shall insist that the capital gathered there shall not be employed in trade with the West or South, it is possible that that capital will quietly find its way to the productive centers, and be invested directly among those who produce to sell and who buy to consume. There is no law that can compel capital to remain in New York one hour after the trade of that city with the producing sections of the country shall cease or be suspended, and if the city of New York proposes to suspend or refuse further commercial or financial dealings with the exporters of $650,000,000 surplus products of their labor, the latter will probably find some other route to market, some other route to the open sea, some other point from which to obtain what they need, and some other part of the world in which to obtain the capital that they may need to handle what they produce.

Now, if the New York banks and merchants want to get out their "black list," let them do it. If they will not sell us dry goods, there are other places where we can buy them; if they will not buy our bread and meat, let them go hungry. The people who produce more than they consume of human food have an open market the world over, and can find elsewhere all they need in exchange. Let New York get out its "black list;" it need not be at trouble to select the names; let it put down the people of the West by acres, townships, counties, Congressional districts, and States; let them put the people of twenty-six States under a commercial and financial interdict; let them advertise to the remotest parts of the earth that New York holds no commercial intercourse with the South or West; that the people of these sections refuse to pay any more debt or interest than is called for by the letter and terms of their contracts, and, when the railroads to New York shall become bankrupt, and the Erie canal become stagnant from disuse, and the banking buildings in Wall street will have inscribed in chalky whiteness over their doors the legend "To let," then perhaps Mr. George W. Coe and his associates will discover that any attempt to bulldoze or intimidate a free and intelligent people must prove a failure.—Chicago Tribune.

Non-Resumption in France—Interesting Facts.

Mr. Henry Carey Baird writes as follows to the Philadelphia Times: "The 1st of January, 1878, having come and gone, and the debt due by the French Government to the Bank of France having been reduced to 300,000,000 francs, and when 'the forced circulation of notes should cease in conformity with the law on the matter,' it is an interesting fact to learn from the correspondent of the London Economist that on the 3d inst. 'no notice of the legal resumption of specie payments had been issued.' It is true that for several years past the bank has been paying specie to the amount of 1,000 francs at a single payment, but it has held in its own hands entire and complete control over the matter, and all such payments are purely optional. Now, not only has the bank not formally and legally 'resumed,' but it had during the week ending Jan. 3, increased its circulation of notes $20,000,000, and that circulation then stood at $520,000,000, being $21,000,000 more than it was in September, 1875. The 'cremation theory of finance' evidently does not obtain in France, where the trade, commerce and industries of the people are not subordinated to any arbitrary fixed amount of money, but the latter is subordinated to the former. In a word, the circulation of the bank is a purely automatic affair, and varies from day to day, and week to week, according to the demands of business. This is as sensible as it is just.

"It is equally worthy of note that the bank held, Jan. 3, but $405,000,000 in specie, against $455,000,000 on June 28, 1877. The Government and the bank evidently see and appreciate the perils of resumption, while, notwithstanding the facts that their country is creditor with the rest of the world, and is steadily importing specie, the bank has lost $50,000,000 within six months. All such unimportant and trifling considerations as these are, however, overlooked and disregarded by the great statesmen at the head of our affairs, who fail to think or care what kind of a chance our poor debtor country and its industries would stand if our treasury resumed on a paltry $100,000,000 of specie, while liable to have foreign calls for $1,000,000,000 within a year if any great convulsion should occur in Europe. 'Verily do fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

THE ELECTORAL COUNT.

Interview of a Chicago Tribune Correspondent with Maj. E. A. Burke, of New Orleans.

Correspondent—"The charge has been made by Northern Democrats that the Southern Congressmen did not act in good faith with their party at that time."

Maj. Burke (warmly)—"Well, that is all nonsense. The people of Louisiana had expressed no favor for the Electoral bill; they regarded it as a means of letting Mr. Tilden down easy. They had been led to expect that Mr. Tilden and the Democratic party North would claim their rights, and, if needs be, enforce them. Mr. Pelton and the Tilden managers besought Louisiana Congressmen and myself to urge Nicholls, the Legislature, and our people to work up a public sentiment in favor of the Electoral bill, under the belief that Mr. Tilden's rights were secured by it; and we did so at their solicitation and upon their representations; therefore, Mr. Tilden's declaration on the eve of his departure for Europe, that 'He had always disapproved the Electoral bill,' came with bad grace. As to the charge of bad faith, it is contemptible."

Correspondent—"Did the Democratic party have no definite plan for the inauguration of Tilden?"

Maj. Burke—"None that I could discover, other than the votes in Congress disclose. The Tilden managers in Washington had schemes for defeating the count in the Senate, and for holding a new election under Conkling; but the party had never authorized them."

Correspondent—"Do you mean to say that there was an understanding between Senator Conkling and the friends of Mr. Tilden with the object of defeating Mr. Hayes?"

Maj. Burke (smiling)—"Well, I am surprised to hear a newspaper man ask that question. I supposed they all knew that; it has been kept wonderfully quiet, to be sure, but I thought every newspaper man in Washington last winter knew about it. I know positively that Senator Conkling had a speech all prepared in favor of throwing out the vote of Louisiana, in which event he was to have been elected President of the Senate, and would have become President of the United States pending the new election, which would have taken place a year afterward. Mr. Tilden's friends were satisfied with this arrangement, because they thought that, with his wounds fresh bleeding, he would have no trouble in securing the Democratic nomination; and Senator Conkling doubtless thought that, with the control of the patronage, he could easily shelve Mr. Hayes and become the Republican candidate. The cause which prevented an attempt at carrying this programme out was the distrust felt by Mr. Conkling's adherents on the Republican side—the carpet-bag Senators from the Southern States. They were all ready enough to slaughter Hayes, because they had become alarmed at some of his utterances and at Grant's declarations. But it was feared that, instead of supporting Conkling, they might vote for Morton, as they probably would have done."

Correspondent—"Major, the statement has frequently been made that there was, about that time, an agreement made in writing between the President, represented by Stanley Matthews, Charles Foster and others, and leading Southern men, prominent among whom have been named Gen. Gordon, Mr. Lamar, Mr. Ellis, and Mr. Gibson, of which you were the custodian. May I ask whether you have now, or ever have had, such a document in your possession?"

Maj. Burke (after considerable hesitation)—"You may say that no true statement on that subject has ever been published; that I have no agreement signed by Stanley Matthews, Charles Foster, or anybody else for Mr. Hayes, and never had. As to the methods by which Southern Congressmen and myself were convinced that Hayes would be allowed by his party to carry out Grant's declarations about withdrawing troops from interfering with the local affairs of our State, I do not care to speak at present."

Telegram from William E. Chandler to Maj. Burke.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.

To Maj. E. A. Burke, New Orleans:

Referring to denials in a recently-published interview of yours, I have the honor respectfully to ask you this question: Were you, as representative of the Nicholls Government, with other Southern men and Messrs. Stanley Matthews, John Sherman, Charles Foster and James A. Garfield, all or any of them, and other Northern men, present at a conference or conferences, at Wormley's Hotel, in Washington, about Feb. 26 last, concerning Louisiana affairs? If so, was any written paper, whether signed or unsigned, and whether with or without names affixed as witnesses of its correctness, made then or subsequently, embodying or purporting to state the whole or any part of any agreement, understanding, or intention, resulting from such conference or conferences concerning Louisiana affairs or concerning the Packard or Nicholls Government, or the Federal troops in New Orleans? If so, have you now, or have you ever had, that paper or a copy thereof? Is it in existence? If so, where is it now? If not, when, where, and by whom was it destroyed, and will you or not make it or a copy of it public if you have it?

(Signed) W. E. CHANDLER.

Burke to Chandler.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 29.

To W. E. Chandler, Washington:

Before considering the subject matter of a telegram received this day, signed "W. E. Chandler," I desire to ask if the author is the Chandler who, as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury traveling in the South in 1865, corruptly participated in the spoils gathered by Supervising Treasury Agents engaged in robbing their Government, and in defrauding the distressed people of this and adjacent States.

Is it the Chandler who, as Secretary of the Republican National Committee, with certain Republicans from Louisiana, at a conference or conferences at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, concerning Louisiana affairs, about October, 1872, secretly and corruptly conspired to take advantage of the absence from Louisiana of the Governor thereof to assemble secretly the Legislature, impeach the Governor, seize the Government, and use its machinery to carry the election of 1872?

Is it the Chandler who carried and received a fee from Kellogg of $3,000 in 1873, and the encomium, "You have done more for him than anyone except Attorney General Williams, in maintaining his foul and impious usurpation of the office of Governor of this State?"

Is it the Chandler who encouraged, abetted and conspired with infamous allies in this city to rob 12,000 citizens of New Orleans of their franchise and drag them before the Federal courts on or about the day of the late election; who, in November, 1876, by telegraph, guaranteed Kellogg that the whole power of the Government would sustain the Returning Board, counting the vote of Louisiana for the Republican candidate, and then hastened to Florida to manipulate the frauds of that State?

Is it the Chandler who has of late been seeking to stir up the hell-broth of sectional hate, and to foul his political nest to the disgust of decent citizens North and South? If yes, permit me to say that the inquisitorial powers of political tramps terminated in March last. If nay, the impertinent telegram shall have such consideration as it deserves.

(Signed) E. A. BURKE.

Chandler to Burke.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.

Maj. E. A. Burke, New Orleans:

Your insolent language and false charges against me leave no doubt about your identity, and I therefore repeat my inquiry about Wormley's Hotel conferences. Were you present, was a memorandum made, and will you make it public? (Signed) W. E. CHANDLER.

Statement of Burke to a New Orleans Press Reporter.

Referring to the question asked Maj. E. A. Burke by W. E. Chandler in the telegram from Washington, Maj. Burke disclaims knowledge of any corrupt or disreputable bargains on the part of Hayes or Southern Congressmen last winter, or that Southern men did anything to prejudice Tilden's chances in the electoral count. He claims that whatever assurances were given or derived were openly submitted to the Nicholls Legislature, generally discussed and approved, and, having been voted and acted upon by eighty members, the subject could not be regarded as secret. He has contemplated the preparation of a statement of all the facts coming under his observation, to be published if any good purpose can be served, but thinks the country has had enough of the whole business, and has other more important subjects to consider. If any publication is made by him, however, he indicates a determination to use other channels of communication than Mr. Chandler.

Statement of Chandler to a Washington Press Reporter.

It has never been charged that the written memorandum authenticating the alleged bargain made at the Wormley's Hotel conference of Feb. 26 was signed by Stanley Matthews, or Charles Foster, or any other Republicans, but that a written memorandum was drawn up showing the understanding that had been reached by the conference: that this was read over and agreed to as substantially correct; and that at the same time the Southern Democrats, or some of them, affixed their names to the paper as witnesses of its correctness, and the paper was then deposited with Maj. Burke. I have been informed that Gen. Garfield was not quite satisfied with the way the bargain was expressed in the Burke memorandum, and so he made a memorandum of his own, which he says he shall publish if Burke's paper is made public.

Burke to Chandler.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 30.

W. E. Chandler, Washington, D. C.:

The statements in my telegram are true, and can be established, and, having admitted their application to yourself, it is evident that your past connection with Louisiana affairs has been such as to justify me in declining any further correspondence with you upon that subject.

(Signed) E. A. BURKE.

Chandler to Burke.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 31.

Maj. E. A. Burke, New Orleans:

Please make public immediately all proofs of your charges against me, together with the memorandum you have of the Wormley's Hotel conference. W. E. CHANDLER.

The Matthews Silver Resolution.

The full text of Stanley Matthews' resolution for the payment of Government bonds in 412½-grains silver dollars, which has passed both houses of Congress by large majorities, is as follows:

WHEREAS, By an act entitled "An act to improve the public credit," and approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to pay in coin or its equivalent all interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money, or currency other than gold and silver; and,

WHEREAS, All bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled, "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and,

WHEREAS, All bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved Jan. 14, 1875, are required to be descriptive of the bonds of the United States described in said act of Congress, approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and,

WHEREAS, At the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of the standard value of that date included the silver dollar of the weight of 412½ grains each, as declared by an act approved July 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating coins of the United States,' to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever; therefore be it

Resolved, By the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), that all bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver, and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Congressional Library.

The annual report of the Librarian of Congress exhibits an increase of 20,021 volumes during the year, besides an immense number of pamphlets, periodicals, maps, engravings, etc. The library now numbers 331,118 volumes and 110,000 pamphlets. There are about 70,000 volumes for which there is no room on the shelves, and Librarian Spofford urges the immediate erection of a new building, which Congress will probably provide during the present session.

AFTER the declaration—"This is, perhaps, not the first mitten you have received, Mr. Brown?" "But perhaps the first you have ever given, Miss Smith."

WEBSTER AND HAYNE.

An Extraordinary Cure.

Mr. Harvey gives an interesting account of the circumstances under which Mr. Webster purchased his Marshfield property. Capt. Thomas, who owned it, was to have a home in the house during his life. The following story is told:

The intimacy and friendship between Capt. Thomas and Mr. Webster were peculiar. The Captain, though much Mr. Webster's senior, soon learned to look upon him with respect and admiration; he made Mr. Webster his Magnus Apollo, and at the same time entertained for him a sort of maternal affection. He deferred to Mr. Webster in all matters, excepting in some practical rules of farming, the nicer points of sporting, and the habits of birds, wild fowl and fish—in all of which matters the Captain was Mr. Webster's instructor. Their association, always pleasant, grew into mutual affection; and Capt. Thomas, who, at Mr. Webster's suggestion, subscribed for the Semi-Weekly Columbian Centinel, watched with the most intense interest Mr. Webster's course in the Senate as reported in that journal. In 1829-'30 the good Captain read Hayne's first speech. He waited in confidence for a triumphant reply. It came and he was entirely satisfied. The faithful Centinel, however, soon brought him Hayne's second speech. He read it with extreme and painful interest. It excited in him the greatest pprehensions for the idol of his old age. He was overwhelmed with grief. His hero, his great man, his beloved, almost worshiped, friend was overthrown in debate by his Southern antagonist. The kind old gentleman's pride was humbled; he was in despair—his heart almost broken. Casting away the papers, he rose and retired slowly to his room, directing some one to come and take his boots away, as he should never want them again. His family tried in vain to console him. He refused to be comforted. Like one of old he was ready to exclaim: "Ye have taken away my Gods, and what have I more?" For three days he kept his bed, mourning over the fall of his friend, and refusing all consolation. His eldest son tried to persuade him that Mr. Webster was able to defend the cause of New England, and would yet have his triumph. His only reply was: "It can't be answered, Henry; it can't be answered."

The fatal Semi-Weekly Centinel came again in due course. It was evening. The family were gathering around the fire in sad apprehension. The old man's mind seemed almost unhinged—they even feared for his life. The Captain still kept his bed, and appeared to have determined to hold his vow and never to rise from it. All their efforts to rouse him had thus far proved ineffectual. On opening the paper it was found to contain Mr. Webster's second reply to Col. Hayne. The family resolved at once that Henry should assume the task of carrying it to his father and try the effect of this medicine to "minister to a mind diseased." Henry entered the father's room with the paper and a candle. The old man groaned and asked what he wanted. Henry replied:

"Father, I have brought the Centinel; I thought you might like to look at it."

"No, Henry, I don't want to see it."

"It contains a second speech of Mr. Webster in reply to Col. Hayne."

"O Henry," said the old gentleman, "it is of no use; it can't be answered; I don't want to see it."

Henry lingered, and seemed greatly distressed at his father's refusal. At last Capt. Thomas consented to have the paper and candle left, and said that perhaps he would look at it. Henry went down stairs and reported the apparently unsuccessful result of his mission, and the little family drew closely around their winter fire more gloomily than before. Some time had thus elapsed, when they were all suddenly startled by a tremendous shout from their father's room. They all rushed up-stairs together to see what had happened. The Captain was sitting on the side of the bed, with the paper in one hand and the candle in the other. As Henry entered the Captain roared out:

"Bring me my boots, Henry! Bring me my boots!"

Capt. Thomas' recovery was so complete that he never again suffered a relapse of that mental complaint.

Grant and His Lieutenants.

A correspondent of the Troy Times gives some interesting reminiscences of the war of the Rebellion, and particularly of the freedom with which Gen. Grant was accustomed to speak of his subordinates: "'What do you think of Sherman, General?' was asked. 'One of the most perfect men I ever knew.' 'And what of Sheridan?' 'Oh, I never think of Phil,' said Grant; 'he'll take care of himself.' 'What kind of an officer is Schofield?' 'One of the best,' was the reply. 'Schofield has not had a chance to show what he is yet,' added the General; 'but if the war lasts I mean to give it to him.' And shortly afterward Schofield was sent to North Carolina, where it was expected the bulk of the fighting would occur when the two armies of Johnston and Lee should be united, and one last desperate effort made to overthrow the Union army. 'What of Hooker?' was the next inquiry. 'Oh, Hooker is a very good corps commander, but he is too ambitious; he can never again have a command under me.' 'What do you think of Thomas, General?' 'Thomas is a little slow sometimes, and I have been impatient at his delay in attacking Hood. I have sent him three successive orders to attack, and he has not done so; but I received to-day a telegram from him saying he shall attack to-morrow, and I give myself no further uneasiness about that matter. To-morrow night or the next day we shall receive news of Thomas' victory.' And we did. The day subsequent to this interview Thomas moved out of Nashville, and, attacking Hood, won one of the most memorable battles of the war."

A Skillful Burglary.

The recent great burglary in Baltimore was a remarkably skillful and successful crime. The burglars dug through a brick wall into a jewelry store at night. The safe containing the most valuable part of the stock was on a platform, fully exposed to sight from the street, and with gas burning brightly. A screen was placed in front of it, and the burglars thus worked undetected, while a confederate in the street was ready to give warning of danger by jerking a string. Compact but powerful machinery, afterward abandoned, was used in breaking the door of the safe. Watches and diamonds worth $20,000 were carried away.

DAY'S TONIC
Cures Dumb Chills.
DAY'S TONIC
Supersedes Quinine.
DAY'S TONIC
Cures Old Chronic Chills.
DAY'S TONIC
Is pleasant for Children.

DAY'S TONIC
Cleanses the Stomach.
DAY'S TONIC
Acts on Liver and Bowels.
DAY'S TONIC
Don't Buzz the Head.
DAY'S TONIC
Don't contain Quinine.

DAY'S TONIC

Is a new innovation, and possesses advantages heretofore unknown and unclaimed by others.

It does not contain Quinine or any poison; it does not produce buzzing or roaring in the head, which follows the use of Quinine; it is retained by delicate stomaches; it acts upon the liver and bowels without the use of any other medicine; it never fails to cure, and our agents are authorized to return the money in each and every case of failure; one bottle will cure two cases. Try it and see. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00.

IS IT WISE?

Would it not be well for the real business men of this city to take counsel and see if it is wise to permit the press, which pretends to represent the metropolis, to malign and insult the great mass of American people? New York lives upon the trade of the country. We buy from one section and sell to another; we bring goods from Europe for distribution inland; we gather the crops from all sections to sell in our own markets or to dispose of across the ocean. The metropolis is the representative of the nation. When it ceases to be that, it is no longer the metropolis. The press representing this great city has for some time past been stigmatizing the great bulk of the American people as repudiators and swindlers.

There has been a demand—almost a unanimous demand—from the South and West, to once more use the old American dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver. This dollar for eighty years and up to 1873, was our unit of value. All our debts, public and private, except those created since the panic, were made when that silver dollar was in the standard. Since silver has been demonetized the country has passed through all sorts of financial convulsions. The markets have been steadily falling, and one industry after another has suffered severely. Our people have become discouraged, the laboring classes are discontented, and it is the firm convictions among the mass of the people that we cannot see better times until the silver dollar is restored to its old place in our coinage, so as to widen the metalic basis for our paper money. The journals and the organizations which represents the business men of New York have treated this very natural agitation first as a species of insanity and more recently as a vast knavish conspiracy against the credit of the Government and the rights of the creditor interest. We have from the very start deplored this attitude of the New York press, and have insisted that nothing but injury can result to New York from so unwise a course on the part of its journalists. And, as we understand, they are now beginning to feel that a mistake has been made. The January subscription lists of all our leading journals have fallen of very considerably because of their unwise course.

The American people are not swindlers. Paying a debt according to contract is no knavery, and there is a sense of burning indignation against the New York press, which has extended to the banking and commercial interests which they represent. The religious press has also taken a hand in on the side of what they call "honesty," and the result is their subscription lists are being stripped bare. New York journals are destined to lose their weight by losing their circulation outside of the city.

The Startling Story He Told the King of Prussia.

No Frenchman will ever forget the name of Blucher, the Prussian Field-Marshal, who helped the English to gain the battle of Waterloo.

Blucher, discontented with everything and everybody, left France during the autum of the same year he had entered Paris. Angered by having been reduced to inactivity, he retired to one of his numerous country-seats, where he soon became a prey to a profound melancohly, the cause of which no one seemed to know. He was also subject to attacks of dropsy, and afflicted with inflammation of the lungs, the danger of which he considered more imminent than it really was. He could not bear to remain in obscurity, and solitude he regarded as bodily torment, and so great was the inquietude which his state of health gave rise to, that the King of Prussia departed for Krieblowitz immediately after hearing that the old General had often expressed a desire to see his sovereign before his death.

At the dead of the night the King arrived at the castle, and was at once conducted to the apartments occupied by Blucher, who was then seventy-four years old. The royal visitor found himself in a large, dark room, the old fashioned furniture of which added greatly to the melancholy aspect of the place. Divers arms and trophies of the chase were hanging upon the walls. The old General, enveloped in a large bearskin, was seated in an antique oaken chair, and the only light by which his wan features could be discerned was that of the fire which burned on the hearth.

On preceiving the King, he made an effort to rise to receive him, but the monarch told him to remain seated, and taking his hand in his own, he sat down by his side. Blucher made a sign to his attendants that he desired to be alone with the King, and every one retired. Then, rising himself up with evident pain, from his half reclining posture, he broke the silence by saying:

"Sire, I besought you to undertake the journey you have made to Krieblowitz, knowing that you were near, assisting at the annual review of the troops; but had you been at Berlin, or even the furtherest extremity of Europe, rather than not see you—dying and ill as I am—I would have set out to find you, 'for I have a terrible secret to reveal. But before I tell it look at me well. Scrutinize the expression of my countenance, the features of my face—listen to the tone of my voice, and pay attention to the order of my ideas! Assure yourself that I am in the full possession of my reason, and that I have not become mad. For, at times, I ask myself if I am not an idiot, who mistakes the dreams of the night for events of years gone by.

"But no,' continued he, as he drew from his breast a gold bracelet: "no, all is true, all is real, and I cannot doubt nothing. Listen to me, sire. When the seven years' war broke out, in 1756, my father, who dwelt in his mansion at Gross-Renzow, sent me and one of my brothers to a relation of ours, the Princess Kraswisk, who lived in the island of Rugen. I was then fourteen years old, and, after having passed some time in the old fortress without hearing any news from my family, as Gross-Renzow and its neighboring countries had become the seat of war, I joined a regiment of Hussars in the Swedish service. I was taken prisoner at the battle of Luckow, and the Prussian Government urged me to enter its army. During a whole year I resisted all persuasion to that effect, and at last I obtained my liberty by enlisting as a bugeler in the Black Hussars. I, however, managed to procure a few months' furlough, for sixteen years had passed away since I last heard from my family, but my mind was constantly harassed with fearful thoughts as to what had become of my mother and sisters. I at last started for Gross Renzow, and on my way found all the country near Mecklenburg in a dreadfully ravaged state. As the carriage I was in moved but slowly and with great difficulty over the rocky road leading to my ancestors' domains, I abandoned it, and continued my route on horseback, accompanied by a servant man. This happened fifty-nine years ago to-day, on the twelfth of August, and just about the same hour as the hand of that clock you see there is pointing half-past eleven. A tremendous storm had commenced; the thunder rolled and crashed with reports like the firing of a park of artillery, the lightning flashed and the rain fell in torrents. After having wandered for a long time in the forest, I arrived at the door of the castle; and it was only then that I preceived that I was alone, and that my servant had not followed me; the tempest and the darkness had probably caused him to stray away.

"Without dismounting, I knocked with the handle of my whip at the iron bounded door, bristling with large rivets. No one answered my call; I knocked again three different times with the same success. At last, becoming impatient, I dismounted. The door opened of its own accord. I saw no one who could have been the means of giving me admitance. Without paying any attention to this singular incident, I left my horse standing at the door, and after having crossed the yard, I ascended the stairs and entered the interior of the mansion. There was not a particle of light in the whole place—not a sound fell upon my ears. I must confess my heart seemed to cease its beating, and a cold chill ran over my body.

"What folly!' thought I to myself. 'The castle is uninhabited. My family left it when I did, and have not returned. No matter. As I am here, in this deserted place, I will try to pass the night as comfortably as possible.'

"Thus, speaking to myself, I passed through several apartments, and arrived at my father's bed-room. A nearly extinguished fire was slumbering amid the ashes on the hearth. With the assistance of its flickering light I recognized my father, my mother, and my four sisters, seated in a half circle before it. They all stood up on seeing me. I was on the point of throwing myself into my fathers' arms, when I was stopped by a solemn gesture he made to prevent me from coming near him. I held out my arms to my mother, but she receded from me with a melancoly look. I called each of my sisters by their names, and the only answer I received was that they took hold of each other's hands, without pronouncing a word, and then all sat down. 'Do you not know me?' I exclaimed. 'Is that the way a family should receive a son and a brother after so many years of separation? Have you, then, already learned that I have entered the Prussian service? But I could not do otherwise; my liberty, the happiness of seeing you, were its reward. Just think, that in sixteen years I have heard nothing of you. Separated from you by interminable wars, in the Swedish service—prisoner of war—no news ever reached me to calm my anxiety and doubts. You see yourself that the first use I made of my liberty was to come and see you here, fearing I might not find you alive, but where, at least, I thought I should learn something to set me on the right road to find you. What, father! you do not answer me? Mother, you are silent! Have you, 'sisters, forgotten the tenderness and plays of our childhood—those plays of which this room has been often the spectator?'

"These last words seemed to move my sisters. They began to speak in low tones to each other, made a sign to approach, and one of them knelt down before my mother, hiding her head in her lap as if she was desirous of playing a game called 'hot-hands.' Now, it came to my turn to kneel down before my mother and hide my head in her lap. Oh, horror! I felt under the garments cold and hard substances—I heard a dry noise, like the jumbling of bones together—and when a hand was placed in mine, that hand remained there. It was a skeleton's. I arose, breaking forth into a cry of horror. All had vanished, and nothing remained of that terrible vission but a few human bones. Wild with terror and half crazy I rushed out of the abominable habitation, found my horse and, throwing myself into the saddle, departed at a break neck gallop, unconscious of where I was going, letting the horse take his own route.

"About daylight, my horse fell dead under me, and my follower, anxious and troubled about my disappearance, after a long search, found me with a large wound in my head, lying insensible beside my horse, at the foot of a tree. I was a long time on the point of death; and it was only after three weeks of a raging fever, of agony and delirium that I was again in the possession of my reason. I then heard from the people of the town that my whole family had perished, victims of the cruel war that had devastated Luxembourg, and that the castle of Gross-Renzow had been pillaged and ravaged several times.

"Scarcely convalescent, I went a second time to the castle to have the remains of my family placed in the family vault, when, to my great surprise, and notwithstanding the scrupulous search I made, not a particle of those sacred remains could be found. A hand alone—a woman's hand—round which was this bracelet, lay on the floor of the room wherein the fatal vision had appeared to me. I took the bracelet; it was the one I now hold in my hand, and the human bones were placed in the oratory of the castle.

"Since that time, many, many a year has rolled past. About two months ago, as I was sleeping in the very chair I am now seated in, I was awakened by a slight noise. On opening my eyes I beheld my father, my mother, and my four sisters before me, and, as they had done in the Castle of Gross-Renzow, my sisters joined their hands together as if to play 'hot hands,' and beckoned me to approach. 'No,' I exclaimed, 'no never.' Then all the phantoms, taking each other by the hand, began to turn a circle round my chair. 'Justice,' said my father, while passing before me. 'Penance,' murmured my mother, as she bent her head toward me. 'Prayer,' said my youngest sister. 'Sword,' sighed the other. Afterwards I heard the other one say, 'The twelfth of August.' And the last one repeated, 'The twelfth of August, at midnight.' Again they commenced to walk around my chair, repeating the same words. After acting thus for some time, they joined their sepulchral voices in saying, 'Till we meet again!' I understood, then, that my destiny was about to be accomplished, and that I had nothing more to do than to recommend my soul to Heaven, and my family to Your Majesty."

"My dear Marshal,' said the King, "what you have related is certainly very strange. Do you not think that your fever and delirium have had something to do with those two visions? Come, come—take courage! Combat and overcome these hallucinations, and hope for the best! You will be soon well, and you will live to enjoy life for years to come. Is it not so? Do you not believe me? Come, give me your hand."

As Blucher did not answer, the King of Prussia took hold of the old man's hand. That hand was as cold as ice, and the old clock was just striking midnight!

Field-Marshal Gerhard Lebrecht Blucher was dead.

The Pirate-Fisherman.

The fish-market of Havana is said to be the finest structure of the kind in the world. It also interest the traveler by its romantic association with the story of Marti, a reformed pirate and smuggler, who built it and the "Tacon Theater."

During the administration of Tacon, from 1834 to 1838, smuggling and piracy had grown so bold in and about Cuba as to defy the Spanish Navy sent to suppress the outlaws. Their leader was a man named Marti, and for his person, dead or alive, the Governor-General offered a large reward.

One dark night a man was watching the sentinels pacing in front of the Governor's Palace, Havana. As they turned their backs and separated for a moment, the man sprang unobserved through the entrance. He passed up the broad stairs, saluted in an imperious style the guard there stationed, and passed into the Governor-General's room. The Governor, engaged in writing looked up as the man cooly cast aside his cloak, exclaiming:

"Who enters unanounced?'

"One who has information of the pirates."

"What of them?' said Tacon earnestly.

"One moment—I must not sacrifice myself.'

"You have naught to fear. Even if you be one of them, you will be pardoned.'

"Will you pardon and reward me if I reveal the lurking places of the pirates, and put Marti into your hands?'

"I pledge you my word of honor, said Tacon.

"Your Excellency, I am Marti."

The cool schoundrel then entered into an engagement with the Governor for the betrayal of all the smugglers and pirates. Under his guidance, the Spanish vessels sailed to the outlaws' hiding places and captured those who were not slain.

When Marti returned to Havana, he was offered the pardon, which he accepted, and money, which he declined. In lieu of the reward, he asked the monopoly of selling fish in Havana. It was granted, and he erected magnificent stone market. When he became master of enormous wealth, he built a theater and named it after the Governor-General who had pardoned the scoundrel.—Youth's Companion.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, asthama, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for general debility and all nervous complaints, after having thouroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. CRADLE-SONG OF THE POOR.

BY ADELAIDE PROCTER.

Hush! I cannot bear to see thee
Stretch thy tiny hands in vain;
Dear, I have no bread to give thee,
Nothing, child, to ease thy pain!
When God sent thee first to bless me,
Proud and thankful, too, was I;
Now, my darling, I, thy mother,
Almost long to see thee die.
Sleep, my darling, thou art weary,
God is good, but life is dreary.

I have watched thy beauty fading,
And thy strength sink day by day,
Soon, I know, will want and fever
Take thy little life away.
Famine makes thy father reckless;
Hope has left both him and me;
We could suffer all, my baby,
Had we but a crust for thee.

Better thou should perish early,
Starve so soon, my darling one,
Than in helpless sin and sorrow
Vainly live as I have done.
Better that thy angel spirit
With my joy, my peace, were flown,
Than thy heart grow cold and careless,
Reckless, hopeless, like my own.

I am wasted, dear, with hunger,
And my brain is all opprest,
I have scarcely strength to press thee,
Wan and feeble, to my breast.
Patience, baby, God will help us,
Death will come to thee and me,
He will take us to His heaven,
Where no want or pain can be.

Such the plaint that, late and early,
Did we listen, we might hear
Close beside us—but the thunder
Of a city dulls our ear.
Every heart, as God's bright angel
Can bid one such sorrow cease;
God has glory when His children
Bring His poor ones joy and peace.

THE THREE BRIDES.

Toward the close of a chilly afternoon, in the latter part of November, I was traveling in New Hampshire on horseback. The road was solitary and rugged, and wound along through gloomy pine forests, over abrupt and stony hills. Several circumstances conduced to my discomfort. I was not sure of my way, I had a hurt in my bridle hand, and evening was approaching, heralded by an icy rain and a cold, searching wind. I felt a sinking of spirits which I could not dispel by rapid riding, for my horse, fatigued by a long day's journey, refused to answer spur and whip with his usual animation. In an hour after, I was convinced that I had mistaken my road, and night surprised me in the forest. I had been in more unpleasant situations, so I adopted my usual expedient of letting the reins fall upon my courser's neck. He, however, blundered on, with his nose drooping to the ground, stumbling every moment, though ordinarily as surefooted as a roebuck. So we plodded on for a mile, while the landscape grew darker and darker.

At length, finding my horse less intelligent or more despairing than myself, I resumed the reins and endeavored to cheer my brute companion. To tell the truth, I stood in need of something exhilarating myself. The somber air of the eternal pines struck a deathly gloom to my heart, as one by one they seemed to rise on my path, like threatening genii, extending their scathed limbs to meet me. The rain, fine and cold, bedewed me from head to foot, and I question if a more miserable pair of animals ever threaded their way through the mazes of an enchanted forest. I thought of the comfortable home I had left for my forlorn pleasure excursion, of that cheerful hearth around which my family were gathered, of wine, music, love and the thousand endearments I had left behind, and then I gazed into the recesses of the shadowy wood that closed about me, almost in despair.

I began to dread the apparition of some giant intruder, and was seriously meditating the production of a pair of pistols, when my quick glance caught the glimmer of distant lights, twinkling through some opening in the trees, and darting a beam of hope upon the wanderer's soul. My reins were instantly grasped, and my rowels were struck into the sides of my charger. He snorted, pricked up his ears, erected his head, and sprung forth in an uncontrollable gallop. Up hill and down hill I pricked my gallant gray; and, when the forest was past, and his hoofs glinted on the stones of a street leading through a small village, I felt an animation that I cannot well describe. A creaking signboard, swinging in the wind on rusty irons, directed me to the only inn of the village. It was a two-story brick building, standing a little back from the road. I drew rein at the door and dismounted from my weary nag. My loud vociferations summoned to my side a bulldog cursed with a most unhappy disposition, and a hostler whose temper was hardly more amiable. He took my poor, jaded horse with an air of surly indifference, and gruffly directed me to the bar-room.

This apartment was tenanted by half a dozen rough farmers, rendered savage and morose by incessantly imbibing alcohol, and by the proprietor of the tavern, a bluff man, with a portly paunch, a hard, gray eye, and a stern Caledonian lip. He welcomed me without much frankness or cordiality, and I sank into a wooden settle, eyed by the surly guests of mine host, and the subject of sundry muttered remarks. The group, as it was lighted up by the strong red glare of the fire, had certainly a bandit appearance, which, however delightful to a Salvator Rosa, was by no means inviting to a quiet traveler, who had sought the bosom of the hills for pleasure.

After making a few remarks, which elicited only monosyllables in answer, I relapsed into silence, from which, however, I was soon aroused by the entrance of the surly hostler, who in no very gracious manner informed me that my horse was lame, and likely to be sick. This intelligence produced a visit to the stable, and the conviction that I could not possibly resume my journey on the ensuing day, which was somewhat disagreeable to a man who had taken up a decided prejudice against the inn and all its inmates.

Having succeeded in procuring a private room and a fire, I ignited an execrable cigar (ah! how unlike thy principes, dear S.), and endeavored to lose myself in the agreeable occupation of castle-building while my supper was preparing. Alas! my fancy came not to my call. I had lost my power of abstraction—the realities around me were too engrossing. Ere the dying shriek of a majestic rooster had ceased to sound in my ears, his remains were served up on my table, together with a cup or two of very villainous gunpowder tea and a pitcher of cider, with coarse bread and butter ad libitum. Supper was soon dispatched, and in answer to a bell, lightly touched, a vinegar-visaged waiting-maid, of the interesting age of 45, entered and removed the scarcely-touched viands.

I ventured to address her, with a request that I might be supplied with a few books, to enable me to while away the evening. I anticipated a literary feast from the readiness with which she rushed from the room; but she soon reappeared, bringing only "Young's Night Thoughts" (very greasy), a volume of tales with the catastrophes torn out, a set of plays consisting only of first acts, and an odd number of the Eclectic Magazine. This was sufficiently provoking; but I read a few pages and tried a second cigar and made the tour of the apartment, examining a family mourning-piece worked in satin, a genealogical tree done in worsted, and a portrait of the mutton-headed landlord and his simpish wife. I counted the ticks of the clock for half an hour, and was finally reduced to the forlorn expedient of seeing likenesses in the burning embers.

When the clock struck 9 I rang for slippers and a guide to my bedroom, and the landlord appeared, candle in hand, to usher me to my sleeping apartment. As I followed him up the creaking staircase, and along the dark upper entry, I could not help regretting that fancy was unable to convert him into the seneschal of a baronial mansion, and the room to which I was going into a haunted chamber. It seemed as if my surly host had the power of divining what was passing in my mind, for, when he had ushered me into the room and placed the candle on the light stand, he said:

"I hope you'll sleep comfortable, for there ain't many rats here, sir. And, as for the ghost they say frequents this chamber, I believe that's all in my eye, though to be sure the window does look out on the burial-ground."

"Umph! a comfortable prospect."

"Very, sir; you have a fine view of the Squire's new tomb and the poor-house, with a wing of the jail behind the trees. And I've stuck my second-best hat in that broken pane of glass, and there's a chest of drawers to set against the door, so you'll be warm and free from intrusion. I wish you good-night, sir."

All that night I was troubled with strange dreams, peopled by phantoms from the neighboring church-yard, but a bona-fide ghost I cannot say I saw. In the morning I rose very early and took a look from the window, but the prospect was very uninviting. The church-yard was a bleak, desolate place, overgrown with weeds, and studded with slate-stones, bounded by a ruinous brick wall, and having an entrance through a dilapidated gateway. One or two melancholy-looking cows were feeding on the rank herbage that sprung from the unctuous soil. But afar, in the most distant part of the field, I espied the figure of a man who was busily occupied in digging a grave.

There was something within that impelled me to stroll forth and accost him. I dressed, descended, and, having ordered breakfast, left the inn, clambered over the ruinous wall and stood within the precincts of the burial-place. The spot had evidently been used for the purpose of sepulture for a number of years, for the ground rose into numerous hillocks, and I could hardly walk a step without stumbling upon some grassy mound. Even when the perishable gravestones had been shattered by the hand of time, the length of the elevations enabled me to judge of the age of the deceased. This slight swell rose over the remains of some beloved child, who had been committed to the dust with only the simple ceremonies of the Protestant faith, bedewed by the tears of parents, and blessed by the broken voice of farewell affection. This mound of larger dimension was heaped above the giant frame of manhood. Some sturdy tiller of the soil, or rough dweller in the forest, cut off by a sudden casualty, had been laid here in his last leaden sleep—no more to start at the rising beam of the sun, no more to rush to the glorious excitement of the hunt, no more to pant in noonday toil.

Over the whole field of the dead there seemed to brood the spirit of desolation. Stern heads, rudely chiseled, grinned from the gravestones, and frightful emblems met the eye at every turn. Here was none of that simple elegance with which modern taste loves to invest the memorials of the departed; no graceful acacias, or nodding elms, or sorrowing willows shed their dews upon the turf—everything spoke of the bitterness of parting; of the agony of the last hour, of the passing away from earth—nothing of the reunion in heaven!

I passed on to where the grave-digger was pursuing his occupation. He answered my morning salutation civilly enough, but continued intent upon his work. He was a man of about 50 years of age, spare but strong, with gray hair, sunken cheeks, and certain lines about the mouth which augured a propensity to indulge in dry jest, though the sternness of his gray eye seemed to contradict the tacit assertion.

"An unpleasant morning, sir, to work in the open air," said I.

"He that regardeth the clouds shall not reap," replied the grave-digger, still busily plying his spade. "Death stalks abroad fair day and foul day, and we that follow in his footsteps must prepare for the dead, rain or shine."

"A melancholy occupation."

"A fit one for a moralist. Some would find a pleasure in it. Deacon Giles, I am sure, would willingly be in my place now."

"And why so?"

"This grave is for his wife," replied the grave-digger, looking up from his occupation with a dry smile that wrinkled his sallow cheeks and distorted his shrunken lips.

Perceiving that his merriment was not infectious, he resumed his employment, and that so assiduously that in a very short time he had hollowed the last resting-place of Deacon Giles' consort. This done, he ascended from the trench with a lightness that surprised me, and, walking a few paces from the new-made grave, sat down upon a tombstone and beckoned me to approach. I did so.

"Young man," said he, "a sexton and a grave-digger, if he is one who has a zeal for his calling, becomes something of a historian, amassing many a curious tale and strange legend concerning the people with whom he has to do, living and dead. For a man with a taste for his profession cannot provide for the last repose of his fellows without taking an interest in their story, the manner of death and the concern of the relatives who follow their remains so tearfully to the grave."

"Then," replied I, taking a seat beside the sexton, "methinks you could relate some interesting tales."

Again the withering smile that I had before observed passed over the face of the sexton, as he answered:

"I am no story-teller, sir; I deal in fact, not fiction. Yes, yes, I could chronicle some strange events. But of all the things I know, there is nothing stranger than the melancholy history of the three brides."

"The three brides?"

"Ay. Do you see three hillocks yonder, side by side? There they sleep, and will till the last trumpet comes wailing and wailing through the heart of these lone hills, with a tone so strange and stirring that the dead will start from their graves at its first awful note. Then will come the judgment and the retribution. But to my tale. Look there, sir, on yonder hill, you may observe a little isolated house, with a straggling fence in front, and a few stunted apple trees on the ascent behind it. It is sadly out of repair now, and the garden is all overgrown with weeds and brambles, and the whole place has a desolate appearance. If the wind were high now, you might hear the old crazy shutters flapping against the sides, and the wind tearing the gray shingles off the roof. Many years ago there lived in that house an old man and his son, who cultivated the few acres of arable land which belonged to it.

"The father was a self-taught man, deeply versed in the mysteries of science, and, as he could tell the name of every flower that blossomed in the wood and grew in the garden, and used to sit up late nights over his books, or reading the wonderful story of the starry heavens, men thought he was bewitched or crazed, and avoided him, and even hated him, as the ignorant ever shun and dread the gifted and enlightened. A few there were, and, among others, the minister and lawyer and physician of the place, who showed some willingness to afford him countenance, but they soon dropped his acquaintance, for they found the old man somewhat reserved and morose, and, moreover, their vanity was wounded by discovering the extent of his knowledge. To the minister he would quote the fathers and the Scriptures in the original tongue, and showed himself well armed with the weapons of polemic controversy. He astonished the lawyer with his profound acquaintance with jurisprudence; and the physician was surprised at the extent of his medical knowledge. So they all deserted him, and the minister, from whom the old man differed in some trifling points of doctrine, spoke very slightingly of him; and by and by all looked upon the self-educated farmer with eyes of aversion. But he little cared for that, for he derived his consolation from loftier resources, and in the untracked paths of science found a pleasure as in the pathless woods! He instructed his son in all his lore—the languages, literature, history, philosophy, science, were unfolded, one by one, to the enthusiastic son of the solitary.

"Years rolled away, and the old man died. He died when a storm convulsed the face of nature, when the wind howled around his shattered dwelling and the lightning played above the roof; and, though he went to heaven in faith and purity, the vulgar thought and said that the evil one had claimed his own in the thunder and commotion of the elements.

"I cannot paint to you the grief of the son at his bereavement. He was, for a time, as one distracted. The minister came and muttered a few cold and hollow phrases in his ear, and a few neighbors, impelled by curiosity to see the interior of the old man's dwelling, came to his funeral. With a proud and lofty look the son stood above the dust and the dead in the midst of the band of hypocritical mourners, with a pang at his heart, but a serenity on his brow. He thanked his friends for their kindness, acknowledged their courtesy, and then strode away from the grave to bury his grief in the privacy of his deserted dwelling.

"He found, at first, the solitude of the mansion almost insupportable, and he paced the echoing floors from morning till night, in all the agony of woe and desolation, vainly imploring Heaven for relief. It came to him first in the guise of poetic inspiration. He wrote with a wonderful ease and power. Page after page came from his prolific pen, almost without an effort; and there was a time when he dreamed (vain fool!) of immortality. Some of his productions came before the world. They were praised and circulated, and inquiries were set on foot in the hope of discovering the author. He, wrapped in the veil of impenetrable obscurity, listened to the voice of applause, more delicious because it was obtained by stealth. From the obscurity of yonder lone mansion, and from this remote region, to send forth lays which astonished the world was, indeed, a triumph to the visionary bard.

"His thirst for fame was gratified, and now he began to yearn for the companionship of some sweet being of the other sex, to share the laurels he had won, to whisper consolation in his ear in moments of despondency, and to supply the void which the death of his old father had occasioned. He would picture to himself the felicity of a refined intercourse with a highly-intellectual and beautiful woman, and, as he had chosen for his motto, "what has been done may still be done," he did not despair of success.

"In this village lived three sisters, all beautiful and all accomplished. Their names were Mary, Adelaide and Madeleine. I am far enough past the age of enthusiasm, but never can I forget the beauty of those young girls. Mary was the youngest, and a fair-haired, more laughing damsel never danced upon a green. Adelaide, who was a few years older, was dark-haired and pensive; but of the three, Madeleine, the eldest, possessed the most fire, spirit, cultivation and intellectuality.

"Their father was a man of taste and education; and, being somewhat above vulgar prejudices, permitted the visits of the hero of my story. Still, he did not altogether encourage the affection which he found springing up between Mary and the poet. When, however, he found that her affections were engaged, he did not withhold his consent from her marriage, and the recluse bore to his solitary mansion the young bride of his affections. Oh, sir, the house assumed a new appearance within and without. Roses bloomed in the garden, jessamines peeped through its lattices, and the fields about it smiled with the effects of careful cultivation. Lights were seen in the little parlor in the evening, and many a time would the passenger pause by the garden-gate to listen to strains of the sweetest music, breathed by choral voices from the cottage. If the mysterious student and his wife were neglected by their neighbors what cared they? Their endearing and mutual affection made their home a little paradise. But death came to Eden. Mary fell suddenly sick, and, after a few hours' illness, died in the arms of her husband and her sister Madeleine. This was the student's second heavy affliction.

"Days, months rolled on, and the only solace of the bereaved was to sit with the sisters of the deceased and talk of the lost one. To Adelaide, at length, he offered his widowed heart. She came to his lone house like the dove, bearing the olive-branch of peace and consolation. Their bridal was not one of revelry and mirth, for a sad recollection brooded over the hour. Yet they lived happily; the husband again smiled, and, with a new spring, the roses again blossomed in their garden. But it seemed as if a fatality pursued this singular man. When the rose withered and the leaf fell, in the mellow autumn of the year, Adelaide, too, sickened and died, like her younger sister, in the arms of her husband and of Madeleine.

"Perhaps you will think it strange, young man, that, after all, the wretched survivor stood again at the altar. But he was a mysterious being, whose ways were inscrutable, who, thirsting for domestic bliss, was doomed ever to seek and never to find it. His third bride was Madeleine. I well remember her. She was a beauty, in the true sense of the word. It may seem strange to you to hear the praise of beauty from such lips as mine; but I cannot avoid expatiating upon hers. She might have sat upon a throne, and the most loyal subject, the proudest peer, would have sworn the blood within her veins had descended from a hundred Kings. She was a proud creature, with a tall, commanding form, and raven tresses that floated, dark and cloud-like, over her shoulders. She was a singularly-gifted woman, and possessed of rare inspiration. She loved the widower for his power and his fame, and she wedded him. They were married in that church. It was on a summer afternoon—I recollect it well. During the ceremony, the blackest cloud I ever saw overspread the heavens like a pall, and, at the moment when the third bride pronounced her vow, a clap of thunder shook the building to the center. All the females shrieked, but the bride herself made the response, with a steady voice, and her eyes glittered with wild fire as she gazed upon the bridegroom. He remarked a kind of incoherence in her expressions as they rode homeward, which surprised him at the time. Arrived at his house, she shrunk upon the threshold; but this was the timidity of a maiden. When they were alone he clasped her hand—it was as cold as ice! He looked into her face.

"'Madeleine,' said he, 'what means this? Your cheeks are as pale as your wedding-gown. What is the matter?'

"The bride uttered a frantic shriek.

"'My wedding-gown!' exclaimed she; 'no, no—this—this is my sister's shroud! The hour for confession has arrived. It is God that impels me to speak. To win you I have lost my soul! Yes—yes—I am a murderess! She smiled upon me in the joyous affection of her young heart—but I gave her the fatal drug! Adelaide twined her white arms about my neck, but I administered the poison! Take me to your arms; I have lost my soul for you, and mine must you be!'

"She spread her long, white arms, and stood like a maniac before him," said the sexton, rising, in the excitement of the moment, and assuming the attitude he described; "and then," continued he, in a hollow voice, and shuddering at the recollection, "at that moment came the thunder and the flash, and the guilty woman fell dead on the floor."

The countenance of the narrator expressed all the horror that he felt.

"And the bridegroom," asked I; "the husband of the destroyer and the victims—what became of him?"

"He stands before you!" was the thrilling answer.

A Brave Woman.

A little Eureka (Nev.) woman awoke the other night to find a burglar prospecting her room for valuables. The Sentinel says: "She lay very quietly until he had concluded his labors and transferred operations to the adjoining parlor, when she quietly arose, armed herself with a revolver which her husband had provided her with, and which was snugly ensconsed under her pillow, and tip-toed into his presence. Covering him with the weapon, without a tremor in her voice, she commanded him to disgorge his plunder. There was blood in her eye and determination in her voice, and the bold burglar weakened at once. He deposited on the center-table a bracelet, gold chain, and pair of ear-rings, all that he had managed to secure thus far, and meekly listened to a spirited lecture which the lady delivered impromptu. She wound up her address by expressing a regret that her scanty toilet prevented her from escorting him to the jail, and ordered him out of the house. He did not stand upon the order of his going, but went at once.

Not as He Expected.

Last Monday John C. Sarberry, of Hannibal, put his old clothes on the river bank, anchored a note to his wife on top of them with a stone, and hid around to read his obituaries. When he read in the first paper he got hold of that "that primordial dead-beat and free-lunch gobbler, Jack Sarberry, had been good enough to the community and humanity to go to the devil without waiting to be called for," he got so mad he couldn't read any further, but sailed into town with a club and did the hardest day's work of his life hunting for the editor. Truly, it is not all of death die.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

STANLEY LIONIZED.

He Dines with the Prince of Wales and Lectures to an Audience Representing the Wealth and Culture of England.

[London Cor. New York Herald.]

Stanley dined with the Prince of Wales, and, after enjoying the hospitalities of St. James Palace, proceeded to the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society at St. James' Hall, where he delivered a lecture before an immense assemblage. Over 3,000 persons were present, including the principal nobility and nearly every distinguished personage in London associated with science, arts and literature. All the tickets were special and complimentary, and the spacious hall was thronged. The Prince of Wales, accompanied by Prince Louis Napoleon, ex-Prince Imperial of France, the son of the Khedive of Egypt, and Midhat Pasha, also attended the meeting, testifying by their presence the appreciation with which Mr. Stanley's great geographical success is regarded by the royal family in England.

Mr. Stanley, on appearing on the platform, was received with immense cheering, the assembly rising to greet him. Standing before this vast audience, which represented the wealth and culture of England, his breast blazing with decorations received from Kings and the chiefs of the republic of science, the gallant explorer silently bowed his acknowledgment of the honors tendered to him. Stanley gave a graphic description of his wonderful journey across Africa. For two hours he held the attention of the assemblage. He sketched pictures of the scenes and events of his journey. His description of the return of the survivors of the noble band of natives who had accompanied him across the African continent to their homes at Zanzibar was one calculated, and did not fail, to touch the sympathies of his hearers. When the wanderers arrived on their beloved island of palms and mangroves, and to their wondering families, they knelt down on the sea-shore and kissed their native sands in a transport of joy and thankfulness.

When Mr. Stanley concluded he was greeted with prolonged applause. After the cheering had subsided the Prince of Wales addressed the assemblage in a speech filled with compliments to Stanley. The praise of the Prince of Wales was regarded as unusually significant. The distinguished African traveler and explorer, Sir Samuel Baker, followed the Prince of Wales in a brief address. After complimenting Stanley on his great achievement, he said only African travelers could fully appreciate Stanley's great feat.

"Long John" Wentworth.

Long John was lightly resting on the simple but substantial chair which supports his ethereal form in his office yesterday afternoon when there entered, with a slow, uncertain step, an elderly man, who looked as if he had never seen better days.

"I kem up to thank ye, Mr. Wentworth, for a favor ye done me the first time you was Mayor. I've had it on my mind for some time, 'an I thought I'd come down an' tell you. But maybe ye don't remember me?"

"No, I don't," said Mr. Wentworth. "You see I've been Mayor several times, and, as I gave my time to the business and have been very busy ever since, I can't remember every one I met. What did I do for you?"

"It was just like this: The fust time you was Mayor I started down to your office one day to ask a favor. I met you on the street an' said I was goin' to the Mayor's office, an' says you, 'This is the Mayor's office; I take it right around with me. What do you want?' says you. Says I, 'I want a pardon for my boy, who is in the Bridewell,' an' then I told you how he kum there.

"You just took a piece of paper an' reached down an' wrote on my shoulder, an' gev it to me.

"I went to the Bridewell an' give it to the man an' sat down. When I saw the boy wasn't comin' I asked why they delayed, and said I'd brought a pardon from Long John. They asked me if I'd read the paper, an' I said 'No.' They gev it to me, an' it read:

"Give this man his son when his term is out.
"J. Wentworth, Mayor.

"So I went home, an' the boy came when his term was out. He hadn't been long home till I made up my mind that you was right in not letting him go sooner, and since then I've kim to the conclusion that it 'ud have bin better if you ordered him kept there ever since. So I thought I'd just drop in an' thank you for not lettin' him out when I asked you."—Chicago Times.

A Bloody Indian War Predicted.

Extensive operations against the hostile Indians will be instituted at an early day, for which preparations have already been ordered. That war will be resumed, be protracted, and exceed in its bloody record any in the annals of the West, is conceded by one and all of those here who are in a position to know, and this knowledge is not solely based upon preparations that are being made for war, but as well upon the knowledge of the Sioux Indian, and his hostile proclivities when he becomes the victim of a real or imaginary grievance, that is cherished by informed parties.—*Omaha Cor. How a Man Put Himself Out.

As a gentleman was walking along the street last evening, he perceived some way ahead of him a man who appeared to be carrying a smoke-stack in his coat pocket. Suddenly flames burst out from the back of the coat, the individual still proceeding calmly along till the region of the neck was reached, when he turned around, and, grasping the situation, immediately threw himself in the snow, and for awhile afforded a fine example of nervous energy expending itself in rotary movement. He extinguished the fire. Cause, a lighted pipe carelessly put into a pocket.—Montreal Witness.

An odd figure in the ceremony of the Barnett-Shoemaker wedding, at Baltimore, was that of the bride's train-bearer. This was "Mammy Gracie," an ancient colored woman, who has cared for the youngsters of three generations in the Shoemaker family. She marched proudly up the aisle, with a new bandanna handkerchief of gorgeous colors on her head, and when the party reached the altar Mammy Gracie took her stand beside the President of the United States.

THE PASSING OF THE TRAIN BOY.

In the West the day was dying:
Wintry cloud-ships near the sun,
In a sea of crimson lying,
Told the day was almost done.
On his couch of pain and weakness
Pale and still the train boy lies;
Beams his face with placid meekness,
Glow with softened light his eyes.

"Comrades, on both sides surround me!"
And he brightens with a smile;
"In two long lines stand around me,
Make my couch the Pullman aisle."
Even as the wish he utters
Round they stand with wond'ring stares,
While in frosty tones he mutters,
"Pears? Fresh California pears!"

Then they tumble to his fancies,
And at passengers they play,
While they snarl with surly glances,
"Naw!" "Don't want no pears." "Go away!"
Then they closer stand around him,
Nudging him to hear him say,
As though in the car they found him—
"Peanuts? Roasted fresh to-day!"

Then they hoot in wild derision,
And in answer to their scorn,
Loud he calls with kindling vision,
"English walnuts? Fresh pop-corn?
All the latest and the best books?
Morning papers? Journal? Times?
Daily Hawk-Eye? Roasted chestnuts?
Don't be stingy with your dimes.

"New laid figs? The best imported
Hand-made abyssinian dates!
Train stops while you eat one; sorted
For the trade in canvas crates."
Thus his strength comes back with chaffing,
And his comrades dry their tears;
From death's jaws he leaps, and, laughing
Duns the train for fifty years.

THE MUSCOGEE BLOSSOM.

How John Morrissey Resented an Insult.

[From the New York Sun.]

On Mr. Morrissey's arrival in Savannah his friends say that he put up at the Pulaski House, an old and somewhat famous resort for Southern chivalry. He had no particular acquaintances in that city, and walked up to the clerk's desk and wrote his name upon the register like any other traveler. The proprietors assigned him fine rooms and did their best to make him comfortable. The news of his arrival was announced in the daily newspapers, and created much interest. Naturally unobtrusive in his demeanor, he shunned publicity, but was affable and courteous to all who made his acquaintance. He took his meals at a table removed from general observation, and had no company. The ladies eyed him somewhat curiously, and he was silently lionized by all, but beyond this nothing was done that would lead him to suppose he was a man of more than usual interest.

One day, however, the traditional Georgia blossom appeared at the hotel. He came from up country, near Muscogee district, and was on his annual spree. He was six feet high, well-built, and in his own country was a man of considerable consequence. Away from home he attracted general attention by the loudness of his voice, the violence of his actions, and his odd appearance. He heard the guests of the hotel commenting on Senator Morrissey, and imagined that his own light was eclipsed by the unobtrusive gentleman from New York. The Muscogee blossom made no effort to conceal his chagrin. He roared in the corridors over the cotton crop, and ostentatiously aired himself in the ladies' parlor. All in vain. No one gave him the slightest consideration. Disappointed and exasperated, he entered the dining-hall and sat down at a prominent table, apparently determined to create a sensation. Senator Morrissey was quietly eating his dinner in his usual place. The Georgian, recognizing an acquaintance across the room, began a conversation with him, "cracker" fashion, in a loud voice. The talk drifted upon politics, the recent election in New York serving as a pivot.

"New York city," said the Muscogee blossom, "is the slum-hole of politicians. No respectable man can hold an office there." Raising his voice: "Why, no man can be elected to the Legislature from New York city unless he is a thief or a gambler."

The object of his remarks was so palpable that every eye was turned upon Mr. Morrissey. The Senator did not raise his eyes, but finished his meal as though totally unconscious of the conversation. Incensed by his silence, the Muscogee blossom became so personal in his allusions that several ladies left the dining-room. After dessert, Mr. Morrissey walked out to the office and lighted a cigar. One of the proprietors of the hotel began to apologize for the scene in the dining-room, but the Senator interrupted him by saying, "Don't give yourself the slightest uneasiness. You certainly are not responsible for the drivel of a blackguard, and I hope you will say nothing more about it."

While the Senator was leaning upon the cigar-stand, the gentleman from Muscogee came down the corridor and purposely brushed against him in passing. Mr. Morrissey tapped him on the shoulder, saying, "I beg your pardon, sir; but I overheard your remarks at the dinner-table concerning New York and New Yorkers. Probably you were not aware that I am from New York city."

"Oh, yes, I reckon I was," said the Muscogee blossom.

"Then," continued Senator Morrissey, "when calling the city members of the New York Legislature thieves and gamblers, you were not aware that I was one of those officials."

"Oh, yes, I reckon I was," repeated the Muscogee blossom very unconcernedly.

"Probably you know who I am, and your remarks at the table were meant for me," said the Senator.

"I reckon you're right," replied the blossom, with refreshing insolence. "They were just meant for you sure, and no one else."

He stood with his fingers in his pistol-pocket. Morrissey never raised his hands. For two seconds he remained motionless as a statue, and then the Muscogee blossom fell to the floor bleeding and senseless, a flower without a stalk. The Senator had used one of the tricks of his early days, and "bucked" him. Like lightning he had hurled his head against the skull of the Georgian, and the latter dropped like a pig of lead. He was carried to his room insensible, and for hours it was a question of life and death. One of his doctors told Mr. Morrissey that the injured man could not live twenty-four hours. "I congratulate the citizens of Georgia," he replied. Six hours afterward the doctor met the Senator and said that the man would recover. "I condole with the citizens of Georgia," was the response. "I shall go to Jacksonville within a few days; but, if I am wanted, a telegraphic dispatch will receive prompt attention."

The next day, as Mr. Morrissey entered the dining-hall, he was shown to his table by the head-waiter. The table was a bed of rare and beautiful flowers, the gift of the ladies of the hotel. The Senator was so confused by this delicate attention that he could make no response. His manner, however, spoke louder than his words, and, when he went to Jacksonville, his departure was universally regretted.

Slaughtering the Buffalo in Texas.

The town of Griffin is supported by buffalo-hunters, and is their general rendezvous in this section. The number of hunters on the ranges this season is estimated at 1,500. We saw at Griffin a plat of ground of about four acres covered with buffalo hides spread out to dry, besides a large quantity piled up for shipment. These hides are worth, in this place, from $1 to $1.60 each. The generally-accepted idea of the exciting chase in buffalo-hunting is not the plan pursued by the men who make it a regular business. They use the needle-gun with telescope, buy the powder by the keg, their lead in bulk, and the shells, and make their own cartridges. The guns in a party of hunters are used by only one or two men, who say they usually kill a drove of thirty or forty buffaloes on one or two acres of ground. As soon as one is killed the whole herd, smelling the blood, collect around the dead body, snuffing and pawing up the ground, and uttering a singular noise. The hunter continues to shoot them down as long as he can remain concealed, or until the last animal "bites the dust." The buffalo pays no attention to the report of the gun, and flees only at sight or scent of his enemy. The others of the party then occupy themselves in "peeling." Some of these have become so skillful they offer to bet they can skin a 5 or 6-year-old bull in five minutes. The meat is also saved and sent to market, and commands a good price.—Shackelford County Letter to Galveston News.

Fighting With a Wild-Cat.

Joe Elting lives in the mountain district, twenty-five miles northwest of Shokan, N. Y., in a log hut in the woods, some distance from any neighbor. He keeps pigs and some chickens in a small building 200 feet from the house. Of late he had missed chickens almost every night. He made up his mind to find the thief, and kept close watch. One night he heard a noise among the chickens, and, taking his gun and lantern, went to the building, and entered it by a small door, in the bottom of which was a hole cut for the ingress and egress of the fowls. He carefully closed the door after him, but scarcely had he done so before a large wild-cat attempted to escape through the hole in the bottom of the door. Elting disputed the passage; the animal was so close to him that his gun could not be used. In the scuffle that ensued the lantern was knocked over and the light put out. The animal fastened his fore-claws deep in his right shoulder and neck, and, at every effort to unloose it, its hind-claws were used on his side and chest. Elting at length reached the cat's neck with his left hand, which partially unloosed it from its first hold. Then he grasped it firmly around the neck with both hands, and killed it. The blood was flowing in streams from Elting's side, breast and arms, and so fearful a strain had he undergone that he sank in a swoon beside the dead body of the beast, where his wife found him some time afterward.

Fish Culture.

There are now twenty-seven States whose Commissioners of Fisheries receive, hatch and distribute the eggs furnished by the United States Fish Commission. About 4,000,000,000 eggs of California salmon were thus distributed in October. Congress has appropriated $5,000 toward preparing ponds near the Washington monument for breeding the carp, a European species being regarded desirable for introduction here. The Wisconsin Fish Commissioners report a large amount of work, having hatched and distributed 1,736,000 lake trout, 6,295,000 whitefish, and smaller amounts of brook trout and California salmon. The question whether our lakes will prove fitted for California salmon will soon be determined. The hatching has been successful with about 90 per cent. of the eggs. The Fish Commissioners of Maine report an unusually large quantity of salmon, principally due to the efforts of fish culture, in most of the rivers of the State. Several ponds have been stocked with black bass as an antidote to pickerel. In the Mattawamkeag river 80,000 shad-fry have been placed.

Better than the Moffet Law.

In Mississippi a patent has been obtained for a method of collecting taxes upon drinks which is far better than the Moffet or Clarke register. Books of coupons are sold by the State Auditor to all liquor dealers. When a drink is sold the consumer receives a coupon, which entitles him to receive from the State, in payment of his taxes, 1 cent. If two drinks are to be paid for he receives an orange-colored coupon good for 2 cents. If five drinks, a blue paper good for 5 cents. Not only does the State enjoy an income from the tax on drinks, but the consumer has a reasonable chance of paying off his taxes with the orange and blue coupons. The saloons are crowded at all times with men making out their taxes.

Old Pensioners.

The surviving soldiers of the Mexican war are estimated to number about 6,000; the widows of Mexican veterans, 1,000; surviving soldiers of the regular army participating in that war, 2,700; soldiers and widows of the Black Hawk, Creek and Seminole wars, 3,700, all of whom are provided for under the bill recently reported favorably by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions. Their aggregate pensions at $96 each will amount to $1,286,400 per annum, but this sum will, of course, be rapidly diminished, as the beneficiaries of the proposed legislation average 60 years of age, and in less than two decades few will remain to answer roll-call.

Farm Bookkeeping.

Last week we gave the annual accounts of a farmer who keeps books. There was nothing particularly remarkable about the figures. They showed a safe, comfortable business, but no such profits as would attract much attention. The item owed its interest to the fact that it gave, with some approach to accuracy, the business transactions of a year on a farm. The simple fact that it did command attention is lamentable evidence that it is an uncommon thing to find a farmer who keeps books accurately enough so that he can determine his profits or his losses at the end of the year.—*Rome (Ga.) Prussia's Navy.

The Prussian fleet consists of eight ironclad frigates, of which two are unfinished; five ironclad corvettes, of which three are unfinished; besides sixteen wooden corvettes and nine gunboats. The defense of the coasts is left to two smaller ironclads, seven ironclad gunboats, six torpedo boats, and four smaller gunboats. While Prussia in the war in 1864 was unable to prevent the German ports from being blockaded by the Danish fleet, her fleet would now not only be able to defend the coasts, but might proceed to Copenhagen, bombard the town, and dictate the conditions of peace.

In Buenos Ayres, the Inhambay gold mines have created quite a furore, the shares rising in one day from 40 per cent. premium to 200, falling afterward to 100. The mines are at the north of Paraguay, in the frontier range.

Myths Are But Symbols of Truth.

As the scholar sees in the vain but beautiful mythologies of the ancients the embodied expressions of the hungry human soul, blindly groping after the infinite, so the physician sees in that popular myth of the sixteenth century—the fountain of perpetual health and youth—an expression of the longings of suffering humanity for a remedy that should forever prevent the incursion of disease. The wilds of Europe were ransacked for this wonderful fountain, and Ponce de Leon sought for it in the cypress-swamps and tangled everglades of our sunny Florida. Men have searched for it everywhere and anywhere, but it really is—in the human body itself. The blood is the real fountain of perpetual health and youth. When this source is corrupted, the painful and sorrow-producing effects are visible in many shapes. The multifarious forms in which it manifests itself would form subjects upon which I might write volumes. But as all the varied forms of disease which depend upon bad blood are cured, or best treated, by such medicines as take up from this fluid and excrete from the system the noxious elements, it is not of practical importance that I should describe each. For instance, medical authors describe about fifty varieties of skin disease, but, as they all require for their cure very similar treatment, it is of no practical utility to know just what name to apply to a certain form of skin disease, so you know how best to cure it. Then again, I might go on and describe various kinds of scrofulous sores, fever sores, white swellings, enlarged glands, and ulcers of varying appearance; might describe how virulent poison may show itself in various forms of eruptions, ulcers, sore throat, bony tumors, etc.; but, as all these various-appearing manifestations of bad blood are cured by a uniform means, I deem such a course unnecessary. Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the great fountain of life, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution, will all return to us. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They are warranted to cure tetter, salt rheum, scald head, St. Anthony's fire, rose rash or erysipelas, ringworms, pimples, blotches, spots, eruptions, pustules, boils, carbuncles, sore eyes, rough skin, scurf, scrofulous sores and swellings, affections of the skin, throat and bones, and ulcers of the liver, stomach, kidneys and lungs.

Cogent Reasons for a Grand Success.

Conspicuous among the highest examples of success which the present century can show is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The record of its triumphs over disease is to be traced in the written acknowledgments of thousands who have experienced its beneficent effects, and the evidence of its popularity is to be found in the vast and growing demand for the article in North and South America, Mexico, Guatemala, the West Indies, Australia and Europe. The reasons for its unparalleled success are cogent ones. The accumulated evidence of nearly thirty years shows that it is a certain remedy for malarial disease, as well as its surest preventive; that it eradicates dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint and nervousness, counteracts a tendency to gout, rheumatism, urinary and uterine disorders, that it imparts vigor to the feeble, and cheers the mind while it invigorates the body.

THE possession of riches will bring you no enjoyment unless you have good health; therefore, if you are troubled with any Disease of the Heart, no matter how slight, it is well to look to its immediate cure. Your physician may say, "I will give you relief," but notice that he does not say he will cure, but in Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR we have a cure, and can substantiate it by the many testimonials we have received. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists, price 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial-diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The Cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World!

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heartburn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of MERCURY, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases caused by Derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

THE SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach; Loss of Appetite; Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache; Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not Regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

I can recommend, as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons' Liver Regulator.—LEWIS G. WUNDER, 1,625 MASTER STREET, ASSISTANT POSTMASTER, PHILADELPHIA.

"We have tested its virtues, personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons' Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved, but cured us."—ED. IMPORTANT TO FARMERS

Facts and figures have already been published showing, by as reliable testimony as can be found, that the White Russian Wheat will produce from 5 to 15 bushels per acre more than other varieties, and is hardier, stands up better, and is of better quality than any other spring wheat. We can only present a few specimen extracts showing the character of letters received from farmers.

From W. H. [illegible], [illegible], Iowa.—The Russian Wheat I raised beats all the varieties of spring wheat I ever saw—weight, 64 lbs. per bu.

From J. H. Williams, [illegible], Iowa.—The two bushels of Russian Wheat I bought of you last spring was sowed on one acre, from which I harvested [illegible] bushels. I sowed two other varieties, and I think the Russian yielded double that of any wheat on my farm. It has attracted considerable attention here, and I could have sold my crop at a big price, but it was not for sale.

From Geo. W. [illegible], [illegible], Clay Co., [illegible]—My White Russian Wheat yielded from one bushel of seed [illegible] bushels. Other varieties yielded from 10 to 15 bushels per acre.

From Edward [illegible], [illegible].—The one-half bushel of White Russian Wheat I purchased last spring was sowed on one-half acre of land, and I harvested [illegible] bushels of good wheat.

Send stamp for circular, with full particulars and prices, also a sample of the wheat.

Kidney Complaints.

Diseases of the Kidneys, Bladder, etc., are always unpleasant, and at times they become the most distressing and dangerous diseases that can affect the human system. Most diseases of the Kidneys arise from impurities in the blood, causing humors which settle on these parts. VEGETINE excels any known remedy in the whole world for cleansing and purifying the blood, thereby causing a healthy action to all the organs of the body.

THE SILVER BILL PASSED.

The United States Senate, last Saturday, at 5 o'clock, after an all night session, passed the Bland silver bill with the free coinage clause stricken out. The bill passed by a vote of 48 ayes to 21 nays—more than two-thirds. We congratulate the people of the west and the entire country upon the passage of this bill, because it is a measure of right, justice and wisdom; because it is calculated and will operate to relieve their burdens and to bring a return of prosperity, and most of all because it shows that the Senate of the United States at last represents the people of the country and can no longer be controlled by Wall street.

PERHIPS.

GARRETT, IND., Feb. 13, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER.—At half past seven on the evening of Feb. 11th, in the quiet town of Garrett, several sleds were skipping rapidly from this house to that one, and at each stopping point an addition was made to the jollity of those already aboard.

All are anxiously awaiting the inception to the journey, and presently we arrived at the door of the last passenger expected. What horror! Chagrin is depicted upon our countenances when we suddenly perceive an expression, (pallor, I presume, with anger intermixing,) although incongruous to the benevolent and complacent lady of the elite of Garrett. Dare we conjecture the truth? If we make known our ideas, and they are founded on mendacious reports, it might tend to distemper this lady. Nevertheless, we will not controvert upon a matter so odious to our subordinate selves, but ask to lay the case before the public and see what they think of it.

Oh, what a disgrace it is not to be a "Long!" Just think of it, that a Long would not condescend to ride in a sled with good social people! We think they are a great deal like the son whose opinion of himself was so exalted beyond measure, that his father, seeing the erroneousness of the son, thought it time to advise him:

"My son," remarked the old gentleman very solemnly, "I know everything that you do, and one thing more."

The highly erudite son, somewhat overcome by this remark, was anxious to obtain this one knowledge of his father and thereby be exceedingly smart. He studied the matter over and over, and presently remarked:

"Father, will you not teach me this one knowledge of yours?"

"Well," quoth the old gentlemen, "you are a d—d fool, and I know it."

Inferiority and lividness just at this time, so possessed the unfortunate son, that ever after they were inseparable, and as a natural consequence he descended to this limit.

Thus we see this little incident is just the "fit." We are not "tony" and we know it, but on the other hand, they are not "tony" and don't know it.

Well, come, let us leave this scene alone in its glory, and pass to the next sled where hilarity reigns. We will first inquire how many occupants.—There are nine, four ladies and five gentlemen; and, nevertheless, if poor "Strap" is dead and not buried yet, this was the most jovial crowd of all, as we learn from one of the occupants.

Oh, if ever we have the honor, my wife and I, of accompanying another social to Auburn, may fate chance or some other fellow put us in with this felicitous crowd, where Garrett in all her loveliness shone forth in magnificent splendor.

In two short hours we were in the Odd Fellows' Hall of Auburn. Was it not kind to open an Odd Fellows' Hall for our reception? We felt highly honored by those noble people of Auburn, and hope that soon we shall have an opportunity offered us of returning the honor as well as pleasure.

PILSNDER FOX.

—We would call attention to the advertisement of the Garrett Tea and Fruit House, in another column. Mr. J. J. Hoffman, proprietor of the firm, has put his goods down to the lowest prices, desiring inspection of the public general. Give him a call.

It will be remembered that the excessive rains and floods of last year were very destructive to our bridges during, 1877. Owing to some considerable carelessness, many of our bridges had become worthless and even dangerous, and with this accumulation of years, together with the series of freshets, with which we were afflicted last year, a large expenditure had to be made by petition and otherwise for the ordinary passage over the streams of the county. The above sets forth an itemized statement of the expense for bridges and their approaches. As there has been some controversy as to the amount expended during the year, we take great pains to give a full and complete showing. We believe the Board has endeavored to discharge its duties to the best of their judgment, and have distributed these improvements as nearly as possible over the entire county. While we think a course of strict economy should be pursued in the paying out of public money, we believe there has been no job, or any attempt at a dishonest use of the county's finances. The other expenses of the county have been no more than in other years, and the pay of each Commissioner, the Auditor informs us, for his official duties has been but $184 for the year, from December to December. Of course the large amount of bridge building has required the presence of one of the commissioners, and that is additional to their regular duties. Besides the new ditch law passed by the last legislature, entails more expense upon the county than any former one, and this is another additional source of expense. It is only about two years since a law was passed requiring an itemized statement to be made by the Commissioners, after each session, of the bills allowed, so that few persons before that knew but little about the sums being expended yearly for public improvements. It is evident that the new bridge erected, while costing more now, will in the end be the cheapest for the tax-payer. The old style of bridge building, that of setting a bridge down on the water, without abutments has been abandoned, and no intelligent person will deny that the present system is more in keeping with good common sense and economy. Let us have rigid economy, but not that kind which is a penny wise and pound foolish.

—In some place in this State the trustees of the schools propose to provide all the text books used in the school. The books will remain the property of the school and be used by different scholars as they advance. We think this a good idea, as it will give the poorer class a better chance to advance in educational matters.

—Our choirs is doing some excellent singing. This is as it should be. Good music is the life of any church. We are a progressive people and the old fashioned, long-meter whine in use thirty years ago will not answer anymore. We are commanded to sing with the spirit and understanding. Mr. X. get up and say something for yourself.

—Over 500,000 bottles of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup are sold every season, and thousands of persons saved form an untimely grave. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

—Mrs. Frank Griswold, from whom Drs. Tritch and Knapp removed a large tumor of the left breast, is doing very well.

—It is now about time for candidates to begin to sprout out for the spring elections. We'll take sugar in "ourn," Sam.

—Dr. Van Buskirk, the grave robber of Fort Wayne, was re-arrested last week. He was placed under $6,000 bonds.

—F. D. Ryan, Esq., has been presented by a kind friend, a most beautiful bird dog. Frank prizes the favor very highly.

—Miss Etta Kline gave a valentine party, last Friday evening, wherein a number of her youthful friends had a jolly good time.

—We hear that there is some talk of converting the Auburn House into a dwelling. It would make a handsome residence with a little expense.

—The court docket next week is a large one, containing four hundred cases. Judge Tousley is going to clean it out if it takes all summer.

—The little shavers have been breaking the windows in the packing house of Cool & Co. Look out for a hot time if the Judge catches you at it.

—With Tilton in this place, and Beecher in Goshen, Sedan should have Mrs. Tilton or bust. It goes kind o' tough to be left out in the cold.

—The Rev. gentlemen will not have the "soft snap" of half fare railroad tickets in the future, according to regulations recently adapted by Ry's.

—We hear of a "high toned" wedding soon on Seventh street. Weddings are nice occasions, especially about the time the gong calls for supper. Eh,

—We are informed by Mr. Jno. McClellan, the man who lost his arm recently, that he only received $22 from his friends at the time of his accident.

—A Mother on Seventh st. says her son, James Henry, caught his cough running and jumping on sleds. The Marshal should not allow such sleds on the main thoroughfares. Ain't it?

—A man by the name of John White, of Wabash, was foully murdered near Knightstown on Saturday last. The object was plunder, as his valise was found near by, broken open.

—A newspaper solicitor from this place tried to get a subscriber at Corunna by telling the fellow that he belonged to the same church he did. Give us a "let up" on that kind of talk, Doc.

—Henry F. Porter, of South Bend, formerly in the employ of the Studebakers, is missing, and it is supposed he has committed suicide by jumping into the river at that place.

—We cast a wishful eye upon a newly married couple parading our principal "boulevard" the other day, and you hear me, they looked "pusity," num, num.

—Our manipulators of the seductive lemonade are "well heeled" on the ice question, and you can call for one during the "ensuing season" with the assurance that the "stick" will be forthcoming.

—Dare we know what was the matter with an Auburn party coming into town the other day, but rather infer from observations they had been hunting.

—Harry Rush, we learn, will move with his family from Angola to this city soon. This is Harry's old stand-by and his many friends will welcome him back to the "old camp ground."

—Auburn has the boss harness shop as regards work and sales. Shilling has sold since the first of the month 12 doubles harness and 1 single. Farmers call where you get the best goods for the money.

—We neglected to state last week that Samuel Widney, living on the St. Joe River, died in his 80th year. Mr. Widney was one of our oldest settlers and was highly respected by all his acquaintances.

—Prof. C. R. Reed and his singing class of 60 singers, will give a concert at Sedan next Saturday evening, February 22rd. Some "noted" singers are expected to be present. All are invited.

—One of our prominent "blow-offs" in protracted meetings was throwing himself hugely in a loud and eloquent "send off," when by an extra jesture of his right arm he awoke a lady who was enjoying a second-rate snooze by the side of him.

—The social connected with the Presbyterian church, will be entertained by Mrs. J. Abright, next Wednesday evening, Feb 26th. By order of the secretary there will be no refreshments. Mite ten cents. All are invited.

MRS. ELSON, Sec'y.

Home Again.

Young Weyer, who was sent to Michigan City prison a year ago for taking goods from J. L. Davis' hardware store, has returned home. We hope this lesson just experienced by the boy, will cause him in the future to "put on the armor" and keep square on the path of honesty, sobriety and usefulness.

St. Joe Items.

—James Ferrell moved to Orange a few days ago.

—W. D. Johnson has moved on his farm where the bull frogs doze.

—Candidates for the spring offices are as thick as mosquitoes in harvest time.

—J. B. Moore goes back to Hicksville Ohio, the St. Joe bulldosers being to much for him.

—Rudolphy Sechler living near Orangeville, is reported very sick with Typhoid fever.

—Mrs. W. Tustison has been ill for some time, resulting from a derangement of her nervous system

—This week closes our school for the winter term, Mr Coder having conducted the school with good success. Miss Florence Scholes will commence the spring term immediately, and continue three months.

—We fear Mr. Case's prospects if nominated will be slim, as there will be no Swapping rates as there was two years ago for Mr. Shilling.

—The Spencerville hack has been abandoned, it not panning out very well. Abe thinks selling golden oil pays better.

—Mort Engle being satisfied that farming don't pay, is buying stock, his first purchase being a two weeks old calf, bought of J. Leighty, which he was seen carrying home on his back. We saw him a short time afterward with a new suit of clothes from top to bottom.

—Billy Tinssel can give the best solution of that Wilmington ghost, of any one we have heard yet. Billy knows how it is himself.

—The Green Back club of Coburn's corners, meet Friday next. The meeting will be addressed by several speakers, among them Rev. Harvy.

Why is a an infant like a diamond? Now, dear wife, answer and I will buy you a plated castor at Ward's. Wife with a sigh—Because it is a dear little thing. Now, dear husband, it is rather a damper to one's elation of feeling at a public ovation, to think that though the people rush and crowd to get a look at our dear husbands, they would be just as ready to rush and crowd to see him "if he was going to be hanged." Set of French China dinner ware for $65.00; 106 pieces Tea and Dinner $10. We warrant every bit of our solid silver ware and silver plated ware to be of the double and tripple plate, and all stamped with the named of Meriden Britanna Co., the best and largest plating company in the world. Tea set, $25 to 100, water set, $13 to 60; castors, $4 to 50. Card and Cake stands, pickle castors, knives, spoons, ladles, sugar shells, fruit knives, the best stock of plated at Ward's Cheap Crockery Store, No. 9 Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Charity All Over.

We hear of a little "snide" performed at a country residence east of town. We got the news like this: The neighbors congregated together and baked a lot of cakes, pies, bread, &c., and intended the same for a poor lady in the vicinity. The good things were all left at a certain farm house with the understanding that they were to be conveyed to the poor lady. The party left and up to this writing the P. L. has not received a crumb as large as Lazarus got from under the rich man's table, and the neighborhood knows that all swindling is not performed by patent right men. We give the story as we heard it, and will not vouch for its truthfulness.

Hands on Your Pocket Book.

A man giving his name as H. Davis and claiming to be a resident of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, said he was robbed of $9.00 in one of our saloons last Friday night. He was under the influence of liquor, and was assisted to a hotel by two of our young men who he claims got his money, Constable Shull went to the Junction and brought one of them to the city, but upon examination was released. Some persons doubt as to the man Davis having over four dollars, and being on a "high, low, Jack and the game" probably got away with it all before he went to bed. He did, however, put up for his lodging in advance so he was not entirely "stripped" as he claimed.

TALLY ONE.

In one of our grocery stores Monday night the proprietor was reading in a paper of an eastern firm who offered to sell tea very cheap, and on sending the order you never hear from them. The agent who "bites" must send $5 for a "patent valice" that they handle "exclusively" and after receiving this they send him a few samples of tea Just as he was winding up the article, a broad shouldered, healthy looking chap appeared with one of the original satchels and samples of tea. After making "laughing stock" of himself for an hour, the merchant re-read the item and the young man's anticipations were blasted. He has made up his mind to return to the farm again, and take up the shovel and the hoe.

Head Cut.

During a wrestling contest in one of our saloons last Saturday, Sam Weaver was thrown upon a beer keg head foremost, and received a bad cut in his cranium. Why it is that some people, while under the influence of liquor, are always "on" the knock-down or throw-down. is past our comprehension, but after several heads being cut open, so that two fingers of the hand can be laid in the gash, and legs and arms dislocated, so as to unable persons for weeks or months, to do any labor, and accumulate doctor bills, we should think the lesson of past experience would open the eyes of even the drunken men. If these practices are kept up it will only be a short time until a murder will be committed, and then the curtain will drop only to rise with a horrible scene that will be bound in solid metal by the convicts' heart as long as life will last.

Spring Elections.

The time is drawing nigh when we will be called upon to select our township, corporation and city officers for the ensuing year, and it is the duty of every good citizen to see that these offices are filled by men who know their duties, and who dare to discharge them fully and faithfully. One serious mistake that we are too apt to make is to look upon the selection of men to fill these minor offices as a matter of no importance. It is but very seldom that anything approximating a full vote is polled on these occasions. Although at our last election we did get out the greater part of them, and we elected a good corps of officers—all Democrats, and everyone we have heard speak of their proceedings, always do so in the best of terms. A little effort on the part of a few lively gentlemen will bring about a like result in the election now drawing nigh. If all would pattern after "South Germany," as it is called at the polls, we would have no trouble in securing a full turn out of the voters.

The Problem of Life

—LECTURE BY—

Theodore Tilton!

—ON—

Tuesday Evening Feb. 26, 1878.

On the above occasion the people of this corner of Indiana will have the rare opportunity of hearing Mr. Tilton in his lecture on the "Problem of Life." The lecture will take place at the M. E. church, Auburn. Tickets have been placed for sale in the neighboring towns with the following parties:

Waterloo,....F. Van Auken,
Angola,......Dr. E. Leas,
Butler........G. B. Hoopingarner,
Spencerville, G. A. Bishop,
Garrett......Jno. Robbins.

Such arrangements will be made with the railroads as to accommodate all from abroad. Persons desiring to have seats assured them will need to engage tickets, or send in their names before hand.

M. SEILER, } Auburn.
A. ROBBINS, }

Read what our most prominent papers have to say about these lectures:

[From the Springfield Republican.]

Mr. Tilton's address was really a high moral lesson throughout. Eloquence, analysis, analogy, imagery, description, deduction—all were there, and their effect was unmistakable. As he warmed with his subject, Mr. Tilton rose to that fervid, splendid oratory that seems as essentially his own as the air itself. It reminded his hearers of old of the days when his vioce was a clarion call and his gray hairs now seemed the emphasis of time on the ardent nature that spoke then.

[From the N. H. Daily Union]

Theodore Tilton's lecture last evening was a grand, a noble one, and we think that every person who heard him, and whose noblest aspirations were not quickened, and who did not for the time loathe within himself all motives not of the purest and holiest, must have failed through some fault of his own. We venture the assertion that more forcible words, heavy with the pure gold of heaven itself, have dropped from his lips in the two lectures he has delivered in this city, than will be heard here for a year to come. There is a masterly eloquence, an apparent earnestness in his speech, which touches the heart.

[From the New York Sun.]

Theodore Tilton was greeted with as large an assembly in Brooklyn last evening as the spacious Academy could hold, and the wealth, the character, and the respectability of Brooklyn were notably represented. The Academy walls rang with applause and cheers as Tilton passed on the platform. After round upon round as applause, he arose slowly and said: "In the presence of so magnificent an assemblage, and in the face of a demonstration so unexpected, at least to me, I don't know what I can say to you to show my gratitude. I have no words to speak of that which cannot be spoken of in words. All I can say is, thanks, thanks, many thanks.' The applause which followed was a greater outburst than that which preceeded. The lecture on "The Problem of Life" was a stream of pure language, brightened by wit and humor, strong with philosophy, useful with ripe suggestions, and powerful with impassioned oratory.

Thirty-Five Years of Usefulness.

Last Saturday afternoon the family of our old and respected citizens, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Rush, met under the paternal roof, and celebrated the 35th aniversary of their married life. The family was all present but one, and an enjoyable time was participated in. Each of the children presented their parents with a useful present, and after passing away the time with them over Sabbath, they all departed to their several homes, thinking to themselves that there is no place like home, sweet, sweet home.

Then a maiden fresh and gush,
At Hyman's course she took a brush,
With cheeks aglow with youthful blush,
But now she goes it with a Rush.

Can't Do It.

Nearly every day we have men offer us $1.50 for the COURIER a year, claiming they can get city papers for that amount. These city sheets do not, however, fill the bill. They want the county news and every family in old DeKalb should have a county paper. News from your own county does more good than the news of twenty cities. After you read them you have some satisfaction, being acquainted with the parties, you can talk about it with your neighbor in a manner that interests you both. After counting up the cost of production and deducting it from the income, we find that two dollars would leave us on each subscriber no more than a reasonable margin, and perhaps in the course of a hundred years of constant labor would leave us in very good shape to pay our funeral expenses.

A Case of Conscience.

Some six years ago a young man was shaved in one of our barber shops, and before going out picked up a neat little hat brush and slipped it into his pocket. After arriving at home he carefully laid it in the bottom of his trunk, but never used it. The act seemed to trouble his mind. He was married a few years ago, and now has a couple of prattling children. The other day he came to the same shop, and after getting shaved, drew out the identical brush he had carried off years ago, and returned it to the owner, at the same time asking his forgiveness, and begging of him to keep his name a secret. It was a sincere case of repentance, as he confessed that he could never be happy until he restored the property and obtained the forgiveness of the man he had wronged. He had ought to have taken a lesson in Washington; that would cure him of such "squeamishness."—Goshen Democrat.

—Joe. Bender, known among the boys here, is in jail at Fort Wayne. His sentence is 13 days. Joe. was probably drunk.

—The Syracuse Gazette came to us last week partly torn and badly printed. Send us a good one. Its small enough without tearing any of it off.

—A number of young folks got together Monday evening and organized a literary society. This will be nice amusement.

—The St. Joe Items came too late again last week for publication. We must have them by Tuesday evening or they are laid upon the shelf for the next week.

—Who saw the eclipse of the moon last Sabbath morning. We were up and had the fire red hot when the eclipse first made its appearance, of course, but didn't take the trouble to gaze upon it. It commenced at 4 o'clock p. m.

—If our merchants wish to have a large spring trade they should begin to advertise. People who contemplate buying large bills for spring and summer use look for an invitation through their county paper.

—We hear of no arrangement for a dance at the hall on the 22nd. Some one could have made a "stake" by taking hold of the matter. This is the first 22nd of February that has passed for a long time that there was not a dance in town.

—Farmers, don't allow your wagons to stand on the street crossings. By so doing you not only compel pedestrians to wade through the mud to pass, but at the same time cause them silently to break the second commandment. It only takes a moment to say "Get up, Dol."

—Kendallvill is a tough place, and to judge from the following, from the "News," the people there don't take much stock in Sunday-schools: The treasurer of the M. E. Sunday school, of this place, received a counterfeit 50 cent piece recently, and at another time two beer checks. John's bank had not suspended specie payment, therefore the treasury lost nothing on the checks.

—This is the way it is. We flourish awhile. Men take us by the hand and are anxious about the health of our bodies and laugh at our jokes, and we really think, like the fly on the wheel, that we have something to do with the turning of it. The sun does not stop for our funeral, everything goes on as usual, we are not missed in the street, men laugh at new jokes, and in three days the great waves sweep over our path, and wash out the last vistage of earthly foot prints. Such is life.

ANOTHER ENTERPRIZE.

A First-Class Carriage House to be Carried on in Auburn.

We are glad to state to the people of DeKalb county, that our enterprising, energetic and good-natured fellow townsman, Jas. Anderson, Esq., will engage extensively in the manufacture of wheeled vehicles the coming summer. Mr. Anderson is a man who has had large experience in this line of trade and will manufacture all his buggies, carriages, wagons, phaetons, etc. of the very best material. We would advise one and all to deal with him and know that they will get good substantial work. Everything is warranted to be genuine and sold at living prices. Shop on Seventh street, near Eagle Mills.

—Hank Beecher has a special car for him and his servants to ride in.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1887.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT, who was recently nominated by the President for Collector of the Port of New York and rejected by the Senate, is dead. He was a very prominent citizen, and widely known and beloved for his philanthropies....A Philadelphia dispatch reports the arrest of Wright & Sons, the largest shipping firm in that city, and the seizure of their books, upon a charge of defrauding the Government to the extent of $200,000.

D. R. MANGAM, late President of the National Trust Company, of New York, has been indicted for perjury in swearing to false statements of the company's financial condition.... Hon. Gideon Welles, ex-Secretary of the Navy under Lincoln, died at his home in Hartford, Ct., on the 11th inst....Wm. Welsh, the well-known philanthropist, Indian Commissioner, and brother of the Hon. John Welsh, United States Minister to England, died suddenly at Philadelphia, last week, of heart disease, in the 71st year of his age.

THE cambric mill of the H. N. Slater Manufacturing Company, at Webster, Mass., is burned. Loss estimated at $100,000.

THE old family mansion of Daniel Webster, at Marshfield, Mass., has been destroyed by fire.

THE WEST.

THAT so-called Mauch Chunk miracle cure turns out, as was suspected, to be a fraud. Father Heinan, the priest who was reputed to have raised the girl Amelia Grether from the dead, admits that he was deluded and imposed upon. Verily this is an age of humbugs.

THE city of Chicago has been brought to a serious financial crisis by a decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois. That decision is to the effect that the city cannot borrow money repayable out of the general tax fund. Neither can it borrow money to pay the principal or interest of money which has heretofore been borrowed in that manner. Some $500,000 borrowed in this illegal manner is now outstanding. How it is to be paid is what is puzzling the financiers of the Garden City, as well as those who loaned the money, and, if the city cannot pay the interest on what it has already borrowed, it can hardly expect to negotiate any more loans.

THE house of V. Leftridge (colored) near Ironton, O., caught fire and was burned to the ground the other day. Three children, who were alone in the house, were consumed in the flames.

THE SOUTH.

AUGUSTA, GA., had a very remarkable experience the other night. First came a shower of hail, then rain, then thunder and lightning, then the rumbling of an earthquake, and finally, after midnight, a terrible cyclone, which prostrated buildings and tore up things generally.

IT is stated from New Orleans that the two colored jurors in the Anderson trial now claim that their verdict of "Guilty, but recommended to the mercy of the court," was given under an impression that this was tantamount to an acquittal, and they were so informed by the other jurors. From Washington it is reported that the President is very indignant at the prosecution of the Returning Board members. It is generally believed at the capital that Gov. Nicholls will pardon Anderson. The latter has received a dispatch, signed by John Sherman, Stanley Matthews, Gen. Garfield and Eugene Hale, earnestly protesting his innocence of any fraud, and denouncing his trial and conviction as an exhibition of bitter sectional partisanship. J. Madison Wells has been released on $10,000 bond.

THE HON. Charles M. Conrad, ex-Member of Congress, ex-United States Senator, and Secretary of War under President Fillmore, died at his home in New Orleans, La., last week, aged 73.

IT is charged that Judge Whittaker, of New Orleans, before whom Returning-Board Anderson was tried, is a defaulter to the Government to the extent of $600,000. The story goes that in 1866 he was appointed Assistant United States Treasurer at New Orleans by President Johnson, and that a year afterward he was found to be short in his accounts the amount named, which, it is claimed, he lost in gold speculations. He was tried and acquitted by a jury without leaving their seats.

A HORRIBLE murder was recently perpetrated near Goldsboro, N. C. James Wormley and his young wife were bound together by cords and beaten to death with clubs by two negroes. The wretches are under arrest.

WASHINGTON.

TIPPLING Congressmen are seriously annoyed by the strict manner in which the rule prohibiting the sale of liquor in the Capitol is enforced by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House.

CONGRESS has been in session over four months and has passed only six bills and four resolutions, although over 4,000 bills have been introduced. There have been fifty-nine bills intended to improve the financial condition of the country, and not one has passed....A bill for the retirement of the national-bank circulation has been prepared by the silver wing of the House Committee on Banking and Currency. Treasury notes, receivable for all public dues and fundable in 4-per-cent. bonds, are to take the place of bank paper.

BEN BUTLER has ready a resolution to declare that the House has lost confidence in the administration of the Treasury Department. This resolution is to be presented upon the passage in the House of the amended Bland bill, after its return from the Senate.

THE Grand Jury of the District of Columbia has indicted A. B. Moore, ex-Supervising Special Agent of the Treasury Department, for slandering Gen. Boynton, correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette.

PRESIDENT HAYES has positively refused to remove Gen. Anderson from the office of United States Collector at the port of New Orleans.

GENERAL.

FAILURES: Joel Hayden & Co., brassware manufacturers, Haydenville, Mass., liabilities $400,000, nominal assets $800,000; the Wyandotte Rolling Mill Company, Detroit, Mich., liabilities $425,000, nominal assets about $1,000,000; Hallett Brothers, proprietors of dollar stores in Cleveland, Detroit and other cities, liabilities heavy; J. & J. Woodley, leather, Quebec, Canada, liabilities $400,000; W. C. Sapp, dry goods, Mount Vernon, Ohio, liabilities heavy; D. H. Brigham & Co., clothing, Springfield, Mass., liabilities $250,000; Peter Herdic, lumber, Williamsport, Pa., liabilities $1,000,000; the Hinckley Locomotive Works, Boston, Mass., liabilities $300,000; Joseph Gilmore, coal, Pittsburgh, Pa., liabilities $85,000; Robert Henderson & Co., coke, Pittsburgh, Pa., liabilities over $100,000; J. C. Ferguson & Co., pork-packers, Indianapolis, Ind., liabilities $500,000; J. W. & E. Cheney, millinery, Detroit, Mich., liabilities $42,000; Sweet, Cool & Co., boots and shoes, Buffalo, N. Y., liabilities $150,000; Daniel Robertson, tea importer, Montreal, Canada, liabilities, $210,000; the Mercantile Savings Bank, Boston, Mass.; John T. Henry, Curran & Co., heavy druggists, New York city, liabilities not stated; L. Woods & Co., importers of woolen goods, Montreal, Canada, liabilities $300,000, assets $280,000; William Sturges, capitalist and speculator, Chicago, liabilities $1,165,000, assets $750,000; Leblanc & Robitaille, groceries, Montreal, Canada, liabilities $100,000, assets $80,000; William A. Butters & Co., auctioneers, Chicago, liabilities about $15,000, assets nil.

A COUNTERFEIT trade dollar has made its appearance. On comparison with the genuine coin, it will be found to be a pinkish white in color. The milling is almost perfect, but there are slight traces on the edge of its having been run in a mold; it is also light, and will not rebound much when sounded.

A GREAT congress of the Methodists of the world will take place in New York next month, with a view to restore the church to its primitive simplicity and unworldliness. The subjects of fashionable dressing, costly church-building, street preaching, dancing, etc., will be fully discussed and acted upon.

WELL-EXECUTED $50 counterfeits on the Third National Bank of Buffalo, N. Y., have made their appearance....The people in the iron districts of Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio vigorously oppose the new Tariff bill....The investigation ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury into the circumstances of the wreck of the steamer Metropolis proves what was at first suspected, that the vessel was rotten and totally unseaworthy.

A SHOCKING casualty is reported from Wickham, Queen's county, Canada. A whole family, consisting of Daniel Reardon, his wife and four children, were burned up in their house. ....The death is announced of John F. Tracy, for many years President of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad.

POLITICAL.

THE following is the dispatch recently sent to Anderson, at New Orleans, by Secretary Sherman and others of the so-called "visiting statesmen:"

> Gen. Thomas C. Anderson, New Orleans:
>
> The undersigned feel it due to you, under present circumstances, to assure you of our unhesitating belief that in the matter wherein you stand charged you are altogether guiltless of any offenses against the law; that you are falsely accused and maliciously persecuted; that the proceeding against you, though in the form of law, is without the substance of justice; that we hereby tender our earnest sympathies, and express our hope that the sense of justice and the love of peace of the people of Louisiana will protect you, and not permit the best interests of the whole country to be disturbed by a revival of sectional animosity.
>
> In any event, we are confident that the American people will redress any injustice of which you may be made the victim.
>
> JOHN SHERMAN,
> STANLEY MATTHEWS,
> J. A. GARFIELD,
> EUGENE HALE,
> HARRY WHITE.

THE New York Sun's Washington correspondent is the author of a story to the effect that the day Thomas C. Anderson was convicted in New Orleans Senator Kellogg had to pay a note of $20,000, indorsed by ex-Congressman Charles B. Farwell, of Chicago, for money borrowed from the Union National Bank, of that city, to pay the expenses of the Republicans who went to Louisiana to see a fair count. Mr. Farwell has been interviewed, and he says there is no truth in the story, and that the gentlemen who went down from Illinois to witness the count paid their own expenses. Senator Kellogg is also reported to have denied the Sun correspondent's story. The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, referring to this matter, says: "Kellogg has told the story to at least twenty persons whose names can be given, and on one occasion made the statement in a Senate cloak-room in the presence of at least half a dozen witnesses."

PRESIDENT HAYES has written a letter to the Attorney General of the United States in relation to the Returning Board prosecutions in New Orleans. The President is of the opinion that the prosecution against Anderson is solely political; that it is not countenanced by the best men of Louisiana, and, therefore, is contrary to their calm judgment; that the proceedings were in the interest of those who strive to antagonize the two parties in that State, rather than to harmonize them; that, so far from receiving the approbation of the country, the act will be condemned by right-thinking and patriotic men everywhere, when they become acquainted with the circumstances attending the prosecution. As grave constitutional questions may be involved, in which the General Government may perhaps have a right to interfere, the President submits the subject to the Attorney General for his consideration.

AT the meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Democratic Committee, held in Washington last week, it was unanimously resolved to postpone the meeting of the committee, to be held in the city of Washington, from the 22d of February to the 22d of May.

THE President says that he has not abandoned his purpose of sending in a civil-service message, but that he has concluded to postpone this for the present. The Silver bill, he thinks, does and will for a considerable time occupy the attention of Congress, so that civil-service questions will not receive the prompt attention of Congress on this subject....The President has nominated Charles McCandless (Pa.), Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, New Mexico; John S. Witcher (W. Va.), United States Marshal for Idaho; William J. Pollock (Ill.), Superintendent of Indian Affairs for Dakota; Adolph Dombrowsky, Receiver of Public Moneys at Shasta, Cal.

THE TURKO-RUSSIAN WAR.

ACCORDING to the summary of the terms of armistice communicated to the British House of Commons, the line of demarcation places in Russian hands almost all of Bulgaria and Roumelia up to the lines of Constantinople and Gallipoli. Three days' notice is to be given before the resumption of hostilities. Another article of the armistice stipulates that the Turks are to remove their arms, etc., on evacuating places within the neutral zone which will divide the two armies....The House of Commons voted the extra grant of £6,000,000 by 328 to 124.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

ENGLAND has ordered a portion of her fleet to Constantinople, under the pretense of a desire to protect life and property....The hero of Plevna is to be court-martialed soon on the charge of horrible inhumanity and cruelties in violation of the rules of warfare....A bill which prohibits the proclamation of martial law without the concurrence of the Legislature has passed by the French Chamber of Deputies. ....It is announced from St. Petersburg that Russia and Turkey will positively form a close alliance, offensive and defensive. ....Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, dined with the Prince of Wales, in London, on the 7th inst., and in the evening lectured before the Royal Geographical Society in St. James' Hall. The immense assemblage included the principal nobility and the most distinguished scientists and literati in London. When the journalist-explorer appeared upon the platform, his breast blazing with decorations, he was received with immense cheering, the whole assembly rising to greet him. Stanley gave a graphic description of his wonderful journey across, and for two hours held the wrapt attention of one of the most cultivated audiences ever gathered in England. The Prince of Wales and Sir Samuel Baker also delivered addresses highly complimenting Stanley's great achievements....The immediate cause of the death of the Pope was the closing of the wound in the leg, which made the humors mount into the lungs and brain. His last words were: "Death wins this time. Guard the church I loved so well and sacredly."

CABLE dispatches of the 11th inst. report that Russia had not only rejected Vienna as the site of the conference, but had announced that certain points in the peace preliminaries were not to be referred to the conference at all; that Turkey's alliance with Russia was regarded as a fixed fact; that Austria had given orders to prepare her iron-clads for sea; that England was sending troops and war munitions to Malta, and that neither Russia nor Turkey objected to the British fleet going to Constantinople; that the Turks had evacuated Widin, Rustchuk, Silistria and Erzeroum, and that Turkey would be denied a voice in the deliberations of the conference of the powers....It has been decided to have a grand international poetic contest at the coming Exhibition, each nation appointing a jury and each jury declaring a certain number of laureates. The French jury, we are informed, has already been appointed, with Victor Hugo as Chairman.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 12th says Turkey has refused permission to the British fleet to come to Constantinople, the whole fleet still remaining in Besika bay pending negotiations. A St. Petersburg telegram of the same date announces that the order had been issued for the occupation of the Turkish capital by Russian troops....A London dispatch of the 12th says there is extraordinary activity in all the British dockyards, and the workmen had been ordered to put in three hours' over-time daily. Every available means were being employed in fitting out war vessels.

AFTER the funeral service in Rome for King Victor Emmanuel, an Orsini bomb was thrown among the returning crowd. Five persons were slightly wounded. The police with difficulty prevented the lynching of the person who threw the bomb.

CABLE dispatches of the 13th state that there was great excitement in England over the Sultan's refusal to pass the British fleet to Constantinople, the newspapers being particularly furious in their demands for its passage; that the Channel fleet has been ordered to the Mediterranean, which was regarded as a warlike measure; that Russia had peremptorily declined to answer England's question as regards the exact military status at and around Constantinople, replying in effect that this is a matter that concerns no one except Russia and Turkey; and that Russia had notified Austria that she would submit to the conference the questions of the reorganization of Bulgaria and the reannexation of Bessarabia....The Khedive of Egypt has issued an official decree, suppressing the slave trade in his dominions....A number of failures have occurred among the Belfast (Ireland) grain dealers. The total liabilities amount to over $1,000,000.

A LONDON dispatch of the 14th says: "The British fleet has left Besika bay for Constantinople without obtaining the Porte's permission. The Sultan has declared that, on the entry of the Russians, he will proceed at once to Broussa, in Asia Minor, and, should he do so, there is little likelihood of his future return."

THE Pope is said to have left a fortune of 120,000,000 lire, nearly $24,000,000....Smallpox is raging in Constantinople.

IN the British Parliament, on the 15th inst., it was announced by the Ministers that the English fleet had arrived at Constantinople, and that dispatches from Gortschakoff had informed the British Government of the Russian occupation of Constantinople, "merely as a pacific measure." The English Ministers protested against this occupation as unnecessary, but they had no means wherewith to resist it, and the Turks appear to been submitted without murmur or protest....The official organ of the Austrian Government declares that it is time for the powers to abandon their neutrality; that the Russian occupation of Bulgaria and the exaggerated extension it is proposed to give that province, will never be tolerated by Austria. These declarations are backed by great apparent activity in military affairs....An Athens dispatch says the news from Thessaly is grave. There has been fighting near the frontier. The Greek corps of observation is almost sure to be drawn into the struggle.... It is reported from Havana that the Cuban insurgents, through their leaders, are suing for peace, and that an early termination of the war may be looked upon as one of the certainties.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, Feb. 8.—SENATE.—Mr. Conkling presented a petition of the ministers and congregations of colored churches in various States and Territories, asking the passage of a law to protect them against outrages on account of race, color, religious and political opinions....Mr. Ferry presented a petition of citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the Government of the United States entering into commercial and so-called reciprocity treaties with other Governments.... Mr. Hoar submitted a resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to consider and report whether the work on public buildings in Washington, which is now suspended, may be resumed forthwith, so as to give present employment to workingmen whose families are suffering from destitution. Agreed to....Mr. Saunders called up his supplemental joint resolution providing for the appointment of eighteen additional Commissioners to the Paris Exposition. It was discussed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.... Consideration was resumed of the Silver bill, and Mr. Hill, of Georgia, took the floor and spoke in opposition to the measure. He was followed by Mr. Withers, of Virginia, in advocacy of the bill, after which the Senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.—Bills of a purely private nature only were considered in the House, consequently the proceedings were dull and uninteresting.

SATURDAY, Feb. 9.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The House met for general debate only. The first speech was by Mr. Joyce, in advocacy of a six-year Presidential term, and of civil-service reform. He was followed by Mr. Chittenden, who spoke against the proposed silver legislation. Mr. Chittenden, in the course of his speech, referred to the silver meeting in Chicago last December. The Shylocks mentioned in the Chicago papers' report of the meeting were active bankers and business men at home and abroad, who, through the Chamber of Commerce of New York, gave Chicago outright a round million of dollars in the hour of her desolation—the very same men who subsequently loaned Chicago scores and scores of other millions, which has been hopelessly squandered and lost in Quixotic ventures. Mr. Harrison, replying said that, while the people of Chicago acknowledged the generosity of the world when that city was in ashes, yet they did not feel that the rich men of New York who helped them in their hour of need should now keep them from rising from their ashes. Mr. Kenna advocated the remonetization of silver, the repeal of the Resumption act, the abolishing of the national-banking system, and the granting of full legal-tender qualities to greenbacks. Mr. Ellsworth spoke in opposition to the attempt to array labor against capital for the purpose of gaining political power, and advocated a general amnesty bill. Mr. Hayes replied to the arguments against the remonetization of silver, and defended that proposition. Mr. Haskell also spoke in favor of silver remonetization and Mr. Bell advocated a bill to pension soldiers of the Mexican war.

MONDAY, Feb. 11.—SENATE.—A number of petitions, from all parts of the country, in favor of a sixteenth amendment to the constitution, prohibiting States from disfranchising persons on account of sex, were presented and referred....Mr. Conkling presented a memorial of the New York Chamber of Commerce against the remonetization of silver....Mr. Matthews presented a petition of Ohio bankers in favor of the repeal of the tax on bank deposits; also, a petition of 570 business men of Cincinnati in favor of the passage of the Bland Silver bill. A large number of other petitions of the same character from citizens of various counties in New York State were presented by Messrs. Kernan and Voorhees....Bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Voorhees, to authorize the Secretary of War to issue ordnance stores and equipage for the use of students in colleges and other institutions of learning where military instruction is given; by Mr. Ferry, to provide for a water route to facilitate transportation between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie....Messrs. Davis, of West Virginia, Saulsbury, of Delaware, and Coke, of Texas, addressed the Senate in support of the Bland Silver bill. Mr. Coke also advocated at some length the repeal of the Specie-Resumption act, and argued that the Government was in no condition now to resume specie payment. It was utterly impracticable on any basis, and especially on gold basis alone.

HOUSE.—Mr. Leonard presented the concurrent resolution of the Louisiana Assembly, expressing its satisfaction with the policy of President Hayes. ....The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Mackey, prohibiting the Secretary of the Treasury from purchasing any bonds for the reduction of the principal of the national debt until strict compliance with the provisions of the law shall require it; by Mr. Joyce, declaring forfeited all grants of public lands to railroads or other corporations when conditions of grants have been violated, and appropriating said lands to the use of actual settlers; by Mr. Jones, of Ohio, making custom duties to the amount of one-quarter part thereof payable in legal-tender notes; by Mr. Gause, to distribute to the several States the proceeds of captured and abandoned property remaining in the treasury; by Mr. Mills, a resolution making inquiry into the action of the treasury officials in regard to seized cotton; by Mr. Stevens, for the relief of Gen. Count C. Pulaski (it provides that there be paid to his heir, legal representative and descendant the sum of $100,000); by Mr. Phillips, to provide for the survey of and estimates for a ship canal with stone sides and bottom from deep tide-water near the mouth of the Mississippi river to St. Louis, Mo., with branches to Pittsburgh, Chicago, St. Paul and Omaha.... The House then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Blackburn in the chair) upon the Military Academy Appropriation bill, the pending amendment being to strike out the sections which allow additional pay to First Lieutenants acting as instructors at the institution. After debate, the amendment was defeated....There was a spirited debate on the proposition to reduce the pay of cadets from $540 to $500, and it was finally rejected.

TUESDAY, Feb. 12.—SENATE.—Mr. Christiancy, in presenting petitions from citizens of Michigan favoring a sixteenth constitutional amendment conferring the right of suffrage upon women, said that he hoped the Committee on Privileges and Elections would take up the subject and report upon it. When he should become satisfied that a majority of the women of the country were in favor of female suffrage he would vote for it, but until then he would not. He did not think these petitions should be presented to Congress. The Legislatures of States were the proper bodies to present them to....Mr. Morrill, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably on the House joint resolution declaring that the reduction of the tax on distilled spirits is inexpedient. He also reported a substitute for the Senate bill to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcohol liquor traffic....Mr. Burnside, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, with amendments, the Senate bill to remove all restrictions now existing in regard to the enlistment of colored citizens in any arm of the United States army. Messrs. Maxey and Cockrell, of the committee, announced that they did not agree with the majority of the committee in reporting this bill.... Mr. Thurman presented petitions of citizens of Ohio in favor of the remonetization of silver and the repeal of the Resumption law....A few bills of minor importance were introduced, and a bill was passed making the 22d of February a legal holiday in the District of Columbia, after which consideration was resumed of the Silver bill. Speeches were made by Mr. McDonald, of Indiana, and Mr. McPherson, of New Jersey—the former in favor of and the latter in opposition to the measure.

HOUSE.—The House went through the ceremony of formally receiving Carpenter's painting of President Lincoln signing the emancipation proclamation, after which the Military bill was discussed. The most notable feature of the presentation ceremonies was an eloquent eulogium upon Mr. Lincoln by Alexander H. Stephens, ex-Vice President of the Confederacy, in which he confessed that slavery was a weakness, and avowed his constant, conscientious belief in the Union cause. He spoke of Mr. Lincoln as his friend, and eulogized his personal and political virtues with great warmth and energy.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 13.—SENATE.—The Senate renewed the discussion of the Bland Silver bill. Speeches were made by Messrs. Merrimon and Saunders in favor of the bill, and by Mr. Sargent in opposition.

HOUSE.—The House woke up from the usual dull routine that has lately characterized its proceedings, and indulged in one of those bitter personal controversies that were so common in years gone by. Hewitt, of New York, and Aiken, of South Carolina, were the central figures in the affair. The former arose to a personal explanation, and defended himself against the charge of slandering the South, made by Mr. House, of Tennessee, on Monday. If there was anything in the language which he had used which could be construed into any slandering of the Representatives of the Southern States, he would take it back, but he insisted that his motives were to defend the representatives of the South from the slander which had been uttered against their good name by the gentleman from South Carolina (Aiken), when he declared that West Point was an incubus on the country. House replied to Hewitt. He said he was a man of honor, and always proud to apologize when he had been guilty of a mistake. He was sorry for what he had said, for he had supposed that Hewitt had reflected upon the South. Aiken then took the floor and accused Hewitt of garbling his speech. He (Aiken) was not in favor of selling out West Point. He pointed to its long-time illustrious graduates, beginning with Jeff Davis, Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, and other noted Generals, and then passed to the Union side. He had fought them and found them foemen worthy of his steel, but he had never met Hewitt there. Then, in his most excited manner, he said, "West Point never produced an Esau or a Benedict Arnold—mark my words—never produced a man who had the Presidency in his grasp, and," shrieking in a whirlwind of passion, "sold it, sold it; do you hear?" Hewitt, trembling with agitation, retorted: "The gentleman insinuates that somebody sold out the Presidency. No Northern man sold out the Presidency—the proposition to sell the Presidency was made to me, and I contemptuously refused it." [Excitement and shouts of "Name," "Name."] Mr. Ellsworth—I want to know who it was that proposed to the gentleman to sell out the Presidency. Mr. Hewitt—If the House desires to have that portion of unwritten history told I will tell it. (Cries of "Let us have it all," and great excitement.) Mr. Hewitt, after order had been somewhat restored, proceeded to recount the facts connected with a proposition made to him by Col. Pickett (as coming from J. H. Maddox, Special Agent of the Treasury Department) to pay J. Madison Wells, Chairman of the Returning Board of Louisiana, for giving the count of that State to Mr. Tilden, all of which was testified to by Mr. Hewitt before the committee of the House at the last session. "And now," said he, "in conclusion, I ask the gentleman from South Carolina (Aiken) to tell me by what right he turns on me and accuses me of selling the Presidency?" Aiken renewed his thrusts at Hewitt, charging that he had boasted that he would rather sell the Presidency than spill one drop of blood in defense of the Democratic party. Hewitt denied that he had ever said this, and charged South Carolina with being false and unchivalrous. Above the din, in a clear, loud, piercing voice, Patterson, of New York, the oldest man in the House, nearly 80, said, "How pleasant it is to see brothers dwell in unity." Luttrell broke in to intimate to Hewitt and Aiken that it was but eight miles to Bladensburg, the noted dueling-ground, and the House might proceed to its business. Hewitt, maddened by Aiken's second charge, proceeded to explain why the filibusters did not succeed. He stated that he had seen Charles Foster, and told him that there would be trouble unless the South could be satisfied that Hayes was honest in his policy of local self-government; that soon after Foster made the speech in which he declared that the flag should thenceforth wave over States, not over provinces, and that from that hour he (Hewitt) had learned that the South was satisfied. Stating this, Hewitt strongly intimated the belief that the Southern Democrats had made a bargain with the friends of Hayes that the troops should be withdrawn. Hewitt had ended his speech only by giving a challenge to the Louisiana Conservatives and to the Republican attendants at the Wormley conference. The attempt was made to limit this discussion, but the Republicans, led by Ben Butler, shouted, "This is the best thing that could happen," and the hot talk of Finley, of Ohio, the author of the only resolution to investigate the Presidential count that has been presented, characterized Wells as "a hoary-headed old rascal," and arraigned Secretary Sherman and the visiting statesmen for their telegram of condolence to Anderson, "a convicted felon." This, in turn, brought Garfield, Hale, and Ellis to their feet. Each in turn told the story of the Wormley conference. Foster indignantly denied that there was a bargain, and vehemently asserted that he had neither given nor received any promises from anybody anywhere. Garfield defended the thirty or forty anti-filibusters among the Southern men, and said that if any mortal man anywhere charged these Southern gentlemen with bargains that man lied. He defended in a similar way the Northern Republicans, and declared that the troops were withdrawn as a matter of constitutional duty, and not of policy; but he did not forget to rebuke the people of Louisiana for the manner in which they are treating the Returning Board. He charged that the trial was a malicious persecution. E. John Ellis, for the South, denied that there was a bargain, and charged that whoever said that Louisiana betrayed the rights of Tilden "lies in his heart and in his own false throat." These words were intended for Mr. Hewitt, but were subsequently withdrawn by Mr. Ellis upon the plea that he misunderstood Mr. Hewitt. The story of the Wormley conference, as it was so often told, was repeated by Mr. Ellis, and it agreed in every particular with the accounts of Messrs. Foster, John Young Brown and others.... This ended the most exciting day of the session, and the first significant allusions to the subject of the Presidential count.

THURSDAY, Feb. 14.—SENATE.—The House resolution declaring it inexpedient to reduce the present tax on whisky was concurred in—yeas, 40; nays, 9....Senator Jones, of Nevada, made a two hours speech in support of the Silver bill, most of his speech being devoted to an argument showing that silver has not depreciated in value since its demonetization, and against the assertions that the dollar proposed by the bill is dishonoring the medium of payment and a depreciated coin. Mr. Wadleigh spoke against the bill, and in the course of his remarks said there had been statements of distress and suffering, but to his mind all this cry of weeping and wailing was to divert the attention of the people while they were being robbed for the benefit of the bloated German empire and Nevada silver kings.

HOUSE.—A communication was received from the Secretary of the Treasury notifying Congress that compared with the last fiscal year, and according to the present rate of increase there would be a deficit the present fiscal year of $4,909,219. The Secretary recommended increased taxation or reduced expenditures. After considerable wrangling the communication was referred to the Ways and Means Committee....The West Point Military Academy bill was passed....Mr. Gibson, of Louisiana, rising to a question of privilege, said he repudiated the intimation or suspicion of any representative of Louisiana having been engaged in any bargain in regard to the Presidency which reflected on the honor of that State. He defended the Returning Board prosecutions, and said the proceedings were in accordance with the laws of Louisiana. Mr. Hale—Does the gentleman sustain the prosecutions that have been and are now going on against the Returning Board? Mr. Gibson—If the men have been guilty of any violation of the laws of that State, the authorities are perfectly right in prosecuting them. Mr. Hale—Then the gentleman does not discourage it. Mr. Gibson—Does the gentleman mean to say he thinks it is not right to prosecute them? Mr. Hale—Does the gentleman ask what I think? I think the whole proceeding is the greatest outrage which has ever occurred in American history, because I believe it to be political persecution under the guise of the process of law. Mr. Gibson—I do not yield to the gentleman to denounce the people of the State of Louisiana. Since I have been on this floor, the gentleman from Maine has omitted no occasion to denounce the people of Louisiana. I have treated his former denunciations as I treat this, with the contempt which they merit.

The Tremendous Significance of a Billion.

(Henry Bessemer, in the London Times.)

It would be curious to know how many of your readers have brought fully to their inner consciousness the real significance of that little word "billion," which we have seen of late so glibly used in your columns. There are, indeed, few intellects that can fairly grasp it and digest it as a whole, and there are doubtless many thousands who cannot appreciate its true work, even when reduced to fragments for more easy assimilation. Its arithmetical symbol is simple and without much pretension; there are no large figures—just a modest 1 followed by a dozen ciphers, and that is all.

Let us briefly take a glance at it as a measure of time, distance and weight. As a measure of time, I would take one second as the unit, and carry myself in thought through the lapse of ages back to the first day of the year 1 of our era, remembering that in all those years we have 365 days, and in every day just 86,400 seconds of time. Hence, in returning in thought back again to this year of grace 1878, one might have supposed that a billion of seconds had long since elapsed; but this is not so. We have not even passed one-sixteenth of that number in all these long, eventful years, for it takes just 31,687 years, 17 days, 22 hours, 45 minutes, and 5 seconds to constitute a billion of seconds of time.

It is no easy matter to bring under the cognizance of the human eye a billion objects of any kind. Let us try in imagination to arrange this number for inspection, and for this purpose I would select a sovereign as a familiar object. Let us put one on the ground and pile upon it as many as will reach twenty feet in height; then let us place numbers of similar columns in close contact, forming a straight line, and making a sort of wall twenty feet high, showing only the thin edges of the coin. Imagine two such walls running parallel to each other and forming as it were a long street. We must then keep on extending these walls for miles—nay, hundreds of miles—and still we shall be far short of the required number. And it is not until we have extended our imaginary street to a distance of 2,386¼ miles that we shall have presented for inspection our one billion of coins.

Or, in lieu of this arrangement, we may place them flat upon the ground, forming one continuous line like a golden chain, with every link in close contact. But to do this we must pass over land and sea, mountain and valley, desert and plain, crossing the equator, and returning around the southern hemisphere through the trackless ocean, retrace our way again across the equator, then still on and on, until we again arrive at our starting point; and, when we have thus passed a golden chain around the huge bulk of the earth, we shall be but at the beginning of our task. We must drag this imaginary chain no less than 763 times round the globe. If we can further imagine all these rows of links laid closely side by side, and every one in contact with its neighbor, we shall have formed a golden band around the globe just 52 feet 6 inches wide; and this will represent our one billion of coins. Such a chain, if laid in a straight line, would reach a fraction over 18,328,445 miles, the weight of which, if estimated at one-quarter ounce each sovereign, would be 6,975,447 tons, and would require for their transport no less than 2,225 ships, each with a full cargo of 3,000 tons. Even then there would be a residue of 447 tons, representing 64,081,920 sovereigns.

For a measure of height, let us take a much smaller unit as our measuring rod. The thin sheets of paper on which those lines are printed, if laid out flat and firmly pressed together as in a well-bound book, would represent a measure of about 1-333d of an inch in thickness. Let us see how high a dense pile formed by a billion of these thin paper leaves would reach. We must, in imagination, pile them vertically upward, by degrees reaching to the height of our tallest spires; and, passing these, the pile must still grow higher, topping the Alps and the Andes and the highest peaks of the Himalayas, and shooting up from thence through the fleecy clouds, pass beyond the confines of our attenuated atmosphere, and leap up into the blue ether with which the universe is filled, standing proudly up far beyond the reach of terrestrial things; still pile on your thousands and millions of thin leaves, for we are only beginning to rear the mighty mass. Add millions on millions of sheets, and thousands of miles on these, and still the number will lack its full amount. Let us pause to look at the neat plowed edges of the book before us. See how closely lie those thin flakes of paper, how many there are in the mere width of a span, and then turn our eyes in imagination upward to our mighty column of accumulated sheets. It now contains its appointed number, and our one billion sheets of the Times superimposed upon each other, and pressed into a compact mass, has reached an altitude of 47,348 miles!

NOTE.—The billion of English numeration is a million millions; in the French system, a thousand millions make a billion, which is the system in vogue in America.

Killed by the Kick of His Gun.

William A. Matthews, 19 years of age, who was living near Cuthbert, Ga., met with a serious accident, a few days since, which caused his death. He was out hunting, and, while preparing to shoot a squirrel, his gun was accidentally discharged, kicking him on the right side of the abdomen. The force was so great as to cause peritonitis, from the effects of which he died.—Savannah News.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

Heartrending [illegible] of the Northern Provinces.

A telegram from Shanghai calls attention to a state of distress concerning which there can be no more doubt than if we could see the starving with our own eyes. The telegraphic reports are confined to the accounts of journeys, made in the autumn, into the famine regions, brought by Shanghai newspapers. Even then, after the harvest, and before winter set in, there was the beginning of suffering and death for want of food. Here are a few quotations from one account: "This extended tour, 760 miles, revealed the fact of a vast deal of suffering in (the provinces) Chihli, Shansi, Honan, and Northern Shantung. Multitudes are now on the verge of starvation, many have already died, while multitudes have not enough to carry them through the winter. Men heretofore well-to-do, having several acres of land, and six, eight or ten rooms in their houses, have, in multitudes of cases, torn down and sold all the wood—doors, windows, rafters, etc.—of all the rooms save one, for a mere trifle to get a little money to buy food. It was made manifest, too, how easily, and to what a terrible degree, drought may affect the North of China, and bring suffering and death to thousands of its inhabitants."

Of one district it is said: "This year there was absolutely no harvest, and the crop had been very small the two preceding years. Well-to-do farmers and mechanics have been reduced to beggary. Hundreds are leaving the province daily in search of food. Women and girls are being sold for a trifling sum, and thus hundreds of families are being broken up and scattered." "From the harvest at Linching it soon fell to three-tenths, two-tenths, one-tenth of a crop; and chaff, the leaves of the sweet potato, the pear and apricot tree were saved with great care and mixed with the grain for food." Of another district: "The yield of the year varied from nothing to 'four-tenths' of a crop." Said one old man: "It is difficult getting food now; what are we to do when winter comes?" "Many houses have already some inmates dead of hunger. I personally entered 120 houses in six or seven villages. The scenes were heartrending, yet borne with a patient cheerfulness that fairly astonished me."

Words of Wisdom.

A grain of prudence is worth a pound of craft. Boasters are cousins to liars. Confession of faults makes half amends. Denying a fault doubles it. Envy shooteth at others and woundeth herself. Foolish fear doubles danger. God reaches us good things by our own hands. He has hard work who has nothing to do. It costs more to avenge wrongs than to bear them. Knavery is the worst trade. Learning makes a man a fit company for himself. Modesty is a guard to virtue. Not to hear conscience is the way to silence it. One hour to-day is worth two to-morrow. Proud looks make foul looks in fair faces. Quiet conscience gives quiet sleep. Richest is he that wants least. Small faults indulged are little thieves. The boughs that bear most hang lowest. Upright walking is sure walking. Virtue and happiness are near kin. True men make more opportunities than they find. You never lose by doing a good turn. Zeal without knowledge is fire without light.

Woman.

The perception of a woman is as quick as lightning. Her penetration is intuition; almost instinct. By a glance she will draw a deep and just conclusion. Ask her how she formed it, and she cannot answer the question. A philosopher deduces inference, and his inference shall be right; but he gets to the head of the staircase, if I may say so, by slow degrees, mounting step by step. She arrives at the head of the staircase as well as he; but whether she flew there or not is more than she knows herself. While she trusts her instinct she is seldom deceived, and she is generally lost when she begins to reason.

Revised Statutes.

Ex-Senator Boutwell has completed his revision of the United States statutes, and the codification he has prepared has been carefully examined and approved by Secretary Evarts. The manuscript is now in type at the Government printing office, but will not be ready for publication for two months yet.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

SALT is very important for animals. Large pieces of rock salt put into the mangers and feeding troughs are recommended. One-half the ash of animal blood consists of salt; without the latter the blood cannot be natural or in a healthy state.

THE PEACH-TREE BORER.—Placing leached ashes around the base of trees was recommended as a means of preventing the beetle which lays the eggs from depositing them. The ashes were first applied as a manure, and this effect was accidentally discovered.—Moore's Rural.

VALUABLE MANURE.—It is estimated that fifty head of poultry will make more than enough manure for an acre of land—seven cwt. of guano being the usual quantity applied per acre, and poultry manure being even richer than guano in ammonia and fertilising salts. No other stock will give an equal return in this way, and these figures demand careful attention from the large farmer.

SHELTER YOUR FARM IMPLEMENTS.—Every farmer not only wants shelter for his hay, corn and other grain—for his cattle, horses, mules, sheep and swine—but he wants shelter for his plows, harrows, cultivators, reapers and mowers, wagons, carts, etc. Has the farmer good shelter for all these? If not, now is the time and now is the hour to provide this shelter. Lose no time in doing it. The snow and the cold rain-storms are here. Make comfortable everything you have.

FOR DISCUSSION.—Sanitary laws for our homes. What farmers' gardens are and what they should be. Small fruits for family use. Trees for the lawn, the farm, the roadside. The adaptation of fruits to soils. The best evergreens for home decorations. The best trees for small grounds. The value of experiments in the farm and garden. The value of botanical studies to country children. These are topics which we think worthy of discussion at our farmers' clubs, agricultural and horticultural conventions, and in the family circle.—Rural New Yorker.

SELECTING SEED CORN.—There is a difference, if we notice it, in the ears, which can be seen when husking, some ears being much harder to break off than others. And herein lies the secret: Those with the large, tough stems are the male or bastard ears, which I never take for seed, no matter how large the ear; but those which are somewhat hollow and small in the stem end are the female, and the only kind that should be taken for seed. This being the true way of picking out seed-corn, it is of no matter whether it be the top or bottom ear, as it is all one. We very well know that mixture or fertilizing between the male and female stalks takes place in the later stages of their growth.—Germantown Telegraph.

HOW TO BUILD A POULTRY HOUSE.—We advise every man to build a hennery on the same principle that a farmer would build a barn: first for comfort, second for convenience, and then add as much for elegance and style as he is willing to pay for. The plan we would adopt for a poultry house is this: Build on a southerly slope, if you can. Dig out for a back wall, to be cemented up; then lay upon it a shed roof, the roof and sides shingled, with tarred paper between the boards and shingles. It should be ten feet high in the front and five in the rear. On the inside have a walk three feet wide running the whole length, high enough from the ground to let the fowls under, to scratch and go out into the yard. Lay a floor over the rest with the roosts on the back part, with the shelves under them to catch the droppings, so arranged as to be removed and cleaned once a week. The nests for large hens should be a foot high, and small at the entrance, running back two feet. With such nests as these hens seldom learn to set eggs. Fasten the nests on the partition which separates the walk from the coop. A building thirty feet long and fifteen feet wide may be separated into three rooms, large enough for twenty-five fowls to a room. Such a building can be put up for $50, and is worth as much for all practical purposes as the most elegant building, while everybody that can afford to keep good fowls can afford such a hennery.—Boston Transcript.

About the House.

ADD your fuel to the fire slowly.

HERRINGS are very strengthening.

DO NOT make your bread too light.

STALE bread may be steamed into freshness.

SCALDED skimmed milk will go as far as fresh milk.

SALT meats should be simmered; they should not be fiercely boiled.

TO PREVENT SCORCHING.—To prevent scorching, the secret is simply to keep a basin or cup of water in the oven. The steam generated not only prevents scorching, but makes the meat cook nicer.

DESTROYER OF BED BUGS.—The quickest and best cure for them, I find, is to wash the bedstead with cold water and then sprinkle well with red or best black pepper, and also sprinkle well where there is any sign of bugs.

POUND CAKE.—Eight eggs beaten separately; not quite one pound of butter; one pound of powdered sugar; not quite one pound of prepared flour, or flour with two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat the yelks, sugar and butter together, then add the beaten whites and flour by degrees, alternating till both are stirred in; flavor with lemon.

CHOCOLATE CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, four eggs, one cup of milk, scant three cups of flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder, bake in layers. For the chocolate mixture, grate one cake of sweet chocolate; beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth and add a cup of powdered sugar.

TO GET RID OF BIRD LICE.—To keep insects off birds put the least little bit of kerosene oil under each wing, say as much as remains on the little finger after you have let the drop fall off; do this every ten days until all are removed; clean the cage well every day; scour it in hot water; use powdered borax, but no soap.

TO PURIFY THE COMPLEXION.—Eat an orange or two every morning before breakfast, drink plenty of lemonade not sweetened; never drink tea, coffee, nor any kind of stimulants; do not use soap on the face or neck; take a sponge bath every morning, either cold or tepid, in water made soft with powdered borax, a teaspoonful in a quart of water.

HARD SOAP.—Pour four gallons of boiling water on to four pounds of washing soda, and three pounds of unslacked lime; let it stand until clear and then drain off; place it on the fire in an iron pot; put in six pounds of good, clean fat; boil two hours—stir most of the time; pour one gallon of cold water on to the mixture of soda and lime that has been once used; let it settle clear, and add this cold solution to the boiling soap whenever it is in danger of boiling over; add only a pint or so at a time; try the soap by cooling a little in a saucer; about thirty minutes before removing from the fire, add four ounces of borax; wet a tub to prevent sticking; turn in the soap and let it stand until solid; cut into bars.

PENSIONS.

The Total Sum Paid Out Since 1791 Over $399,000,000.

[Washington Cor. New York Tribune.]

A complete statement of the amount of money appropriated and expended by the Government of the United States from 1791 to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, has been prepared in the warrant division of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of Mr. Rafael A. Bayley, and has been printed by order of the Senate. The following table shows the net amount of expenditures under each class of appropriations for pensions, and the grand total:

Pensions to military invalids	$ 76,681,381.53
Revolutionary Pensions act, March 18, 1818	22,418,867.66
Pensions to widows and orphans, act March 3, 1817	471,988.42
Pensions act, May 29, 1830	35,582.00
Invalids' Pensions act, March 2, 1833	3,419.90
Revolutionary Pensions act, June 7, 1832	17,992,585.03
Revolutionary Pensions act, May 15, 1828	873,659.58
Pension to Col. Gideon Morgan	1,118.00
Pension to Col. William Lawrence	1,878.00
Pensions under act May 14, 1836	4,196.02
Pensions to widows and orphans, act July 4, 1836	6,183,986.80
Unclaimed pensions	925,088.72
Five years' pensions to widows and orphans, act July 7, 1838	4,443,246.56
Revolutionary Pensions act, March 3, 1843	716,496.67
Pensions act, June 17, 1844	1,885,894.30
Pensions act, Feb. 2, 1848	3,275,167.6
Pensions act, July 21, 1848	101,009.00
Pensions act, Feb. 3, 1853	1,179,094.72
Pensions under special acts	1,920.00
Pensions acts, March 18, 1818, May 15, 1828, and June 7, 1832	297,510.06
Pensions acts of July 4, 1836, March 3, 1843, June 17, 1844, etc	2,569,979.93
Half-pay Pensions acts, July 21, 1848, Feb. 3, 1853, etc	20,261,445.04
Pensions act, June 3, 1858	444,953.70
Pensions to widows and others (various acts)	192,132,390.64
Pensions war of 1812	2,685,271.83
Army pensions consolidated	116,735,062.01
Navy pension fund	10,701,265.32
Privateer pension fund	264,260.18
Pensions to widows, etc., of officers killed on the Wabash in 1811	5,517.27
Navy invalid pensions	788,610.13
Pensions to widows and orphans, act March 3, 1837	8,480.19
Pensions to widows, act June 30, 1834	57,984.23
Five years' pensions to widows	5,338,266.87
Pensions to widows and orphans of persons lost in United States schooners Sea Gull and Grampus	3,810.36
Pensions to widows and orphans of officers, seamen and marines	47,544.96
Unclaimed pensions, navy	36,063.03
Navy pensions	658,227.51
Total	$399,327,536.29

From another table showing the net annual expenditures, it appears that the largest sum paid out in any one year to pensioners was in 1871, when it amounted to $34,024,990.91. The annual pensions prior to 1819 never reached $1,000,000. In that year, as a result of the act of March 18, 1818, they reached $2,416,829.04, and the next year $3,218,494.70. From that time they ranged from less than $1,000,000 to $3,000,000, averaging about $1,500,000 until 1864, when they became $4,985,273.89. In 1865 they were increased to $16,338,155.15, and, except in 1866, continued to increase until 1871, when they reached their maximum. Unless there is still further legislation increasing the pensions the annual appropriations for this purpose will now gradually decrease.

An Unfailing Sign.

"What makes you think they're engaged, Mrs. Berkley?" asked the neighbor. "Has Julia's mother ever intimated anything of the kind to you?"

"Oh, dear, gracious, no. She never so much as hinted it," replied Mrs. Berkley.

"Then what makes you think it's all settled between 'em? It ain't over three months since he commenced waiting on her."

"That don't make any difference—they've known each other for two or three years. She's as likely a girl as any—not bad looking, and he's—"

"Yes—yes; all true enough. But what makes you think they're engaged? That's what puzzles me."

"Why, la, bless you, I know it as well as if I'd heard the whole bargain with my own ears."

"Go on—go on."

"Yes, as I was saying, last Sunday afternoon my Marthy met 'em out walking together, and stopped to chat with 'em a minute. As soon as she got home and told me they had both been eating onions, I knew it was all arranged, and I shan't be a bit surprised to hear any day that the cards are out for a speedy wedding. A sign like that never fails.—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

One Hundred and Fifteen Years Old.

Having recently paid a visit to Grahamton and vicinity, I met Mr. William Blankinship, one among the oldest, if not the oldest, citizen in Kentucky. He was born in Franklin county, Va., in 1763, and went to that State with Berry Wright about sixty-five years ago. He has been married three times, his youngest child being now only 5 years old, and he says that if he should lose his wife he would marry again. Though uneducated, his mind seems very active and strong. His recollections of early life seem more distinct than of recent events. His own story of his age is corroborated by old citizens, who say that he must be at least 115 years old.—Meade (Pa.) Record.

THE FINANCES.

Speech of Hon. Thos. Ewing, of Ohio, Delivered in New York.

The Evils of Contraction Powerfully Depicted.

The Restoration of the Silver Dollar Advocated.

At a great meeting of the friends of silver and greenbacks in Cooper Institute, New York, Congressman Ewing, of Ohio, spoke as follows:

I am here this evening to address you on two measures which have passed the House of Representatives and are now pending in the Senate—one to restore the ancient silver dollar, just as it was, to all its functions as money; the other, to repeal the resumption scheme. The vast debts of the world, owned outside of the countries making the debts, are held by a few hundred German, English and French bondholders. They have always watched with eager jealousy the production of the precious metals, knowing full well that a large production tended to lessen the purchasing power of every one of their dollars, while a small production tended to increase the purchasing power. After Great Britain had quadrupled her already vast national debt by her Napoleonic wars, her bondholders came in and demonetized silver. Why? To contract the currency, to bring down values, to make the nation pay vastly more in real value in gold than the sum stipulated to be paid in gold or silver. But, as Great Britain is the great producer of gold, national pride came in as an ally of craft, and secured the demonetization of silver in England. From 1808 to 1848 the production of the precious metals in the world fell off so much that the purchasing power of the dollar was increased 45 per cent., and with that scarcity of money and shrinkage of values the great bondholders of the world were content. Hence, during that period of forty years no further effort at the demonetization of either of the precious metals was made. But when California and Australia poured their flood of gold upon the world, lessening its purchasing power 18 per cent., a concerted movement was made to demonetize gold, and Germany did demonetize it. In, however, the sixteen years from 1854–'70, the production of gold fell off largely, and the production of silver doubled. Then came the agitation by this class for the demonetization of silver.

They got Germany, which had demonetized gold when it was getting cheap, to turn about and remonetize gold and demonetize silver. They got the states of the Latin Union—that is, France, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, Wallachia and Moldavia—to restrict the coinage of silver, and then they held a meeting of European bondholders to consider the question, "How can we make the United States—the greatest debtor in the world, and the greatest producer of silver—to cut their own throat by demonetizing silver?" Well, they solved the question somehow, we don't know exactly how. They got a preliminary change in our coinage laws in 1873 which nobody noticed particularly. And then, when the Commissioners who were appointed to codify the laws of the United States made their final report, they succeeded in getting inserted in that codification, in 1874, the provision which forbade the coinage of the old silver dollar. The codifiers had no power to touch, in the estimation of a hair, the meaning of any existing statute. They were appointed simply to arrange and codify the laws as they then stood. They reported the code to Congress, printed, and it passed the Senate without the bundle in which it was tied up having even been once opened, and in that bundle this fraud lay nestled. For two years nobody knew, except the rascals who were in the secret, and who were to profit by it, that the deed was done, and now, when the wrong is discovered and the outrage laid bare, and the people of this country rise up and demand the restoration of their ancient standard, these men have the atrocious impudence, through their organs, the press, to turn upon the people of the country and denounce them as scoundrels, and set themselves up as persecuted saints.

Why should not the wrong be righted? They say the creditor class will suffer, because silver has been depreciated. How was it depreciated? By the very act of demonetization. It is depreciated in respect to only one commodity that exists in our land, and that is gold. Take one of those disfranchised dollars, and it will buy 20 per cent. more of labor, of breadstuffs, of clothing, of land, of everything that every human being wants, than it would have bought in 1874. Who is wronged then by having it paid to them?

But public credit is impaired by righting this wrong. How impaired? We should be honest as a nation as much as individuals. We should do what law, what equity, what good conscience requires; but when we do that, I say, we must do no more, or we ourselves impair our own national credit. I would rather take the credit of any man in Wall street who would meet his obligations in letter and in spirit, but who would resist any attempt to extort more from him, than the credit of a spooney who would suffer his creditor to come in and bully him out of more than he really owed.

There is not a bond in the United States that is not in law, equity and good conscience payable in the old silver dollar. Why, take this Funding act! It requires that the bonds issued under it should be paid in coin, as authorized and fixed at the date of that law, July 14, 1870. That provision is printed on the face of every bond, so that every man who buys one can see that he is entitled to one or the other of these two dollars as they existed at the date of the enactment of the law. Now, because some sneak-thief has slipped into our code a provision forbidding the coinage of the old silver dollar, can it be justly said that we are deprived of the option of paying the bonds in that dollar when they mature twenty-five or thirty years hence? We paid for the option, and we have the right to do it. Suppose both our gold and our silver dollar had been demonetized by accident or design, and suppose that paper had been created the only legal tender, what would the bondholder have then said to the people? Why, he would have said: "I stand on my contract; it calls for either the gold or the silver dollar, as it was established on July 14, 1870. I ask no more, and will take no less."

Fellow-citizens: I feel that in dwelling on this subject I am almost wasting your time, because the remonetization of the old silver dollar is already a foregone conclusion. More than two-thirds of both houses of Congress have plainly indicated their purpose to restore that dollar, veto or no veto, and it will not be sixty days until that dollar, which for eighty years in this republic was a standard of value, a legal tender for all debts, public and private, will be restored to our coinage and currency, with its undimmed monetary power.

But, fellow-citizens, I fear that the recoinage of the old dollar will disappoint both its friends and its enemies. (Voice: "That's so; I hope it will.") Well, I can't say I hope so, but it will be so. As I said before, the drive for the demonetization of silver was made chiefly at the United States. We produce 60 per cent. of the silver and Great Britain and her colonies 60 per cent. of the gold of the world. We being the great debtor nation, the aim was to hamstring us and make our vast public corporate and private debts, held abroad, payable in a metal of which we have no chief command. The restriction of the silver coinage by the Latin Union was a more defensive expedient to prevent gold coin from going out and the silver from taking its place in those nations. Let us restore the silver dollar, and Germany, who already halts and hesitates over the question, will probably restore it, the Latin Union will probably remove its restrictions and the chances are that silver will return to its old place as the common currency of the world in every nation except Great Britain. Remonetization will bring gold down and send silver up until there is but little difference between the two, and then nobody in this country will be particularly hurt by the restoration of the silver dollar.

What I am afraid of is that the great masses of distressed people are not to be immediately helped by this restoration. Demonetization did not bring this great distress on the country, and remonetization will not give us immediate relief. It will ultimately make the payment of the public debt in the future vastly easier and add largely to our currency, but it will not dispel the nightmare now oppressing every industry in the land. There is but one thing that will do that, and that is the repeal of the resumption scheme, which, by reason of the enormous contraction of our paper currency which its execution inevitably involves, is shrinking and shriveling up every value in this land except the value of the almighty dollar itself.

That Resumption law had two objects. One was the contraction of the currency to a volume possible to be held redeemable in gold by the 1st of January, 1879, and the consequent shrinkage of the value of all land, and of all products of the field and shop, and the consequent enormous increase of the value of all safe money securities. Its further object was one much more lasting, though not so immediately productive of distress to the people—to take from the people's government all control over the paper currency, which necessarily must be the chief currency, and put that control in the hands of the money power through confederated national banks. These objects are not only of vast immediate effect, but they are far-reaching. They strike at the very foundation of our republican system of Government. They are apparent to the minds of the people who dwell in the great Mississippi valley and the South Atlantic States, for there the press is free and open to the discussion of both sides, and they have aroused a great agitation in the heart of this country, which is shaking up party affiliations and reforming party lines.

The Democratic party is not only adhering to the faith of the fathers, but, better than that, it is right in principle. Why should the power to issue money be given to any individual? It is a sovereign function and has been so treated throughout the world's history, and well it may be. How vast a power it is. There is no law of political economy more generally recognized than that the rise or decline of values is regulated by the expansion or contraction of the currency. Suppose there be $500,000,000 of paper money, and that its issue is controlled by private corporations. There are about fifty billions of other property in the country, all measured by this petty sum of money. By increasing that $500,000,000 of money to the extent of one-fifth, they increase the selling price of the property in the country $10,000,000,000, and by contracting the volume of the currency one-fifth they decrease the value of property in the same proportion. And with the power in the possession of the confederate corporations they can make hard times and good times at their pleasure and rob the masses at every change of values.

Hence, if this plan for resumption could be executed without any immediate danger to the business of the country, it would be an immense evil for the future. But it cannot be carried into effect without not only endangering but massacring the business of the people. Why? Because it inevitably involves the contraction of the currency to one-third or one-fourth of its present volume, and consequently involves the shrinkage of all values—whether land or products or labor—in substantially the proportion of the contraction of the currency. That has been demonstrated over and over again in our own history. Every period of a contraction of the currency has been a period of a decline in values, and every period of expansion has witnessed a continuous rise in values.

Now, why must we have such a large contraction of the currency to reach resumption? Because the amount of paper money that we can keep afloat, redeemable in coin, depends on the amount of coin we can get and keep in this country. No nation on this earth ever maintained specie payments with a volume of paper money as large as the volume of coin in the country. In France, England and Germany the amount of coin in the country exceeds three-fold the amount of paper money. And why? Because the banks cannot get control of one-third or one-fourth of the coin in the country.

Before the war we had $285,000,000 of coin in the country. How much have we now? Well, we have not nearly that amount. Our mines have produced over $1,200,000,000 of gold and silver since the war, and it has gone abroad to pay our debts. We owe annual interest to the amount of $100,000,000 or $150,000,000. We pay yearly $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 for foreign travel and as much more for foreign shipping. And since the war broke out we have annually shipped abroad over $50,000,000 in excess of the coin and bullion we have imported. Even last year, with an enormous balance of trade in our favor, we exported $16,000,000 more coin and bullion than we imported.

We have now, by various estimates, from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 of coin and bullion in the United States. We have about $650,000,000 of paper and not $200,000,000 of gold and silver in the country, and resumption is fixed for next New-Year's day. It is as certain as the sun shines that the volume of the currency must be cut down to less than $200,000,000 to make it redeemable in coin.

Mr. Sherman says that the resumption is possible, and yet, with all the powers of the Government at command to accumulate coin, in about three years' time the treasury has accumulated only $33,000,000 applicable to resumption.

Now, how are we going to get the coin to resume with? Suppose we had $250,000,000 of coin and bullion in the United States, and, suppose the treasury should run up its $30,000,000 in gold to $60,000,000 or $70,000,000, resumption could not come even then, except through the destruction of two-thirds of our paper money.

When England undertook resumption, in 1819, her situation was just the reverse of ours. All the world owed her. Her twenty years of unparalleled prosperity made her the mistress of the seas—the manufacturer and merchant of the world. She might resume specie payments, for she only had one-third as much paper money as we have. She owed nobody, while we owe everybody. But she, by that act of 1819, found it necessary to contract her paper money 45 per cent., shrinking all values on the island 45 per cent., bankrupting her manufacturers, bankrupting her debtors, filling her streets with idle workmen, and was obliged to increase her army 82,000 men to suppress her starving wage-men. An officer of the United States army told me the other day that we would have to increase our army 100,000 men to enable us to execute this Resumption law, to make people consent to be robbed of their property, and the laboring classes to starve in the streets. But no matter what may be the effect of the Resumption act, or what difficulties may attend its execution, I tell the authors and promoters of this atrocious law that the army of the United States will never be increased one man in order to enforce its provisions. Look along our coast at our shipping idle and rotting at their wharves. Look at our manufacturing regions everywhere and see the smokeless stacks. Go through the West and South, and see the manufacturers and tradesmen forced into bankruptcy and workingmen outcast and starving. Look around you and see it all, here on this island of Manhattan. Every industry everywhere is perishing.

We hear the hard times imputed by the resumptionists to everything but the right cause. Over-production! With 3,000,000 working people—men, women and children—idle! Over-production, with 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 of working people on half-time! Over-production, when the cry is raised from the wage classes in every community in the land for bread and clothes! Over-production? How preposterous! The panic of 1873, they say. The panic of 1873? Why, the effect of the panic was substantially over before this Resumption law passed. It was not a money-panic, like the former ones. The money of the people was untouched and undisturbed by that panic, and everybody felt that if they could get a greenback or a national-bank note they would, at least, be safe. The industries of the country had revived before this Resumption law passed, as is shown by the tables of the business failures published in this city.

But, when the Resumption law passed and the contraction commenced, then came the failures increasing every year, and the last three or four months is a period without parallel in the history of our country. Here, in this city alone, as the papers of this morning show, there were failures during January amounting to $7,000,000. From the time we began to approach resumption, every year has shown an increase of hard times and of distress and bankruptcy in all classes of industry.

Did you ever think of the loss that this country is now undergoing? We have 3,000,000 of wage people idle. At $1 a day that is $3,000,000 a day—nearly $1,000,000,000 a year. One-half of our national debt wasted from the poorest class of our people, who, above all others, are able to bear no loss. We have shrunk our debt-paying capacity 40 per cent., and added so much to our national debt. We have put on the shoulders of the debtor class of this country $3,000,000,000 they have no right to bear—a clear piece of legislative robbery. The debtor class does not comprise the rich men of the country. The men who form it are our young and enterprising business men, the men above all others the laws should foster. By this law we have simply robbed them of their accumulated property. Look at the taxpayers; you shrink all the values 50 per cent., and you double the burden of all taxes. We pay already more taxes than any nation on the face of this earth. We pay $17.50 per head; the Britons $11; the French about the same; the Germans $9, and the Austrians a little over $7. Push on this scheme, bring down the value of labor and property to 25 per cent. of what they were when that law passed, and I believe that there is not one business man in five that can pay his debts, or one property-owner in five, who has a mortgage on his property, who can pay off his mortgages, and hardly a debtor community in the West and South but that will be driven to repudiation. It seems to me this money class are stricken with a madness akin to that which infected the leaders of the slave power, until it ended in the destruction of all they so blindly sought to preserve and perpetuate.

We have been told on the floor of Congress what an outrage it is to the working people that they should not have an honest dollar! That they should have taken from them 10 per cent. of their wages and savings! But the real trouble with the wage people is that they have not got the $1 to lose the 10 per cent. of. They are not troubled much about the difference between greenbacks and gold. The greenback has been rising in purchasing power until it will buy nearly double what it would two years ago, but their wages have been cut down more rapidly than the greenback rose—those who have had wages at all.

Keep on shrinking the value of property on which the mortgages of our savings banks are placed, and I tell you that within one year from this day not one savings bank out of five in the United States can pay 25 cents on the dollar. Why, these savings banks and national banks have $2,000,000,000 of deposits that will all be payable in gold next New Year's, and how many of them have got the gold to pay with?

But we are told that good faith demands that this law should stand, and the holders of greenbacks should be paid dollar for dollar in gold at all hazards and at any sacrifice. Does good faith demand it? Was the greenback issued as a debt? No, it was issued when gold and silver had fled—when the Government could get no money to carry on the war, and it was issued not as a forced loan, but as money. It carried us through the war. It has been the most safe, useful and acceptable currency the people of the United States ever had or ever will have.

The speaker argued further that those who had hoarded greenbacks had no right to demand dollar for dollar in gold for them at such stupendous sacrifice to the people of the country.

The speaker discussed the financial situation as it would be after resumption and after the people were driven to rely only on a bank currency, which he showed would necessarily be a panic-breeding system—throwing the business of the country into distress by frequent suspensions of specie payments. He then continued:

Fellow-citizens, I would not have left my duties in Congress to have come here to-night but for the hope that I might say something to rouse the masses here to action in this supreme hour of peril. Three thousand incorporated institutions, holding $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 of wealth in money and money securities, have imposed this scheme of resumption and silver demonetization, have doubled their wealth and brought the business of the country down to a condition that almost threatens death. They would not have accomplished their scheme of spoliation if it had not been for the humbug agitation about the South—which was an apple of discord thrown into our politics in 1868 by this cunning band, which sought to distract only to rob them. Now that these Southern difficulties are settled, the great masses of the people, West and South, are aroused to the injuries that have been inflicted, and are determined to repair them as far as possible. And how about the Northeast? We want the masses here to join us. I know they would if they had the same chance we have to hear both sides of the question discussed. But your great papers are owned by the money power, and are blind to the people and deaf to their cries. A free press in a free country ought, at least, to give the people fair play.

We who resist this resumption scheme are treated as a pack of lunatics—the most amiable term the New York press seem willing to apply to us. Now let any honest man look at our situation—at our utter poverty of coin, at our position as the financial slave of the world, at our large volume of paper money, at the inevitable contraction of the currency and consequent business distress, involved in the execution of this Resumption law—and, if he does not concede that it will occasion losses that the country should not be called upon to endure, then either he is a lunatic or I am.

The speaker then referred to the financial history of France and her action regarding resumption; although the Bank of France had accumulated nearly the entire amount of gold necessary to redeem her paper money, because the sum of $35,000,000 of gold was taken from the country, resumption was indefinitely postponed. Referring again to the condition of our country, he said:

Laboring men of New York, you are suffering from the same cause exactly and in the same way as the millions of workers at the wharf, in the streets, at the forge, in the mine, at the spindle—everywhere throughout our broad land. Merchants of New York, you are also plunging into the gulf of bankruptcy exactly as are the merchants of the West and South. Farmers of the Northeast, you are losing your homes by foreclosures, just as are your brethren of the West and South—for the crime of going in debt to improve your lands or to buy homes for your children. The industrial classes everywhere throughout the broad land are suffering intensely from the same terrible cause as your business men and laborers of Manhattan island. I know you have not the opportunity to act as have the people of the West and South. I know the power of a hostile press. I know the power of accumulated money capital. We of the West and South have shaken off these influences easily, but the money-power sits enthroned on this island and its suburb States.

But recollect there is no power in this land that can withstand the people determined to vindicate their rights. Agitate, then; discuss these questions. You can get halls somewhere, and, if you can't, then discuss them on the street corners. Agitate! agitate!! and press, banks and politicians will succumb to the power of an aroused and intrepid people.

I sincerely believe that this confederated money-power, if unchecked, will subvert our republican institutions. Owning the press, it makes it the enemy instead of the advocate of the people. It holds party machinery in its fist, and uses it to destroy the people. I don't mean to make any tirade against wealth; I speak simply of the organized money-capital acting to control financial legislation in its interest, and regardless of the rights and interests of the great masses who create all power and riches. That power so organized as a political power is as hostile to our free institutions as is the Mohammedan power to Christian civilization in Europe. We of the West and South have already shaken it off, and have driven it beyond the Balkans. Rise now and join us, and we will drive it to its old haunts beyond the Hellespont, to threaten free government in America no more forever!

German Syrup.

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine was distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumtion, Asthama, Croupe, Severe Coughs, Pneumonia and other diseases of the throat and lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town an village in the United States are recommending it to their cutomers. Go to your Druggist, F. E. Dvenport, and ask what he knows about it. Sample bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case.

For sale by F. E. Davenport.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitas, Catarrh, Asthama, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for general debility and all nervous complaints, after having thouroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. The receipt will be sent free of charge, to all who desire it, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Address with stamp naming this paper, Dr. J. C. Stone, 44 North Ninth Street, Philadelphia Pa.

Have You Tried It.

We refer to that most remarkable compound, Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound, for coughs, colds, blood spitting, weak lungs, croup, whooping cough, asthama, bronchitis, and all diseases of the lungs and throat. Probably no similar preparation ever before so quickly found its way into public favor as this. Its sale in our community is simply enormious. Those who have been disappointed in other so called remedies, are specially invited to try this. Be sure to get the genuine Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound. Trial size 10 cents. Regular sizes, 50 cents and one dollar.

For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup is perfectly safe. Extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

From our own Correspondent.

LIFE IN THE METROPOLIS.

Weather, Valentines, Amusements, Col. Ingersoll, Hotels, Silver Bill, &c.

New York, Feb. 28th, '78.

Lets see: It was near two weeks ago, we rested our pen to hold our hat on. Since that date however we have seen probabilities verified. The snow storm came in all its fury, bringing with it the usual accompaniments, sleigh riding, coasting, snow-balling, &c. The "beautiful snow" seems to inspire every one with a love for follo, which is indulged in according to the size of your purse, and fortunate is the young lady considered, who is favored with a drive, which costs at the rate of $6 an hour. The excellent sleding, however, was very tempting, and brought out many Belles Beaux and bells, and merry hearted serenading agitated the usual dignified air of city life. The pleasure derived from all this is only exceeded by the suffering caused to the poor, poor little ones who go shivering from door to door, begging only the crumbs, or fishing in an old ash barrel in hopes of finding a crust. Some of the most enterprising make the most of circumstances, and providing themselves with an old broom, sweep the crossings, holding out a miserable chopped and sometimes bleeding hand, while a face all entreaty and a whine, arrests the attention of the passer by—"please mam, give me a penny for sweeping the crossing." The horses too: how much extra labor they are called on to perform, especially the street car horses. I doubt whether the President or Secretary of a society for the "prevention of cruelty to animals" could shed more than we. Thanks to the man (or woman) who invented the street sweeper, And a curiosity it is. Here it comes, humming, drawn by eight horses, and looks like a large wagon, underneath which is a huge revolving broom, large and strong enough to sweep the car track almost clean, leaving a ridge of snow near the sidewalk—a similiar machine is used every night to sweep Broadway.

AMUSEMENTS.

Emerson says "The world wishes to be amused," and if New York and Brooklyn represent the world he is quite right. Every evening finds the "hundred and one" places of amusement well filled. Just now New Yorkers are laughing most heartily over the murder of Hamlet, by "Count Joannes," as he is styled: Said to be a descendent of English Nobility, and some years ago an actor of merit, but now old and childish, and all unconscious of his ridiculous failure as an actor, persists in playing Shakespear's most popular plays, and considers all the laughing and fun making as peals of applause—exclaiming: "Did ever another actor call forth such enthusiastic applause?" "Where ignorance is bliss &c." The house is filled night after night with fun loving men and boys who give vent to their mirth in uproarous laughter, slang phrases, and complements in the shape of boquets made of cabbage heads and onions. The play is called a Pantomine by the public, as the applause of the house, drowns every thing that may be said on the stage.

"Vanities of vanities saith the preacher, all is vanity" at Gilmore's Garden for two days this week, where the "Congress of Beauty" is being held, and 700 women are on exhibition as competitors for prizes to be awarded to the most lady like, the handsomest blonde, the best dressed lady, for the finest head of hare, for the prettiest blue, black, brown and grey eyes, and to the tallest, shortest, heaviest and lightest, the best pianist, vocalist, roller skater, dancer, pedestrian, and elocutionist. But we will turn our backs on New York entertainments for one evening and speak of the splendid "Old Folks Concert," at Beecher's church, Brooklyn, on the 6th, inst. Said Concert was given as a complimentary to the choir. Over one hundred ladies and gentlemen participated in the rendition of an excellent programme. The performers adopting quaint manners, and the style of dress of a century ago The costumes were noticable for their richness of texture and elegance of finish. Every style was represented, from the gaudy dress made of the American flag, to the modest quaker, with real quaker bonnet and white neck handkerchief. Many of the tunes were old fashioned as our grand mothers, for instance, "Easter Anthem," "Sons of Zion," "Strike ye Symbal, etc., one of the most interesting was "The ode on Science."

The British host, the gallic chain,
Was urged upon her sons in vain,
All haughty tyrants we disdain,
And shout long live America.

with Topsy's voice sounding loud and long on the last. A judicious sprinkling of worldly melodies kept up the interest. The large church was crowded, hundreds had to go away without admittance. The choir have consented to repeat the same in the Academy of Music soon.

ROBERT INGERSOLL

has been here, and I doubt if he does more harm than good, with his furious attacks upon the Christian religion, for he has roused up the clergymen, and provoked a discussion that will surely have a good effect. Those who were disposed to deny the existence of hell, are now mostly convinced there is such a place, and many who have for years been very mild and pleasing on the subject of eternal punishment, are now giving their congregations h——. Many of the most popular ministers used it as a theme for sermons Sunday, and their expressed opinion had the usual diversity. Father Colton said: "There is a hell." Then Henry Ward Beecher, in Plymouth church, exclaimed: "I believe in a hell!" and after a pause, during which astonishment was depicted in the countenance of his hearers, he added, "I mean a hell on earth." Rev. Fulton preaches a local hell, but none could be more positive than the well known Talmadge.

NOTES.

New York can no doubt number more hotels than any city in the Union, especially since the enforcement of the excise law, which allows only hotels to keep a bar, consequently every saloon has a new sign board which reads, hotel, something according to the taste or ingenuity of the proprietor, for instance, "Hotel Farmers," a common saloon with only the name hotel attracts the attention of some stranger, who applies for a nights lodging, and of course the proprietor is equal to the emergency, and replies: "Oh, yes, we have a bed, but it is in the celler and fear you would not find it pleasant, as the last lodger was eaten up by rats, nothing being left but his boot heel. Another says: "Certainly you can be accommodated, but one of our lodgers has the small-pox. Such prospects not being atal agreeable, he quietly, and with a felling of relief, passes out to some respectable quarters.

THE SILVER BILL.

I think it is the impression of most of your readers, that the majority of New York is opposed to the Bland bill, but it's a mistake. Only the large stockholders are opposed, while most of the business men and working people are in favor of it, and a petition in favor of the Bland bill, has just been sent to Washington, signed by 193 business firms on Broad every.

TILIDIC.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

The Democracy of the State of Indiana assembled in delegate convention declare:

The National bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of Treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are by the terms of the original contract under which they were issued, expressly payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money as well as coin is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound busines interests of the country may, from time to time, require.

We are in favor of such legislation by Congress as will authorize the taxation by the states of United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad, through the means of home syndicates, or other methods; and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislation so as to distribute said debts among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practical opportunities for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation which shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar, of 412½ grains, to the coin in the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public and private; and that the coinage thereof shallbe unlimited, and upon the same termsand conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

We are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employees of corporations engaged in the busines of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that said lien should be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation.

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and the owner.

The Democratic party is a friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last appointment of the State for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonerable, and we demand that the next Legislature, in apportioning the State for Legislative purposes, as will be their imperative duty, shall have regard for population alone and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the Circuit Courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the States, tend to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the true intests of the people. And we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the Constitution, and expressed in the Judiciary Act of 1789.

We are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the Federal Government, either in lands, bonds, money or by pledge of public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders in the Republican party who secretly connived, and with barefaced effrontery, carried out the scheme by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for President and Vice President, were wrongfully kept out of the positions to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against free government, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that can only be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the Presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the President of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the acts of Federal officers in attempting to interefere with the rights and powers of the State courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to the soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldier of the war of 1812.

THE INDIANAPOLIS SENTINEL'S EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

Only $1.30 will pay for the Weekly Sentinel and the Sentinel's new map of Indiana, both postage paid, or Ropp's Easy Calculator, a work that no farmer, mechanic or business man should be without, sent in place of map, if desired.

The Sentinel is in every sense the paper of the people.

It advocates justice and fair living opportunities for industry and labor.

That there be no more class legislation.

A reduction of the present ruinous rate of interest.

An immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption law.

The remonetization of silver.

Withdrawal of national bank notes—greenbacks and silver to be made a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, without limit,

The bondhold to be paid no more than the contract and to share equally the burdens of government with industry and labor.

ON TRIAL We are confident the Sentinel will not be stopped where once tried, and therefore submit the above extraordinary offer.

A gentleman having boasted that it was easy enough to "do" railway companies out of their fares, and that he had passed from station to another of a certain road the day before without a ticket, was approached by an officer of the road, who wanted to know how it was done. The gentleman agreed to tell for a "consideration." It was paid, and then the officer said: "Now, tell me how you did it." "I walked," quietly replied the gentleman.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE SILVER DOLLAR.

The bill authorizing the coinage of a standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character, passed the United States Senate by a vote of 48 to 21. The absentees were 7, of whom 4 favored the bill and 3 opposed it, making the full vote for the bill 52, and 24 against it. Of the 24 votes against the bill, 12 were contributed by New England, four by New York and New Jersey, and one each by Delaware, Maryland, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, California, Oregon and Michigan. Messrs. Christiancy, of Michigan, Sargent, of California, and Mitchell, of Oregon, are the only Western Senators whose votes stand recorded against the measure. Following is the vote in detail:

The text of the bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That there shall be coined at the several mints of the United States silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy, of standard silver, as provided in the act of Jan. 18, 1837, on which shall be the devices and superscription provided by said act, which coins, together with all silver dollars heretofore coined by the United States of like weight and fineness, shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressed and stipulated in the contract; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase, from time to time, silver bullion at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth per month, nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly, as fast as so purchased, into such dollars, and a sum sufficient to carry out the foregoing provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. And any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage; provided, that the amount of money at any one time invested in such silver bullion, exclusive of such resulting coin, shall not exceed $5,000,000; and provided, further, that nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the payment in silver of certificates of deposit issued under the provisions of section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

Sec. 2. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 3. That immediately after the passage of this act the President shall invite the Governments of the countries composing the Latin Union, so called, and of such other European nations as he may deem advisable, to join the United States in conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver, for the purpose of establishing internationally the use of bi-metallic money, and securing a fixity of the relative value between those metals; such conference to be held at such place in Europe, or in the United States, at such time within six months as may be mutually agreed upon by the Executives of the Governments joining in the same, whenever the Governments so invited, or any three of them, shall have signified their willingness to unite in the same. The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint three Commissioners, who shall attend such conference on behalf of the United States, and shall report the doings thereof to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress. Said Commissioners shall each receive the sum of $2,500 and their reasonable expenses, to be approved by the Secretary of State, and the amount necessary to pay such compensation and expenses is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 4. That any holder of the coin authorized by this act may deposit the same with the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $10, and receive therefor certificates of not less than $10 each, corresponding with the denominations of United States notes. The coin deposited for or representing the certificates shall be retained in the treasury for the payment of the same on demand. Said certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued.

THE EAST.

The steamer Richmond left Philadelphia the other day with 425 railroad laborers for Brazil. Notwithstanding the appalling fate of the Metropolis, her sister ship, the rush of the unemployed to ship on the Richmond was tremendous.

A fire in West Twenty-third street, New York, last week, destroyed $500,000 worth of property.

The difficulty between Thomas Lord, Sen., of New York, and his children, growing out of the marriage of that gentleman to Mrs. Hicks, has been amicably settled. The property of the old gentleman, valued at $3,000,000, is to be placed in the hands of a trustee, the children each to receive $12,000 a year from the proceeds, and upon the death of the father the estate is to be divided equally among them. Mrs. Lord surrenders all right of dower to the estate, and agrees to receive nothing from it after the death of her husband, should she survive him. Mrs. Lord possesses a fortune of over $500,000.

The New York school janitors' salaries have been increased from $725 to $825 a year, while the salaries of the teachers have been reduced from $850 to $800.

A sensation has been created in Philadelphia financial circles by the suspension of the heavy grain shipping firm of A. G. Cattell & Co. The liabilities are about $250,000. Cattell was formerly a United States Senator from New Jersey.... John Dippold & Son, coal dealers, Pittsburgh, have failed. Liabilities, $200,000. .... The annual report of the New York Fire Department shows that during the past year there were 1,450 fires in the city, causing a loss on buildings of $1,008,446, and damage to property of $2,207,249. The insurance on buildings was $3,298,960, and on property $7,209,647; uninsured losses, $128,068. This is an increase of ninety-four fires over the previous year.

THE WEST.

John W. Beavers was hanged at Madison, Ind., Feb. 15, for the murder of J. W. Sewell. John T. Ables was executed at Carthage, Mo., on the same day, for the murder of John Lane, in April, 1874.

The Minnesota Legislature has passed and the Governor has approved a law voting an appropriation of $150,000 for the relief of the grasshopper-ravaged districts of the State, including the purchase of seed-wheat for this year's crop.

Agents of Eastern school-book publishers, who have been mousing around the Minnesota Legislature as lobbyists to secure legislation in their interest, have been "caught in the act." A member of the House named Brandt openly exposed them, declaring that he had been paid $50 to vote for a certain text-book contract. The exposure caused considerable excitement at St. Paul, and a legislative investigation is in progress.

The Lindell Hotel, the leading hostelry of St. Louis, has been the scene of a sensational tragedy. A young man and woman called at the hotel, registered as John and Maggie Gumbinger, and engaged a room. The next morning pistol-shots were heard in the room occupied by the couple, and upon investigation the shocking discovery was made that the young man had shot the girl and then taken his own life. They were both residents of the city, and belonged to respectable families. The cause of the tragedy was the refusal of the girl's parents to sanction the marriage of the young man with their daughter.... Many portions of California have just been visited by rain-storms of unusual violence. The streams were swollen to an extraordinary degree, and much property was destroyed.... D. J. Calligan, boot and shoe dealer, Peoria, Ill., has failed. Liabilities, $40,000.... A terrible accident occurred, last week, near Palmyra, Mo., resulting in the death of four men. A boiler in Shields' steam saw-mill exploded, instantly killing three men, and scalding a fourth so badly that he died shortly after.

In August last a package of Canadian currency, amounting to $5,000, mailed at Montreal, Canada, and destined for Helena, Montana, was mysteriously abstracted from the United States mails at some point west of Chicago. All efforts of the detectives to ferret out the robber were unavailing until recently, when a man from Nebraska entered a Chicago bank and tried to negotiate the exchange of the identical money. He was pounced upon by the officers of the law. This man (Harmon by name) informed the officers that he got the money from a postal clerk named John J. Moore, living at Fremont, Neb., and that Moore had hired him to exchange it for other money. Moore has just been arrested, and confesses to the robbery.... One of the most agreeable places to enjoy an evening's amusement in Chicago is at Haverly's theater. It is the largest dramatic temple in the city; it is patronized by the best classes, the attractions are first-class, and the orchestra A 1.

Nelson Morris' extensive slaughter-house, near the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, with all its contents, was destroyed by fire a few days ago. Loss about $120,000; insurance only $10,000.... The Insane Asylum at Winoski, Sheboygan county, Wis., has been destroyed by fire. Four inmates perished in the flames.

THE SOUTH.

A fire at Savannah, Ga., last week, burned a warehouse containing 4,000 bales of cotton. Loss about $200,000..... Fifty-three Republican members of the Louisiana Legislature have signed an appeal asking Executive clemency in behalf of Thomas C. Anderson.... J. Madison Wells is out in an open letter in regard to the Returning Board prosecutions. It is written in Wells' characteristically vigorous style, and gives what purports to be a personal history of the men prominently engaged in the prosecutions. He asserts that Maj. E. A. Burke, one of the leading witnesses, is a fugitive from Illinois and a villain; that the Sheriff and some of the other witnesses are murderers and villains; that Judge Whittaker is a defaulter and a drunkard; that Attorney General Ogden is a deacon in the church and a villain; that Assistant Prosecutor Egan is a murderer and a villain; that Charles Cavarac, a leading instigator of the prosecution, is a liar, thief and villain, and that the whole prosecution is conducted by rebels in the interest of Samuel J. Tilden.

WASHINGTON.

It is announced from Washington that Attorney General Devens declines to write any letter in answer to the President's on the Louisiana subject, giving as a reason therefor that is unnecessary. He also says that, in his opinion, the United States could not interfere in the trials of the Returning Board; that Louisiana has a perfect State Government, and is just as much entitled to her sovereign power as the State of Massachusetts.

The President has made the following appointments: Bayard Taylor, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Germany; John Baker, of Illinois, Minister Resident at Venezuela; Wm. C. Goodloe, of Kentucky, Minister Resident at Belgium; Benjamin F. Simpson, of Kansas, United States Marshal for Kansas; Wm. A. Howard, of Michigan, Governor of Dakota Territory.... The Senate Committee on Territories has decided to report favorably upon the bill for the creation of the Territory of Lincoln, to be formed out of portions of the Territories of Dakota and Wyoming, so as to include all the Black Hills country.

The Postmaster General estimates that the revenues of the Department are now suffering not less than $250,000 per month by the flood of stamps sold by Postmasters at small country offices at a discount for use in cities and towns. The Postmaster at St. Louis alone shows his office defrauded of revenue to the amount of $180,000 per annum in this way.

The House Banking and Currency Committee have agreed upon Mr. Buckner's bill proposing to substitute for national bank notes a new description of treasury notes, which shall be receivable in payment of customs, dues, and all claims or demands against the United States, except obligations made payable in coin by existing laws, and shall be receivable at par for 4 per cent. bonds. The Comptroller of the Currency made an argument before the committee against the bill. He contended that its enactment would be an infringement of vested rights, and that the Government has no constitutional power to take this action in regard to national banks while their charters continue in existence.

The House Committee on Public Lands has decided to report several bills, the effect of which is to cause all land grants to railroads which up to this time have not complied with their charters to revert to the United States. The effect would be to cause to revert 700,000,000 acres.

Washington was thronged with agriculturists last week. They came from the East, the South and the West. The occasion that brought them together was the meeting of the National Agricultural Congress. Resolutions were adopted urging upon Congress the expediency of supplying such additional endowment as is necessary to the carrying out of the objects for which the act establishing agricultural colleges was passed; declaring that in view of the vital importance of transportation to agricultural interests, it is the sense of the Agricultural Congress that the General Government shall own and operate lines of railroads in the country, and that Congress should be instructed to have one of its committees examine into the question; recognizing the substantial benefits already conferred by act of Congress to encourage agricultural colleges, and declaring against any further distribution of public lands by railroad corporations. In the course of the proceedings speeches were made by various delegates, giving the condition of various agricultural interests.

As noted in our Congressional summary, the Senate of the United States, by a majority of twelve, has voted for the restoration of the franking privilege. Following is the vote in detail:

Yeas—Allison, Beck, Burnside, Butler, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Garland, Grover, Hamlin, Harris, Howe, Hoar, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kirkwood, Lamar, McDonald, Matthews, Morgan, Paddock, Ransom, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Windom, and Withers—33. Nays—Bailey, Bayard, Booth, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of Illinois, Eaton, Eustis, Ferry, McCreery, McMillan, Merrimon, Morrill, Oglesby, Plumb, Sargent, Saulsbury, Voorhees, Wadleigh, and Wallace—21. Paired—Patterson (who was in favor of) and Armstrong (who was against the bill).

The National House of Representatives has passed, by a large majority, a bill giving women lawyers the right to practice in United States Courts.

Secretary Sherman says he will execute the Silver bill in the spirit in which it passed.... The Western wool-growers and Eastern wool-manufacturers are not in harmony on the subject of the wool tariff. The wool-growers wish the tariff to remain as it is. The wool manufacturers desire a considerable reduction, in order that they may compete more easily with British manufacturers.

GENERAL.

The wife of Benn Pitman, of Cincinnati, the well-known phonographer, died recently, and, in accordance with the wishes of the deceased, as expressed in her will, the remains were taken to the crematory of Dr. LeMoyne, at Washington, Pa., and reduced to ashes.

A great curiosity, in the shape of a Chinese war vessel, with American officers and a Mongolian crew, will shortly visit the United States. ....Died, at Boston, Feb. 21, John McCoy, aged 110; same day, at Halifax, N. S., Mrs. Catharine Jarvis (a colored woman who escaped from Southern slavery in 1782), aged 110.

Visible supply of grain in the States and Canada: Wheat, 8,691,292 bushels; corn, 6,009,408 bushels; oats, 3,207,716 bushels; rye, 768,026 bushels; barley, 4,184,476 bushels.... Fires: At Waco, Texas, loss $50,000; Chester, Pa., loss $35,000; Cincinnati, Ohio, loss $20,000.

POLITICAL.

In the local elections throughout Pennsylvania, last week, the Democrats carried Pottstown, Lock Haven, Allentown, Chester, Oil City, Williamsport and York. The Republicans carried Norristown, Easton, Westchester, Lancaster, Lebanon and Erie. The Greenbackers carried Shenandoah, Bellefonte, Titusville and Scranton. The Independents carried Bethlehem and Pottsville. In Philadelphia the Republicans were successful in a very light vote, 75,000 being polled out of the full voting strength of 140,000. In the rural districts gains were about equally divided between Republicans and Democrats, with a tendency toward the Greenback party at the expense of both.

New Hampshire is having a quiet political campaign with little champagne. The election occurs Tuesday, March 12.... Persons prominently identified with Louisiana politics say that Gov. Nicholls will pardon the Returning Board on consideration that the President removes the three that are now holding Federal offices from those offices, and agree not to appoint any of the Board to Federal offices in the State of Louisiana. So reports a New Orleans telegram.

The Indiana Democratic State Convention met at Indianapolis, on Wednesday, Feb. 20, and organized by the selection of ex-Gov. Thomas A. Hendricks as Chairman. The following ticket was nominated: For Secretary of State, John G. Shanklin; for Auditor of State, Mahlon D. Manson; for Treasurer of State, William Fleming; for Attorney General, Thomas W. Wollen; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. H. Smart. The platform adopted demands retirement of national-bank notes and the issue of greenbacks, instead of legal-tender notes, for all debts, public and private, except when coin is stipulated; the remonetization of a 412½-grain silver dollar; unlimited coinage, under the same regulations as gold is coined; favors the sale of bonds in this country instead of abroad by means of a syndicate; demands the punishment of those Republicans who were engaged in the Presidential frauds; favors the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and protests against subsidies by the Federal Government.

The Ohio State Prohibition Convention, held at Columbus last week, nominated the following ticket: For Secretary of State, E. N. Robinson, of Cuyahoga; for Judge of the Supreme Court, William F. Ross, of Miami; for Members of the Board of Public Works, Delmont Lock and J. Ross.... In an interview with a Washington reporter, the other day, Mr. Stanley Matthews admitted that he knew of no pledge or understanding made by or with Nicholls, the Governor of Louisiana, in relation to amnestying the Returning Board. He thought the resolutions adopted by the Legislature covered the case, however.

FOREIGN NEWS.

A Constantinople correspondent telegraphs Feb. 16: Russia will get her troops ready for a sudden and rapid movement in overwhelming force, and then, if England makes the least hostile move, the Russians will not only enter Constantinople and the Bosphorus forts, but will take possession of the forts on the Dardanelles, thus cutting off the communications of the English fleet. This possibility is evidently contemplated by England, for Lord Derby has informed the Russian Ambassador that any movement toward Gallipoli would be regarded in England as compromising the safety of the fleet, adding that he could not answer for the consequences, which might be most serious. All now depends upon Russia's action. If she is satisfied to let things remain as they are, hostilities between herself and England may be postponed indefinitely, and even altogether avoided, but if Constantinople or Gallipoli is occupied England will send an ultimatum demanding the withdrawal of the troops. This will of course be refused, and after some slight delay for final preparation war will be declared.

A cable dispatch of the 18th says: "A congress of all the great powers at Baden Baden has been agreed to, and Prince Gortschakoff will preside. Russia has even suggested that the United States, as one of the great maritime powers, should be represented, and England and Austria have acquiesced. The withdrawal of the British fleet to Mundania bay is also confirmed. Germany will use her influence with Russia to obtain a peaceful settlement of the present difficulties. Negotiations for the final peace settlement are progressing at Adrianople, and it is expected that the treaty will be ready for signature in about ten days."

A London dispatch says: "There are still wide divergencies between Russia and Austria. Prince Bismarck will complete the reconciliation at the congress. England must look to herself. She has interests at stake which she will certainly be called upon to defend. There is not a statesman on the continent, outside those directly concerned, that does not admit the chief object of the triple alliance to be the annihilation of British influence abroad."

Berlin enjoyed the sensation of two weddings in the imperial family, on the evening of Feb. 18. The eldest daughter of the Crown Prince Frederick William, was married to the heir of the duchy of Saxe Meiningen. She was born July 24, 1860, her mother being the "Princess Royal" of England, the eldest of Queen Victoria's children, Victoria Adelaide. The other bride was Elizabeth, daughter of Prince Frederick Charles (cousin of the Crown Prince), and her bridegroom is the hereditary Prince of Oldenburg.

The Thessalian insurgents are not inclined to fall in with the general peace movement which has been acquiesced in by all the other powers, great and small. The insurrection in that province is rapidly growing more formidable. Greek has met Turk, and the Moslem, collectively numbering some 6,000, has been defeated in a desperate battle, with a loss of 600 alone.

The Eastern question was debated in both the German and Austrian Parliaments last week. Prince Bismarck stated that he did not believe in a European war; was in favor of an early assembling of the Congress of the powers; and while the Government was willing to act as a mediator, it did not wish to be considered the arbiter of Europe. In the Austrian Chamber, Prince Auersperg, President of the Council of Ministers, stated that the basis of the peace conditions were considered detrimental to the interests of the monarchy; that they could not be accepted as final by the Government, fearing an alteration in the European balance of power, and trusted that the Congress of Powers would settle matters on a lasting and equitable basis.

Inspired by Stanley's successes, and petitioned by the Paris Geographical Society, the French Government, through the Minister of War, has authorized the Comte de Semelle, an Algerian officer, to proceed to the survey of equatorial Africa, from east to west.

If advices from Havana, Cuba, are to be believed, the insurgent resistance to the Spanish authority is over, and peace once more reigns in that long-afflicted island. All the rebellious chiefs have acknowledged their allegiance and subscribed to the peace conditions. These are, in substance, as follows: The island of Cuba to receive the same political organization and administrative concessions as enjoyed by Porto Rico; ample pardon for all political offenses committed since 1868, and liberty for those persons under sentence and political prisoners, and a general pardon to deserters from the Spanish lines; liberty to be given to slaves and Chinamen within the insurgent lines; all persons desiring to leave the island to be furnished with means to do so, without touching either village or city if so desired.

Cardinal Joachim Pecci, an Italian, has been elected by the Conclave of Cardinals in Rome as the successor of Pope Pius IX., whose appointee he was as Camerlengo, or High Chamberlain of the Vatican, and who, it is understood, had, before his death, privately expressed a preference for him for the Pontifical succession. Pecci is 68 years of age, and is a native of Carpenetto, in the diocese of Arragni. He was created a Cardinal Dec. 19, 1853, and, in addition to being Camerlengo, was the Archbishop of Perugia. Pope Pius had great confidence in him, and Antonelli, the late Papal Premier, was exceedingly jealous of him, and dreaded his influence in the Vatican. Pecci will be the 258th Pope of the Church of Rome. He will assume the title of Leo XIII.... In a London dispatch it is reported, on what is said to be good authority, that the number of persons suffering from famine in the northern provinces of China is 70,000,000.

Cable dispatches of the 21st of February are to the effect that there was a serious misunderstanding between Russia and England, and that the former threatened to occupy Constantinople if the British fleet was not withdrawn from the Sea of Marmora. The concentration of large bodies of Russians south of Adrianople continued, evidently for the purpose of moving with resistless force upon Constantinople and the straits, in the event of any failure of the peace negotiations. The dispatches report that the prospects for the early assembling of the congress are not flattering. Russia is hastening negotiations for peace at Adrianople, and also concentrating a large force of troops in Roumelia, as if anxious to provide against any possibility of Austria cutting off her line of communication. From Vienna come disquieting rumors as to Austria's warlike preparations, and altogether the prospect is not so peaceful as had been hoped.... Namyk Pasha, a leading Turkish statesman, has gone to St. Petersburg to endeavor to obtain from the Czar a modification of the terms of peace, especially those touching the withdrawal of the Mussulmans from Bulgaria, and the limits of the new principality.... Server Pasha has been deposed from the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs.... John Walter, proprietor of the London Times and Liberal member of Parliament, has been blackballed by a prominent Edinburgh club, on account of his pro-Russian sentiments. .... The Turks have been at some of their favorite deviltry among the Druses in Syria. On pretext of arresting a villager for some trivial offense, the place was visited by Turkish soldiers, and thirty men were killed and a number wounded.... The British Foreign Office has given notice to Lloyds that prohibition of export of grain and other products from Black sea ports has been raised.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, Feb. 15.—Senate.—Consideration of the Silver bill was resumed, and Mr. Ingalls spoke in favor of the measure. He declared that gold was the worst enemy the people had to contend against, and expressed the hope that if a single standard must prevail it would be a silver one. In concluding he referred to the people of the West and their labors, and said when he reflected upon the burdens they bore he was astonished at their moderation. After Mr. Ingalls' speech, and an explanation by Mr. Lamar of the reasons that impelled him to vote against the bill, notwithstanding the instructions of his State Legislature, the Senate began voting on the various amendments. The motion to strike out the free-coinage feature was the first in order. This was adopted by a vote of 49 yeas to 22 nays. Mr. Edmunds then submitted the following amendment: "But nothing in this section contained shall be construed to interfere with the coinage of gold and subsidiary silver coins as now authorized by law." After a lengthy discussion this was rejected—yeas, 23; nays, 46. The question then recurred on the second section of the bill reported by the Committee on Finance, providing for an international commission to adopt a common ratio of legal tender as between gold and silver. After considerable debate, Mr. Allison modified the amendment by striking out the words "of legal tender," so that the conference should be to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver without reference to legal tender. The amendment as modified was agreed to—yeas, 40; nays, 30. Mr. McDonald submitted an amendment to the clause making the silver dollar a legal tender for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise provided by contract, so as to read, instead of provided by, expressly stipulated in, the contract. Agreed to—yeas, 37; nays, 35. Mr. Booth offered the following amendment: "That any holder of coin authorized by this act may deposit the same with the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States, in sums not less than $10, and receive therefor certificates of not less than $10 each, corresponding with denominations of United States notes. The coin deposited for or representing certificates shall be retained in the treasury for the payment of the same on demand. Said certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued." Adopted—49 to 14. After a session lasting nearly all night, the Bland Silver bill, so amended, was passed by a vote of 48 to 21.

House.—The House spent the entire day in debating a bill to pay certain Southern mail contractors a claim amounting to $375,000. No action was taken on the bill.

Monday, Feb. 18.—Senate.—The bill to enable Indians to become citizens was taken up, and Mr. Whyte spoke in opposition.... Mr. Bayard presented the petition of the National Liberal League, signed by the officers thereof and 10,650 persons residing in every State of the Union, favoring the adoption of an amendment to the constitution separating church and state.... The resolution of Mr. Beck to have an inquiry into the legislation needed to prevent the introduction of yellow fever into the country was adopted.... Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill to reinstate certain officers of the United States army. ....The bill for the relief of settlers on public lands under the Pre-emption laws was passed.

House.—The Silver bill, as passed by the Senate, was returned to the House and placed upon the Speaker's table. Bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Robertson, a resolution of the Louisiana Assembly in favor of the Texas Pacific bill and the Bland Silver bill; by Mr. Southard, a joint resolution of the Ohio Legislature declaring United States bonds payable, principal and interest, in silver at the option of the Government, and declaring further that President Hayes and Secretary Sherman, in their opposition to the Silver bill, do not represent the views of the people of Ohio; by Mr. Riddle, to prohibit the organization of National Banking Associations under the existing laws, and re-charter those now in operation; by Mr. Burchard, to promote the deposit of savings, and the re-funding of the national debt; by Mr. Corlett, to incorporate the National Pacific railroad; by Mr. Garfield, to provide for a more thorough investigation of railroad accidents; by Mr. Banks, granting the privilege of the floor to one representative of every newspaper having daily telegraphic communication with Washington.

Tuesday, Feb. 19.—Senate.—Mr. Spencer, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably on the bill for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon General in the army.... Mr. Ferry called up the Senate bill to regulate the compensation of Postmasters, and for other purposes, which was discussed at some length. During the debate a strong sentiment in favor of the restoration of the franking privilege was developed among the Senators.... The Senate devoted the afternoon to the consideration of a bill so amending the laws granting pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812 as to pension all who served for fourteen days, and also restoring to the pension-rolls the names of all survivors which were stricken from the rolls in consequence of participation in the rebellion. Senator Oglesby opposed the bill. He had voted to pension those soldiers of the war of 1812 who had served sixty days, and was willing to pension those who had served only fourteen days; but he will not aid in restoring to the rolls those who had been pensioned by a grateful country, but who had deserted that country in its hour of need, and who would not now ask to be forgiven. It was unfair to the Southern men who had accepted the situation, and who had asked to have their disabilities removed. Mr. Blaine advocated the restoration of the Southern pensioners to the rolls. Mr. Oglesby moved to strike out the section of the bill which restored disloyal pensioners, but his motion was lost by a vote of 7 yeas against 60 nays. The yeas were: Anthony, Cameron of Wisconsin, Edmunds, McMillan, Morrill, Oglesby and Teller. The bill was then passed by a vote of 47 yeas against 8 nays.

House.—The feature of the House proceedings was the delivery of a speech by Eugene Hale, of Maine, in which he made a sharp attack on the President's Southern policy, the occasion being furnished by the bringing up of the eternal Louisiana question through the contested-election case of Acklin vs. Darrall. Gen. Garfield vigorously defended the President against the attacks of Hale.

Wednesday, Feb. 20.—Senate.—Mr. Cockrell submitted a resolution instructing the Commissioner of Agriculture to furnish to the Senate such information and facts as may be in his possession relative to the disease of hogs, commonly called "hog cholera," with such suggestions as he may deem pertinent. Agreed to.... Mr. Sargent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, with an amendment, the Senate bill for the transfer of the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department.... The Senate, by a vote of 33 to 21, put an amendment to the bill regulating the salaries of Postmasters, restoring the franking privilege to the President, Vice President, Senators, Representatives, the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House. The amendment allows all matter bearing the frank of any of the above officers, to the amount of two ounces, to pass through the mails free. As amended, the bill was passed.

House.—The House devoted the entire day to the discussion of the contested-election case of Acklin vs. Darrall, from the Fourth Louisiana District—the Speaker having decided that it was not in order to take up the Silver bill. After a lengthy debate, the House decided, by a vote of 130 to 118, to seat Acklin, the Democratic contestant. All those voting yea were Democrats, with one exception—Mr. Cox, of Ohio. All the nays were Republicans.

Thursday, Feb. 21.—Senate.—Mr. Spencer introduced a bill to provide for a military post for the protection of the citizens of the Black Hills.... Mr. Windom presented a memorial in favor of the improvement of the Ohio river.... The Senate spent three hours in executive session over contested nominations. The three which caused most of the debate were Williamson, Collector of New Orleans; Northrup, District Attorney for South Carolina, and Smith, Collector of Mobile. The debate developed the fact that the Republican Senators are, if anything, more united against the President than at any previous period. Williamson's name was rejected by a large majority—the Democrats voting in a body against him, and only fifteen Republicans supporting the nomination. In the case of Northrup, the friend of Wade Hampton, the Democrats voted solidly for him, while all the Republicans opposed him except Messrs. Dawes, Hoar, Burnside, and Matthews. Mr. Christiancy, who generally votes to sustain the President, on this occasion opposed Northrup, and he was barely saved by the four mentioned. The result of the day was to show that the five Republicans last named constitute all that can be fairly counted as Administration strength in the Senate. Smith was confirmed as Collector of Mobile by a vote of 26 to 23.

House.—The House, after a six hours' struggle, passed the Senate Silver bill without amendment. The most determined fight was made against the bill by a few greenback-silver men and the opponents of silver, but at every stage they were defeated by a vote of 204 against 72. The first opposition came from the extreme silver men under the lead of Mr. Springer. The point made was that the amendment providing for an international commission, in that it made no appropriation of money, must be considered first in committee of the whole. The purpose of this motion was to force the bill where it would be open to unlimited debate. A protracted debate followed upon this parliamentary technicality, with the result that Speaker Randall ruled that the point was not well taken; that inasmuch as the majority could ultimately decide, it was unjust to place the absolute power of objection with one member. Mr. Cox, of New York, who finally voted for the Senate bill, appealed from the Speaker's decision, but the latter was sustained by 223 to 28. The previous question was then ordered without difficulty, and an hour's debate followed. Probably there never were so many speeches in one hour. At the end of the debate a desperate effort was made by the opponents of the silver measure to defeat it by sustaining Mr. Hewitt's motion to table. The result was to show their complete helplessness, the vote standing yeas, 72; nays, 204. The 72 votes were almost exclusively cast by Eastern men. Voting then proceeded on the Senate amendments. They were all concurred in, in rapid succession, by about the same majority cast in the final passage. The amendments having been disposed of, the bill was put to a vote and passed—yeas, 204; nays, 72, as follows:

Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego.

Some persons have doubted whether the Babylonians were guilty of such "extreme cruelty" as to cast persons alive into a burning, fiery furnace, as in the case of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, mentioned by Daniel iii: 26). They are strangely forgetful of innumerable fiery martyrdoms, very much more slow in their torture, and therefore more cruel, than the seven-times heated furnace of Babylon. Mr. H. F. Talbot has discovered ample proof in the Assyrian writings that both this punishment, and that of casting men alive into a den of lions, as Daniel was treated, were in common use at Babylon during the reign of Assurbanipal, who preceded Nebuchadnezzar on the throne by less than twenty years. Saulmugina, the younger brother of Assurbanipal, having risen in rebellion against his sovereign, and having failed in the attempt, was not spared by his angry brother. The following brief record is sufficient to tell its own terrible tale: "My rebellious brother, Saulmugina, who made war with me, was cast into a burning, fiery furnace." Many of Saulmugina's adherents were treated in the same manner, and the remainder were otherwise disposed of in the following way, as Assurbanipal very pithily says: "The rest of the people I threw among bulls and lions, as my grandfather, Sennacherib, used to do; and I, following his example, have thus treated these rebellious men." Truly may we exclaim, with the Psalmist, "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty."—London Quarterly Review.

PRESIDENT HAYES AS A LOVER.

How He Wooed and Won Miss Lucy Ware Webb.

[Washington Cor. Boston Post.]

It is nearly forty years since Rutherford B. Hayes, a mere lad, visiting the town of Chillicothe, Ohio, met his future wife, then a little girl 8 or 10 years of age. It was a boyish fancy on his part, but attraction is so characteristic of the Webb family that those who knew her mother and were intimate with the family say that the charm which beguiled young Rutherford has clung to all her kindred. Dr. Webb died about 1843, leaving the widow with two boys and a girl to educate. A devoted mother at once laid aside all thought of herself, and resolved to spend the remainder of her days in the development of her children. Joseph and James were placed at school at the Wesleyan College in the town of Delaware, Ohio, and thither Mrs. Webb removed with her daughter. Delaware was at that time the home also of Mr. Hayes. The boyish fancy had not lost any of its charms, and, though young, Hayes was now man grown. He still clung with affectionate regard to the sweet face which met him in childhood's simplicity as he walked through the streets of his native town. The Webb boys finished their collegiate course, and now the daughter, budding into womanhood, must have her share of the polish and refinement of the education of the gentler sex. Rev. Dr. McCabe, the President of the college at Delaware, pointed out the Wesleyan Female College at Cincinnati as the most admirable of the female institutions of learning in the West, and so the mother and sons removed to that city, the latter studying for the medical profession, while the mother and her daughter made their home at the college. While she was here young Hayes, who had entered the bar, also removed to Cincinnati to practice his profession. Gen. R. B. Mitchell and Congressman S. S. Cox both relate their recollections of the buoyant and modest young man who boarded at the same residence—a large house, kept by a Mrs. Folsom—and how he was then striving to build up a business and gain professional fame. He had been in the city but a short time when it seemed to him equally to be his duty to look after a partner in life, and the one thought emboldened him to call upon Miss Lucy Webb at the college. His card was handed to Miss Webb, who had forgotten she ever knew such a person as R. B. Hayes, and was still further convinced that there must be a mistake on his part in sending for her. As she came into the parlor, on the ground floor of the building, and saw Mr. Hayes, she protested that he had made a mistake, that she did not know him and it was not necessary to further explain why he had intruded himself. A lawyer was not to be put down with any such special pleading, and, recalling events of twelve years past, he convinced the young lady that, if she did not remember the visitor, at least he had the advantage of a multitude of facts to prove that he had known her from early childhood. And so the spell which had led him captive so many years took them both back to the beginning, and she, recognizing in his fidelity the creation of her own charms, received his devotion, and with it the affection which had nurtured it. While Mrs. Webb was completing the arrangements for her daughter's wedding, the excellent bridegroom won an important case in the courts, and the happy couple found the course of their love running smoothly.

The large number of negroes who have rented land in Alabama and gone to farming for themselves, has caused a great scarcity of hands among land-owners who desire to farm their own land.

Since Adrian V., elected in 1522, all the Popes have been Italians.

SILVER REMONETIZATION.

Synopsis of Senator Jones' Great Speech—The Tactics Adopted by Eastern Capitalists Fearlessly Exposed.

The speech of Hon. John P. Jones, of Nevada, in favor of the restoration of the silver dollar, delivered recently in the United States Senate, is pronounced the ablest that has been made upon that subject, and he has been the recipient of congratulations from both the friends and opponents of the measure upon the exceedingly terse, direct and lucid presentation of his facts and figures. There was not much rhetoric in the speech, and it was delivered at the rate of 200 words a minute, but he meant what he said, and his meaning was unmistakable. The facts were new, many of them, and that was a remarkable thing after so many speeches on the subject. The figures were fresh, and the illustrations and similes were original and striking. We present below an abstract of the speech:

Mr. Jones spoke at great length, most of his speech being devoted to an argument showing that silver has depreciated in value since its demonetization, and against the assertions that the dollar proposed by the bill is a dishonoring medium of payment and a depreciated coin. He said that silver since 1873, although discrowned and shorn of its monetary function, denied mintage throughout the western world, and degraded to the rank of a commodity, instead of having become less valuable, has nevertheless increased in its command over services and all kinds of property; that both gold and silver have gained in purchasing power, and that silver only seems to have fallen in value because it has not risen to so great an extent as gold. In the face of these potent and accumulative facts, it is still claimed that silver has depreciated to such a degree that it would be dishonest to pay debts in it, even if it would legally discharge them. An eminent jurist once said of a certain legal proposition that he could not conceive of a human mind so constituted as to entertain it. I am equally incompetent to conceive of a human mind so constituted as not to see that silver has appreciated rather than fallen in value, and that gold has been so enormously enhanced in value that to gratuitously require debts to be paid in it is either the most gigantic folly or the most gigantic fraud of all the ages.

Mr. Jones denounced as false the charges that he has individual interests to be subserved by remonetizing silver, and in conclusion said: "Leaving personal and local matters aside, I will conclude with a brief reference to the frantic appeals that come to us from certain quarters to rally to the rescue of the ancient honor of the republic, which, it is declared, is now held aloft by less than a dozen States in the Union. It is said that this nation will lose the high position which it has maintained for a hundred years in the family of nations if the pending bill shall pass. It is said that even the discussion of a measure to restore to the country power to perform its contracts on the terms in which they are written has, to no inconsiderable extent, disparaged us in the eyes of the world. Whence come the really dangerous assaults upon the good name of the nation? Is it not from certain members of Congress, who denounce this as a 'pickpocket bill,' and as a scheme to issue clipped coins, forgetting that the clippings were stolen from the pockets of the people, and are now found in the pockets of their creditors? And is it not from the leading Metropolitan and Eastern press, which denounces the supporters of the bill as swindlers and repudiators, and declares itself to have the honor of this nation in its special charge? By what title does any faction set itself up as being, par excelence, the guardian of the honor of the country? Sir, the honor can repose nowhere so securely as in the keeping and hearts of the people. There is its shrine, and there alone can it find protection. In what manner and by what methods has the New York and Eastern press sustained the honor of the nation of which it proclaims itself the special guardian? Only by libels upon the character and personal motives of every public man who cannot see the justice of robbing the Government and the people by enhancing the value of the money in which their debts are to be paid; by open and shameless appeals to the President to make a corrupt use of his patronage to influence votes in Congress against the Silver bill, and by a pretension as false as it is humiliating that Congress dares not resist the decrees of organized capital."

He then quoted from the New York Tribune of Jan. 7, as follows: "The President knows that men can be held true to Republican pledges as to finance if they know that their truth will mean favor as to appointments." Three days later the same paper said: "The capital of the country is organized at last, and we shall see whether Congress will dare to fly in its face." These newspapers claim to be read largely in Europe. What impression of our people and our public affairs and public men is likely to prevail in Europe which sees those American newspapers in which the majority in Congress is daily denounced as made up of silver swindlers, repudiators or heretics? and in which it is daily represented that Congress can be corrupted by the President's patronage and intimidated by the threats of organized capital? What better than a roaring farce is it for the editors engaged in this work of defamation to style themselves the peculiar champions of the honor of the nation? The attempt to persuade the President to use his patronage as a corrupting agency seeming to have failed, and Congress, by votes at various times and in decisive numbers, having exhibited a determination to 'fly in the face of the organized capital of the country,' the latest movement has been to defame those who could neither be purchased nor intimidated. No longer invoking the President to buy Senators, these gold organs charge that Senators have sought to sell their votes, and we are treated to lengthy homilies on the decaying morality of this body. The same men who day after day have declared that it was the most urgent duty of the chief magistrate to trade patronage for votes in favor of what is called honest money now shed tears over a story of their own invention, that members of this body have been waiting, watching, hoping, and asking to be bribed. The New York Times of the 12th inst. editorially says: 'The United States Senate has sunk so far below the standard with which it was formerly associated that the proposition which we yesterday gave as in circulation at Washington excites little or no surprise. There are Senators who have so little intelligence and principle that they do not know their own minds in regard to the silver question, or so little conscience that they are ready to vote for or against the pending bill. They imagine that it is popular. Provided they receive a quid pro quo, however, they are willing to run the risk of unpopularity. They are ready, in short, to sell their votes to the President and aid in defeating the bill if he will only pay their price. It is hinted that, by adopting the bribery plan, the President may not only defeat the Bland bill but may also establish amicable relations between his administration and the Senators who are at present inimical.' The explanation does but add to the disgrace of those who offer it. It was Joab who said to Amasa 'Art thou in health, my brother?' and 'so he smote him in the fifth rib.' The journals from which I have quoted seem to have been equally solicitous concerning the national honor, and, while tenderly inquiring as to his health, deal deadly stabs like these. In this country the national honor had never been tarnished by those who proposed to restore the ancient money in which every national bond is promised to be paid. If it is in danger of being tarnished it is from the charges of the opposing faction that a majority of the citizens of a majority of the States of this Union are innately dishonest. Let the press of this country not forget that while power usually begets intolerance, it always begets resistance. It is boastfully declared that capital is now 'organized at last, and we shall see whether Congress will dare to fly in its face.' How long is it since the slaveholders of this country, intoxicated by long possession of absolute sway, declared that cotton was king, and that grass should grow in the streets of the Northern cities if its regal prerogatives were interfered with. The Southern men who hear me know that it was arrogance together with irresponsible power, the dominating spirit engendered by slavery, which provoked and precipitated the revolution which destroyed it. Are the same people who carried that revolution through fire and blood on the bayonets of 3,000,000 men likely to be patient under the taunt that their chosen representatives sitting here under the dome of this Capitol dare not fly in the face of the organized money-lenders and bondholders of the country? Thank God and the Declaration of Independence and the patient heroism that made it a vitalizing force and the constitution that crystallized it into law, the people of this country are furnished with a better method of righting wrongs and asserting rights than a resort to arms, and, with no less resolution and enthusiasm than wars against oppression inspire, they will in peaceful methods and under the forms of law trample under foot any power that seeks, through corruption or intimidation, to intrench itself in the citadel of their liberties. They will see to it that this remains a popular government in fact as well as in name, and, in spite of the craft and cunning wiles of the wicked, that their representatives in this Capitol register through constitutional laws their imperial will."

PAST AND PRESENT.

The Edinburg Review of 1830 Describes Our Ills, the Cause and the Cure—A Complete Parallel in History.

[From the National Republican.]

From 1797 to 1823 England used an exclusive paper currency. The mighty struggle with Napoleon carried all her coin to the continent. Convertibility of paper bank-notes became impossible, and in 1797 the Bank of England was forbidden to pay coin for its bills. The circulation thus relieved of the arbitrary limits imposed by convertibility expanded to meet the demands of the nation. It enabled England to sustain her decimated and despairing allies and to destroy the armies of Napoleon. It gave to her the most wonderful development and a glory and prosperity unexampled in her history. Like our own greenback, it proved her savior in war and her benefactor in peace.

But, when the armies of Napoleon no longer threatened their possessions, an army of bullionists, bondholders, annuitants and "wreckers" at once came down to prey upon the substance of the people. They demanded that specie payments should be resumed, and all the debts incurred under the paper standard should be doubled by being made payable in coin. Against the protest of all the practical business men of that time, these conspirators, aided by the doctrinaires, passed the Resumption act of 1819, to take effect in 1823. As with us they gave four years' notice, humanely cutting off the nation's right arm "an inch at a time." The same process was used on us by our McCullochs and Shermans. The currency was contracted in volume, so as to make it scarce and dear, and thus enable the fundholder and mortgagee to obtain a vastly greater amount of the products of labor for its use. As a resumption of specie payments it was a miserable fraud and a disgraceful failure.

As a means of bringing measureless ruin upon a prosperous and happy people it was a magnificent success, equaled only by the wretched cheat of "resumption by destruction" which is being crowded down the throats of Americans to-day by the modern "pirates of 'change.'"

The Edinburgh Review of 1830 contains a picture drawn nearly fifty years ago, in whose lineaments we can see the counterpart of our own country to-day. That conservative and authoritative journal has painted, with the utmost minuteness of detail, a faithful portraiture of the United States in this crisis. Let every thoughtful citizen read, think, and resolve. The article from which we quote is upon "The Cause of the National Distress," and is written seven years after the so-called Resumption act took effect. It first ably disposes of the flippant and shallow excuses of a returning peace and overproduction, as the cause of the widespread suffering. It points out clearly the true cause in the appreciation of the value of money, and its increased power over production and trade. It says:

> Peace may perhaps account for a lowering of the rate of profit, but it affords no explanation for a fall in prices exceeding the reduction in cost.
>
> The sinking credit of all engaged in production or trade, and the general despondency attest that prices have been constantly impelled below cost. The steadiest industry can no longer insure success. The best-founded expectations end in disappointment. The wisest schemes lead only to ruin. It is not one branch of industry only that feels the pressure of the times—all are equally borne down by the oppression.
>
> A rise in the value of money is, in a national point of view, an unmitigated evil. It is by no means the direct consequences of such a rise that constitutes its greatest evil.
>
> The addition which the rise causes in the pressure of every debt, every tax—in short, every fixed money claim—cannot be avoided. Were the use generally understood beforehand it would not cause half of the distress which it does now, owing to its silent and unsuspected progress. There is a popular disposition to regard the measure as invariable. Thence the universal perseverance of accounting for the fall of prices by any cause other than this; thence the indulgence of hopes and reliance on calculations founded on past experience exciting to activity, when the knowledge of the real cause would dictate a strictly passive attitude to all engaged in business. If we consider that capital to an immense amount has been destroyed, suffering, moral and physical, to a harrowing extent, inflicted, we shall see the urgent necessity of promulgating accurate knowledge on this subject, which is the main cause of the present distress. In the procession of sufferers precedence is given on every ground to those who derive their income from the soil. In the direct ratio to the rise in value of money the pressure of rent and taxes on land increases, while at the same time the fall in the elementary cost of production is much slower than in that of prices in market. The year's product fails to meet the outgoes, and the farmer makes up the deficiency from his capital. The next year it is no better; still he feels confident that better times will soon come, because he cannot see the invisible hand which relentlessly perseveres in depriving him of his toil. But the years roll on and bring no relief, until his capital is exhausted and ruin ensues. As long as money rises in value the destruction of capital invested in farming goes steadily on.
>
> The manufacturer comes next. Calculating on the stability of money, he erects works, buys material, and puts his goods upon the market. But he finds, to his dismay, that prices have fallen below the cost of production. Unconscious of the true cause of his failure, he ascribes it to transitory conditions, soon to pass away. He returns to his work, hoping for better success next year; but again and again is the result the same. Disheartened by the badness of the times, the prudent man limits his operations, the adventurous redoubles his exertions only to sink at length into bankruptcy. By this process one-half the capital invested in machinery has been lost during the last fifteen years. The laborers share in the misery, and, while the same cause continues to operate, the numbers that are thrown out of employment continue to increase. Oppressed alike by idleness and want, they are seen lounging about the places of their former activity, suggesting the image of the suffering groups that stretch around the pool of Bethesda in listless expectation for the delivering angel to touch the stagnant waters. The merchant also finds all his calculations end in disappointment. The general distress diminishes consumptive demand and aggravates the fatal tendency of the appreciating currency to depress values. If he thinks "this unnatural state of things cannot continue," and thus fortifies himself against doubts, ruin overtakes him. If he limits his operations to the preservation of what he has already acquired it is a paralysis of trade. Sooner or later the suffering reaches all classes, coming at last to the bankers and dealers in money. With rueful countenance they bring up the rear in this general muster of pursuits. Alarmed by oft-recurring disasters, the capitalist recalls his loans from trade "as from a burning city devoted to destruction."
>
> Deprived of his best customers—the productive classes—he waits in vain for an effective demand in the money market, and, though he reduces the interest again and again, a large portion of it will still remain unemployed, and thus his income is reduced. In the midst of the general distress the fundholder and the annuitant, the man and pensioner, and the mortgagee are the only real gainers. The purchasing power of their income has vastly increased, and thus the weight of their claims on the productive class has been made proportionately heavier. In fact, the whole sum of additional enjoyment gained by the former has been lost by the latter, and so long as the same cause operates the spoliation will continue. Such are some of the effects of a rise in the price of money. In proportion as they are unsuspected or defied they are destructive. In proportion as a community is wealthy and productive they will be severely and acutely felt. Is the momentum of the ball exhausted, or is it still in operation? If the latter, when will it terminate? and, lastly, what remedies does the cause admit of?
>
> We can get no more metals, but we may diminish the demand for them by the substitution of paper money—"by a rehabilitation of the condemned paper circulation." A reformer of the English banking system is all that is needed for England.

How Indians Hunt Buffalo.

The commandant of a post generally gives the Indians under his control permission to go on a buffalo hunt about twice a year. A party from 200 to 300 is allowed to go out at once, and may be out for from thirty to ninety days, being, during that time, accompanied by two or three soldiers from the garrison. The party is divided and the herd is surrounded, the circuit being about a half mile in diameter. When about half way around the signal is given to charge, and the bucks commence to ply their arrows. The excited buffaloes run backward and forward, until probably one-fifth of them are killed, when the hunt is temporarily over, at least. The squaws have, in the meantime, come along and picked up their husbands' clothing, and follow after to complete the work of the chase. The buck, having shot his buffalo, rushes forward to pass the animal over, so that he will not fall on the side which the arrow has pierced and break it. He cuts the arrow out of its place, puts it back in his quiver, and then marks the buffalo with his peculiar brand, which may be a cut in the nostril, in the ear, thigh, or some other part of the body. Here again then the squaw gets her onerous share of the work in. She distinguishes the animal her buck has slain, skins it, cuts the meat away from the bones in the most convenient and hurried manner, and packs it to where the bucks have already made a permanent camp, in the vicinity of the nearest water.—St. Louis Post.

THE ELECTORAL DISPUTE.

Passionate Debate in the National House of Representatives, in Which Much Political Scandal is Rake Up—Charges, Counter-Charges, Explanations and Denials.

Mr. Hewitt, of New York—The gentleman (Mr. Aiken, of South Carolina) insinuates that somebody sold out the Presidency. No Northern man sold out the Presidency. The proposition to sell the Presidency was made to me, and I contemptuously refused it.

Mr. Hewitt proceeded to recount the facts connected with a proposition made to him by Col. Pickett (as coming from J. H. Maddox, Special Agent of the Treasury Department) to pay J. Madison Wells, Chairman of the Returning Board of Louisiana, for giving the count of that State to Mr. Tilden, all of which was testified to by Mr. Hewitt before the committee of the House at the last session.

And now, said he, in conclusion, I ask the gentleman from South Carolina (Aiken) to tell me by what right he turns on me and accuses me of selling the Presidency.

After the decision of the Electoral Tribunal in the Louisiana case had been announced it became apparent to me, as it did to every intelligent person who studied the situation, that the decision of the Electoral Commission would award the Presidency to Hayes. Of course, I felt it was a great grievance, but I felt that we had submitted that question to the tribunal, and that we were bound and concluded by its decision, and I told everybody that I should vote to sustain every decision of the tribunal, no matter what the consequence might be. But I did not see any reason why, because Mr. Hayes was going into the Presidency, I should ignore the fact that there was a large number of gentlemen in the House who did not look on the question as I did, and that they had told me the count should never be completed. On that statement I reflected, and I said to myself, Unless it is understood that the troops shall be withdrawn from Louisiana and South Carolina civil war will surely break out, for the members from Louisiana assured me that their people would no longer submit to military domination. I knew if they resisted, other Southern States would be in honor bound to help them, and I thought that if I could not save the Presidency from the wreck there was not any good reason why South Carolina and Louisiana should not be saved from it. Thereupon, of my own motion, I went to my friend from Ohio (Foster) and made to him pretty much the remark that I now make. The reason why I went to him was because he had made a speech on this floor in which he declared what the President's policy would be, and he believed it, and I believed it. I said to that gentleman, "I fear there will be trouble unless you can satisfy these Southern gentlemen this policy which you have declared to be the policy of the incoming administration will be adhered to." He said to me, "What can I do?" I said, "I do not know. It is not my business, but I tell you the facts." He said, "I will see about it," and subsequently (I think the next day) he came back to me and showed me a letter signed by Mr. Hayes, which letter has since been published. I read it. He said, "Will that be satisfactory?" I said, "Mr. Foster, it is not me whom you have to satisfy; it is other gentlemen. To me it would not be satisfactory, but you must go to them and satisfy them that this policy will be carried out." That was the last interview I had with Mr. Foster on the subject. What followed came to me from other persons. I had no part in a bargain, if it was made. I knew nothing of its terms, but I was told on the day the Vermont return had been put through the joint convention tha these gentlemen from South Carolina were satisfied, and that there could be no good reason why the count should not proceed. I do not know how they were satisfied. I have never seen any member from Louisiana about it. I only know that they told me they were satisfied, and in so far as I had any influence I exerted it for the completion of the count. I did it in the interest of peace. I did it in the interest of my country. I believe that I did then the wisest and best act of my life so far as I had any connection with matters. If other men made improper bargains, I know nothing of them. Have I answered the gentleman's (Ellsworth's) question to his satisfaction?

Mr. Finley said, in his opinion the time of the House had been spent more foolishly to-day than on any day of this session. The gentleman from New York (Hewitt) had stated that a proposition had been made to him by J. Madison Wells to sell out the Presidency. He (Finley) desired to add that the hoary-headed old rascal and his fellow-conspirators had been indicted in Louisiana, and that one of them had been convicted; and yet, to-day, members of Congress, of the House and Senate, and members of the Cabinet, were sending to this convicted criminal letters of condolence. Not only that, but, if the papers spoke truly, there was even now a serious discussion in the Cabinet over a proposition of sending the army.

Mr. Townsend—They should not have been taken away into Louisiana to wrest from the hands of the law the convicted criminal.

Mr. Foster said that it had not been his good fortune to hear the opening remarks of the gentleman from New York (Hewitt), but in the remainder of his statement there was really nothing which had not been published to the world time and again, unless it was a statement that he had reason to believe that some bargain had been made with some Louisiana gentleman. There had been no bargain made so far as he (Foster) was concerned. He never knew of any. For himself, he had confessed that he felt great solicitude at the condition of the country. He had desired a peaceful solution of the Electoral Count bill. He had voted for it against many of his party friends, because he believed it was immensely more important to the country that the question should be settled in a peaceful, orderly manner, than that either Hayes or Tilden should be President. When the filibustering movement had been commenced on the Democratic side he had again become solicitous about the happiness of the people. The question of peace or strife had been involved. He had thought then that he knew what Gov. Hayes' feelings were on the question of local self-government. He had made public proclamation of that in his place on the floor, and Gov. Hayes had thanked him for making it, and that was the letter to which so much reference had been made. He did not know that at that time the gentleman from New York (Hewitt) was playing any important part in that case until after he had come to him (Foster) to inquire something about it. At that time he (Hewitt) was not a great factor in the problem. The other gentleman from New York (Wood) was conducting the Democratic anti-filibustering movement. He (Foster) had labored simply for the peaceful execution of the Electoral bill without exacting any promises except stating what he had believed would be the policy of President Hayes. No one thing was done anywhere or in any place, and he defied mortal man to bring evidence to that effect, that obliged anybody to do anything in consideration of anything being done by the other side.

Mr. Garfield said, when the decision of the Electoral Tribunal was announced, there were between thirty and forty gentlemen on the other side, most of whom had been in arms against the United States, who believed in their honor they were bound to stand by the result. They did so, and they resisted like patriots every effort to break up this count and bring this country into civil war. The country will not believe that after they declared their purpose to do so they stained their honor by doing what they were doing as a matter of trade; and I do not believe it. The man who resisted the filibustering on that side did it on high grounds of national duty and their consciences as men, and if there be a mortal man in this world who says they traded, I believe that that man lies. I say it for them, and if there be a man in this world that says that any man on this side of the House, or the President, or any man for the President, made a trade, I hope he will exhibit the trade, and let the scoundrel who made it, or who authorized it, be lashed naked through the world. But I believe that the man who alleges that there was such a trade is either a deceived and fooled man or a liar. Let us have done with this nonsense about trading Presidencies and selling Presidencies. What man here had a Presidency for sale or was in the market to buy a Presidency? Let the man who has such wares for sale show them, and not thunder in the index, but let the body of his work show he has the manufactures he proposes to sell. In regard to what has been said about the withdrawal of troops from Louisiana, I disclaim, for one, in so far as my disclaimer goes for anything, that the troops were withdrawn as a matter of policy or conciliation. They were withdrawn as a matter of constitutional duty, and as such I defend the withdrawal. But the evils which have followed and the truculent spirit exhibited by some gentlemen in Louisiana is a poor recompense for the efforts of our people to restore to the whole country the spirit of peace and conciliation.

Mr. Southard—Will the gentleman say what the truculent spirit is?

Speaker Randall (in a low tone from the Clerk's desk)—"Punishing the guilty."

Mr. Garfield—The persecution, the outrageous persecution which is following the members of the Returning Board in the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Hale, referring to Finley's denunciation of J. Madison Wells as an old rascal, and of his fellow-members of the Returning Board of Louisiana as conspirators, and of others who had been sending letters of condolence to the condemned criminal, said he himself (Hale) was one of those who had been invited to Louisiana after the Presidential election to see that there was a fair count. He had gone there because he knew the spirit which had for years prevailed in the Democratic party there was sufficiently active to flame again, and to make the streets of New Orleans run with blood. He went on to defend the action of the Returning Board, and particularly to show that the returns from Vernon parish had been published in the newspapers before one claim had been set up that there had been fraud or alteration in them. The Returning Board had eliminated certain votes which were claimed to have been cast through intimidation and fraud, and through the overawing influence of armed bodies of men in that State. The action of the Returning Board had been sustained by the Electoral Commission, and following that Hayes had been inaugurated. He did not know what the agreement was, did not know that any existed, but he knew that, whether the troops had been withdrawn from Louisiana for constitutional reasons or as a matter of conciliation, the Nicholls Legislature had passed a resolution that it would discountenance any political prosecutions, and he knew and believed that the prosecution of members of the Returning Board were of that kind. He had signed the dispatch referred to, because he did not believe these men ought to be abandoned, or that the administration ought to abandon them.

Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, who had been out of the hall during the discussion, and who had evidently been ill-informed of the purpose of Hewitt's remarks about him, obtained the floor, and, assuming that Hewitt had held himself and his colleagues responsible for the Presidential bargain, declared that the lip which uttered the assertion that Louisiana or any representative of Louisiana had ever bartered or sought to barter or entertain a proposition to barter away the interests of the Democratic party or interests of the whole people of the Union in the election of Samuel J. Tilden lied in heart and lied in his foul throat. He then went on to relate the conference at Wormley's Hotel, mentioning as the actors on that occasion, himself, E. A. Burke, of Louisiana, and Henry Watterson, of Kentucky, on the Democratic side, and on the Republican side Mr. Garfield, Mr. Foster, ex-Gov. Dennison, Stanley Matthews, and Senator (now Secretary) Sherman. He declared there was no bargain; that the only matter which transpired was an interchange of views, and that he and his friends relied upon the assurances of Mr. Hayes' close friends as to what were his views and sentiments in regard to Louisiana and South Carolina. These gentlemen had pledged nothing for Mr. Hayes. They had bound him by no promise, by no pledge. The language they had held was: "We know him; we know his sentiments toward the South. We know he believes in the self-government of those States, and, without speaking authoritatively for him, we will say that, in our opinion, he will give the blessing of free government to those States; that he will lift them from the blood and dust in which they have been trampled, and that (in the language of Mr. Foster) the flag shall float there over free States, and no longer over conquered and abject provinces."

Subsequently Mr. Ellis again obtained the floor to make a personal explanation, and retracted all the offensive allusion to Mr. Hewitt in his remarks, saying he had been assured by that gentleman and other friends that he had been misinformed.

For the hour or two that this personal and political skirmish lasted the scenes in the House were of a highly excited character. The members on the Republican side seemed to enjoy keenly the internecine war on the opposite side of the chamber, and were most eager in the encouragement of Aiken, Ellis, and other antagonists whom Hewitt had on hand, and Conger was constantly and irrepressibly on his feet, seeking to send poisoned arrows into the enemy's camp.

Spider vs. Parrot.

The correspondent of a French paper relates a remarkable contest which he witnessed in the isle of Java between a parrot and a gigantic spider. The spider, whose body was as large as a small bird's, dropped down upon a young parrot whose mamma was from home, and spreading its huge claws over the nest began sucking its blood. When the mother returned she naturally "went for" the enemy, and seized hold of one of his legs, but whether it be that legs are not a sensitive portion of spiders' organizations, or that this particular insect had an overpowering penchant for the blood of young parrots, he wouldn't let go, until his pain becoming too intense for endurance he turned on the mother, and, twining all his legs firmly around her neck, was just arranging for a good long suck in that quarter when she gave him an awful dig in the belly with her beak, whereupon he fell over, dragging her to the ground with him. The naturalist then shot him and released the parrot.

A Wild Family of the Woods.

There is a family consisting of a man, his wife and seven children now living in the lower part of this county of Texas who stay in the woods without any shelter other than that afforded by the forest trees, and subsist upon acorns, nuts, herbs, rats, birds, fish, frogs, and such other food as they can procure by fishing, foraging and trapping. These people, it is said, came from Southeast Texas, though their true origin is unknown. They are of a wild, uncivilized nature, and when carried to the homes of good people and treated kindly wear an air of discontent, and, after eating in a most gluttonous manner, steal slyly away to the woods.—Jasper County (Mo.) Newsboy.

War's Horrors.

Horrible stories are told by the correspondents in the Russian camps concerning the mortality of sick and wounded prisoners. At Fratesti a correspondent came upon a party of Russian soldiers digging huge graves, and near them were four ghastly piles of dead lying in heaps of four or five feet in thickness, with their ragged and half-clad forms entangled in horrible confusion as they had been emptied out from the dead-carts.

A CHINESE resident of Winnemucca, Nev., informed on the proprietors of four opium-smoking dens, who were fined. For this he was tried and sentenced to death by a secret Mongolian tribunal, and shot down and stabbed on the street at dusk.

Gen. Harney's Foot-Race.

Gen. William S. Harney, of this city, when a young man, had the reputation of being the swiftest runner in the army, as well as the best Indian fighter. He was a strict disciplinarian, but not one of the "stuck-up" sort so common nowadays. He would often mingle with his men, when not on duty, and laugh and joke with them on terms of familiarity, and went so far at times as to compete with them in the exciting sport of foot-racing. An impression prevailed at one time that almost any Indian could outrun a white man; but Gen. Harney believed that he could beat any red rascal that wore moccasins, and, whenever he met a warrior who boasted of his fleetness of foot, he took great pleasure in giving him a trial, and always came out ahead. Only once did he fail to reach the winning-post before his adversary, and that was by a "foul." The affair occurred at Fort Winnebago in the winter of 1830, when Fox river was frozen over and the weather was very cold. An Indian had committed some breach of the rules of the garrison, for which Harney, then a Captain, concluded to administer a flogging. The race was on the ice, which at some places was thinner than at others, on account of the formation of "airholes." Both men wore moccasins, and both were stripped and belted for the race, Harney swinging a cowhide in his hand, with which he confidently expected to accelerate the movements of the Winnebago on overtaking him. At the word "go" both started at full speed, the Indian doing his best to save his hide, and the white man anxious to preserve his reputation as a runner. Harney gained rapidly on the warrior, and was getting ready to swing his rawhide, when the cunning savage made an oblique movement toward a spot where the ice was thin. Being of much lighter weight than his partner, he passed over the dangerous place in safety, but as soon as Harney stepped upon the thin ice it was shivered like glass, and down went the tall Captain, sinking into the cold water like a sea lion. Being a good swimmer, a few strokes brought him to the edge of the thick ice, and clambering upon it he made his way to his quarters, spangled with icicles, and as mad as a buffalo bull. He lost his cowhide in the water, but that was a small matter, as Mr. Winnebago never returned to the fort while the Captain remained there. Capt. Harney's foot-race afforded "old Twiggs" occasion for many a joke, and it was a long time before he heard the last of it.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 28, 1878

DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET FOR 1878.

For Secretary of State,
J. G. SHANKLIN, of Vanderburgh County.
For Auditor of State,
MAHLON D. MANSON, of Montgomery Co.
For Treasurer of State,
WILLIAM FLEMING, of Allen County.
For Attorney General,
THOMAS W. WOOLLEN, of Johnson Co.
For Superintendent of Public Instruction,
J. H. SMART, of Allen County.

—The report of the debate on the silver bill says that Mr. Cox inquired why it was, since the passage of the Silver Bill, gold had gone down? This does play the mischief with the predictions.

—Would it not be a good plan for the press all over the country to demand the retirement of John Sherman from the Treasury department. It is evident he has brass enough to remain there until he is kicked out.

—Mr. Bayard Taylor, the poet and author, has been nominated Minister to Germany. The nomination is a good one—the best that could be made. As nearly all the important missions were farmed out to the men that took part in counting in the fraudulent President this excellent exception is somewhat of a surprise to the people and politicians.

—With pleasure we notice the magnanmity of Mr. Cooper, of Indianapolis who made such a gallent fight in the contest for the Treasurer of State. He came around to see the boys at the Bates' and there expressed his determination to battle for the Democracy just as though he had been nominated. And it was no mere talk either. Mr. Cooper is not an old man yet, and such points as these never fail to meet their reward.

The Hon. Thos. A. Hendricks.

The Cincinnati Enquirer: We have read with care the speech of Governor Hendricks before the Democratic State Convention at Indianapolis, and with pleasure we can say that it is an open, straightforward, manly expression of principles, and is fully in accord with the glorious Democracy of Indiana. Ohio and Indiana are now in harmony on the only question that divides the people of the United States into parties. The platform of principles announced by the Indianapolis Convention speaks the real voice of the people of the west and south, and will soon be taken up by the plundered and oppressed masses in the east. Now, it is in order that the organs of British capitalists and their brethren in crime in the east should begin to denounce and blackguard Tom. Hendricks as a swindler and repudiator.

THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION.

The Democratic State Convention did its work last Wednesday, and did it thoroughly, nobly. It was composed of as fair a representation of intelligence as we ever saw. While at times animated and a little noisy on balloting, it was on the whole a sober, well behaved crowd. There was less drinking and more real enthusiasm than has characterized any convention for years. It was very largely attended, every county being represented, while there were hundreds there not delegates. The balloting on Treasurer became quite warm, but after the nomination, all settled down good-naturedly and the defeated candidates came around at the close with as warm congratulations as any. This spirit, this unity and harmony is always ominous of grand results. The platform is broad and comprehensive, and speaks definitely, decisively and without uncertainty. It is based upon the interest of the people and in their behalf. After the convention, what? Hard persistent work, thorough organization, unity of action, and zealous co-operation in the interest of our common welfare. Let this be our motto, and a grand sweeping victory will reach us in October.

Waterloo Items.

—Prof. Reed's concert at Sedan was well attended considering the condition of the roads. It will be repeated soon.

—F. W. Willis had a lively time with a burning chimney last evening about 10 o'clock. No damage done but a big scare to the inmates of the house.

—The amateur dramatic company of this place, will give their first entertainment on Friday evening, March 8th, in the way of a drama entitled "The Little Brown Jug."

—Prof. S. W. Straub and C. R. Reed are conducting a class in vocal music, and will give a concert next Saturday evening at the Presbyterian church Waterloo's best musical talent are engaged, and "we'll try and keep the gas from going out" W. C.

—George Francis Train has been prophesying to a New York audience. He predicted the pope's death within a few days. He says that before January 1, 1879, William Cullen Bryant, Peter Cooper and Simon Cameron will be dead. Europe is to see many changes in the next twelve months, and that Hayes will be the last president of the United States. Now if Train would only appoint a day for his own funeral, and see that it came off promptly, the world would suffer and be patient yet awhile longer.

Corunna Items.

—Peter Draggoo has sickness in his family. Pete has had bad luck in this line.

—Our German people go by handcar to attend church at Kendallville every Sabbath.

—The mud is deep again, and having no sidewalks in makes is bad for "fashionable calls" and so on, you know.

—School closes Saturday. The teachers are obliged to put in Saturday because they attended a township institute one day.

—Two of our old citizens got into a misunderstanding and settled the same with a "high old famberee." There was no chance for the music of a "Whippie(will) I tell you. It was whole hog or none. Axes were brought into requision and there was no end to the amount of cord wood sticks and fence boards dangling in the air. "Preliminaries" from the mouths of the pugilists rolled heaven-ward as free as the smoke from a railroad engine and the echo was heard for miles on the pure, sweet air. At this period assistance came to "Rescue the fallen

And care for the dying."

and in the struggle to release their mighty grip, a hand full of whiskers was taken from "Sampson," with the hide on one end of them. This of course weakened Mr. S., and with the assistance of several well directed brickbats he succeeded in landing safely on the other side—of the fence. The broken bones of the fence boards were immediately cared for by a proper person, and the injured pugilists are doing as well as could be expected. Time—welt, it was a high old time.

Garrett Items.

—W. J. Fredricks continues convalescent.

—Our Post Master was married Sunday.

—It is reported that Garrett is to have a Baptist Church.

—It is expected that business will be good here next summer.

—The De Kalb House is to be opened the first of the month, by Mr. Bryant.

—There has been considerable of dissatisfaction with the school here this winter.

—It is reported that broom sticks are in good demand among the Revivalists at Cedar Creek.

—Randolph street is to be opened through to Thomas' addition, as soon as the spring will open.

—Garrett is to have a new Hardware store, in Clark's building, S. W corner of King and Randolph streets.

—There was a fight in the post office last week between a one leged lawyer and a farmer. The Garrett "Court" investigated the case.

—Brother Hosier, who has been helping the Methodists all winter, and is the proprietor of a "Clock Shop" and "Tooth Factory," is to be the expounder.

—E. N. Woodford's dwelling house was totally destroyed by fire Sunday night. The family were away from home visiting, and Mr W. was in the house alone at the time the fire broke out. It started in the second story, which was all in flames before it was discovered. Some of the household goods were saved. The building was insured, but it is reported that there is doubts as to the reliability of the Company. People having buildings insured should be cautious and inquire as to the reputation of the company, and also of the agent. X.

St. John and New Era Items.

—Lots of mud.

—Perry and Jake have reformed.

—What has became of Sam Knott, we have not seen him lately.

—Mrs. Fitch, living south, has two of her long absent brothers visiting at her house.

—L. L. Irons and the Polanders, have settled a difficulty about the dollar of their daddies, before Justice Harvey last Monday.

The Huntertown boys, when they come here, are just the least bit too pompous, and carry too many bottles which they guzzel too often.

—Irons talks of buying Broughton out, and himself becoming the veritible villiage store keeper of this burg. We don't know if Broughton will or not, but we just jump at conclusions for the sake of a little excitment.

—G. H. Post, the polite and gentlemanly young agent, of Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. at New Era, has within the past month, shipped large car loads of grain to Toledo, and last week shipped a car load of clover seed to the same place. We think this ought to speak well for a town with a population of four, and two houses, one sawmill, and a hencoop.

—Attendance at the chapel last Sunday night was never better. All the standing room was taken up, and Wes Work and reformed Jake did their best to provide seats, and we should think they rather overdid themselves in their zeal, by bringing in wagon seats, chairs, etc. Sorianx.

—Be wise in time and get a bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, which always cures coughs and colds, and prevent consumption. Price only 25 cents a bottle. Sold in every drug store.

Junction Items.

—B. & O. pay car Wednesday.

—Where, oh where is Britton, with his ark of safety.

—Fonda says Copper and Gale put up a job on him. Ask Susin.

—Another change at Junction depot. Peter B. won't you never let up.

—Ettie and Allie visited the Junction Saturday—for what. Ask Curley.

—Hotel, Baker is filled with boarders. No drummers need apply.

—A portable saddlers shop passed through here this morning. Who ever heard of the like.

—Ed. Lane, the efficient night watchman, makes it lively for the tramps about the Junction. Go in Ed.

—The U. S. mail to and from the Junction is carried by the pony express The pony used is Theo. Swihart.

—Copper, go and buy a pair of gum boots before escorting your Dulcina home from spelling school again.

—There was a dance at La Otto on Friday eve., judging from the looks of the party on their return to the Junction.

—The two females who take such an interest in the railroad boys' affairs will do well to attend to their own business in the future.

—Those boys from Auburn met with poor success in getting three half pint bottles filled at the Junction. Better stay at home, boys, or we will make it plainer next time.

—Spelling school at the Junction on Wednesday evening was a success. The attendance was large and the spelling good. Miss Cora Grube did remarkably well and was the last to leave the floor.

—Our old friend, Mr. Whittington, has been having a holiday for some time. Let up Catawampus, and state to the court what you was doing with those two young men under the buffalo robe after Pop Gun Smith.

—Several car loads of steel rail for the F. W., J. & S. R'y., went north on No. 7 Friday morning; destination, Angola, where they have already some four miles laid. We are informed they will lay steel between Auburn and Auburn Junction. It certainly needs it.

—Jno. Letford, of Jackson, M., is acting as clerk for Mr. Plumstead, agent at the F. W., J. & S. R'y. He relieves Mr. Mulcay, who is appointed agent at Auburn, and Mr. M. relieves Mr. Bradley. We congratulate Dick on his success.

GARRETT, Feb. 26th, '78.

—EDITOR COURIER,—I never wrote any for papers, but my attention was called to an article in the COURIER of last week, written from this place and signed "Filander Fox," which deserves criticising and correcting. The way he starts out he would make the people believe that they never saw anything till he came to Garrett. He commences his story with the proceedings at half past seven, on the evening of Feb. 13th,—then he inquired—dare we conjecture the truth? If he dare, he did not do it. Now, this wonderful sleigh ride was got up in about this style. All day on the 13th of Feb., the instigators of this wondrful party could be seen going around town calling and inviting ladies to participate, whose husbands were away from home. Next, three pair of bobsleds were engaged, one of them having been used for drawing ice, the other for drawing meat from the slaughter house to the market, and the third one for drawing the offal of the town stables out on the farms. At half past seven those three vehicles were packed full of the upper crust of human deception, and whose reputations were thoroughly drenched with a compound solution of actual and original sin. The Altona String Band was engaged, which was composed of an old corn stock fiddler and an etheopian banjo picker, which I presume they employed for about fifteen cents each, and their drinks. Then this "grand party," with three old crow-bate teams started for Auburn—had a horse race on the way, and Fox says they were two hours in going four miles, so you can judge to the abilities of the teams. Farmers along the road were called to their doors by the whoops and yells, and thought it was a party going to "Tim Finnigan's Wake." Again he says, "was it not kind for the people of Auburn to open the Odd Fellows Hall for our reception," but had justice taken place it would have been the doors of the county jail that would have been opened for their reception. Then he winds up by saying, "Oh if ever we have the honor, my wife and I, of accompanying another social to Auburn." Now, I would state that "Filander Fox" has no wife, and could not support one if he had, and whose wife he accompanied that eve, he knows best himself. Now I would advise Mr. Fox not to try to write any more such articles for the papers, and call innocent people d——d fools, but quietly put on your moccasins and your blanket, take up your bow and your quiver, and skulk off to the western wilds, and there join with your brother in the whoop, the yell and the war dance, where you can roam at liberty in the wilderness of wickedness, and prey and feast in your ignorance, and glory among the chicken roosts of iniquity. ALICK.

Local and Miscellaneous.

It is All By Jerks.

In dry weather, when rain is most needed, "we have no rain;" in wet weather we have plenty of it, and so of heat and cold. We have to keep fires in winter and ice in summer. Again, poor people who most need money have littler or none; while rich people, who don't need it, have more than they can use. Chandeliers and lamps at cost. Set of French China dinner ware for $65.00; 106 pieces Tea and Dinner $10. We warrant every bit of our solid silver ware and silver plated ware to be of the double and tripple plate, and all stamped with the named of Meriden Britanna Co., the best and largest plating company in the world. Tea set, $35 to 100. water set, $18 to 60; castors, $4 to 50. Card and Cake stands, pickle castors, knives, spoons, ladles, sugar shells, fruit knives, the best stock of plated at Ward's Cheap Crockery Store, No. 9 Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

—Sudden Death—Yesterday afternoon, while Henry Wolf of this place, was passing over the premises of Jacob Sibert north of town, he saw the body of Mr. Sibert lying on the ground, and going up to it found life extinct. Mr. S. lived by himself in a small house he built there some years ago. He has been around this winter as active as ever, and was seen an hour before he was found dead. He was a close, shrewed manager, and had accumulated a nice little fortune. He had no relatives in this county we believe. He was about 65 years old. He leaves a wife and son in Ohio. His death is attributed to heart disease.

—Our accomplished friend, Dr. T. J. Dills, of Fort Wayne, was in town Monday. By the way, we congratulate the Doctor on the signal triumph he gained before the Supreme Court, on the question of whether a doctor must testify before courts without compensation. The Courier was positive even before the court decided, that the Doctor had right on his side, and advised him to stand by it until the last armed foe expired. We gave our opinion, based upon the great principle of equity alone, and eschewed all technicalities of the law. This places Doctor Dills in the foreground, and will command great respect for him, while a few of the fraternity there should hide their heads in shame.

—The name of Hon. B. F. Havens is being mentioned in the connection with the congressional race in the Terre Haute district. We have the honor of an extended acquaintance with Mr. Havens and feel that he has all the elements to make a strong, vigorous, successful canvass. While a member of the legislature, with which we were officially connected, Mr. Havens, then a new member, was recognized at once as a bold, discreet, energetic leader, and through his quick discernment, untiring persistency and great personal force, came out of that session a gallant victor. We are satisfied his selection will be in harmony with the times, that his Democracy will give him prestige, and the people a representative worthy their most cordial support.

—The Fort Wayne Sentinel has the following: The inimitable Tom Mays, editor of the Auburn Courier, was at the state capital on the occasion of the recent convention. He was a guest of the Grand Hotel, and as such guest took good care that the inner man was well provided for. At the breakfast table he called for a glass of milk. This was his favorite beverage; he has been used to it from his earliest infancy. The darkey waiter brought the lacteal but Tom's keen optics discovered dark specs floating on the snowy surface; he called the attention of the colored gentleman to the fact, who replied that the suspicious specs were nothing but sawdust. "Well," says the nervous Courier man, "do you expect me to drink sawdust? What do you think the anatomy of an editor consists of that he can digest sawdust? If I indulge in sawdust to-day you will be encouraged to bring me an entire board to-morrow."

—That genial, amusing conversationalist, Judge Borden, of Fort Wayne, who tells a story with a finesse unapproachable, delighted a car full of hearers the other day on the way to the convention, with a good one on Dr. McConnell, of Angola. It is almost unnecessary to state that the amiable Doctor is considered ubiquitous; that there is no place in this narrow-contracted country of ours, where he may not be expected at any moment, and that where you least expect a friendly face, even in the western wilds, there the Doctor is sure to welcome you. The Judge relates that while on his trip to Hong Kong, China, some years ago, after the vessel had labored for days amid waves and spray, carring them farther out from home and friends, his amiable spouse who accompanied him, knowing the ready recognition which the Judge gave to even slight acquaintances, remarked:

"My dear, we have never went anywhere yet, without meeting with some of your accquaintances. Now that this long tedious journey takes us half around the world, tell me, who do you expect to meet at Hong Kong?"

"Dr. McConnell, of Angola, promptly responded the Judge.

—If you think of investing in real estate, you are not likely to find a better opportunity than at the present time. The people are now masters of the situation at Washington; depreciation must therefore come to a stop.

—Mr. Tilton visited our schools yesterday, and seemed delighted with our handsome edifice, its admirable arrangement, and fine location. He spoke very complimentary of the thorough training and excellent discipline under our efficient corps of teachers.

—We wish that the parents of some of the boys who are let loose every night to whoop and howl on our streets, could have attended the lecture of Mr. Tilton. They might have got an idea that would have done them good. These boys ought to be suppressed.

A Rebus by Billy Stewart.

We take the following delightful Rebus from the Fort Wayne News, gotten up by the original Billy Stewart, "whose name is a household word," as one of the worst frauds extant:

I first arived home this Morning from michigon sick with dypbtheria and on ariving my wife Showed me a artical that seams to be copied from the orborn courier conserning myself & troop & now if you will be kind enouf to publish A few lines for me i will try and make a reply

Billy Stewart.

Billy calls $40 a little debt, and from that he argues that $1 25 is no debt at all and that is why he took a frieght train when he left this place last. Well, we got our money all the same, through Mr. Croxton, of Angola, and not through the mail as Billy will have it. If Billy will abandon his dead beat habits, avoid associating with prostitutes, cease trying to make people believe he knows something about the show business, get an axe and try to honestly earn a living, he may succeed, and not otherwise.

The Drunkard.

We are glad to announce that the fine drama of "The Drunkard," will be given here in a few days by the same parties who played it so admirably and successfully a short time ago at Waterloo. It is a sterling drama, full of pathos and humor, and rich in striking example, and the local talent of that place won great praise in its excellent rendition.

—Wm. Fleming, Esq., our candidate for State Treasurer, is the best organizer in the State. Though late in the canvass, and for a great part of the time unable to be out, he closed solidly with a formidable antagoist and came out the victor. A strong evidence of his popularity, and his fine ability in marshaling his forces.

—Cardinal Gioachinel Pecci, the late pontificial camerlengo, was elected successor of Pius IX. on the 20th inst. He assumes the title of Leo XIII. The elevation of Cardinal Pecci to the papacy gives almost universal satisfaction He was the choice of the moderates in the conclave and was chosen on the third ballot.

—Ho! ho! farmers, if you want a good set of harness, stop at the shop opposite the Court House in the old post office building, where you can get the best of work, and stock, as good as can be found anywhere. Mr. Rhodenbaugh warrents all his work, uses best Oak tan, and warranted as represented. Prices to suit the times. Call and examine before purchasing elsewhere.

—At a late printers' festival the following toast was presented: "The master of trades; he beats the farmer with the Hoe, the carpenter with his rules, and the mason in putting up tall columns; he surpasses the lawyer and the doctor in attending to his cases, and he beats the parson in the management of the devil."

—There was an attempt to burglarize Joe Abright's Jewelry store last Sunday night, by prying open the front door. The large glass in the door was cracked, and the door jammed but they did not get in. Then again on Tuesday evening, the chandilier fell with several lamps, and there was some danger at the time of a destroying fire, but it was fortunately controlled.

—Our friend Hon Edgar Henderson, of Anderson, made a splendid race for State Treasurer in the late Convention. He received a large vote on the first ballot, standing third on the list among nine others, gives us pleasure to know that he was so highly complimented, one evidence of the great personal esteem in which he is held throughout the state.

—We had the pleasure of meeting with a number of the friends of A. J. Ralston and his aimable lady, last Monday evening, on the occasion of the fourteenth anniversary of their marriage. Time trips gaily along with our friends, meting out few sorrows, and yielding to them a full share of earthly joys. We wish them ever thus, that their ways may be ways of pleasantness and their paths the paths of peace.

—We are compelled to state again that communications must reach us by Tuesday in order to get in the paper that week. Several came to us last week late on Wednesday and it was too late. When they are received too late they are out of time a week later, and have to be thrown away. Now, we desire communications from all points, and if you will try and get them in on time, we will cheerfully insert all fit for publication.

—While absent at the convention last week our deputy failed to mention a pleasant social event of the week before. A delightful party of the best citizens of Garrett, gave our town a visit, and were entertained as well as the short notice would allow, at Odd Fellows Hall, by a number of our people. It was a cordial, friendly greeting with all, and was so enjoyable that all will desire to meet again, which we trust will be in the near future.

—Daniel S. Littlefield and Henry J. McIntyre, have formed a partnership under the name of Littlefield & McIntyre, in the drug trade. They have opened out a fine stock of fresh drugs and medicines, in the McIntyre block, and with the extended experience of the senior member they are prepared to meet all calls in their line. They are both young men of correct habits, good business qualifications, and it will always gratify us to know that they are meeting the success they deserve.

—We don't know why Democrats will patronize the Chicago Times as a party paper. It is the meanest and most contemptible politically, of any sheet now published. Its editorials are gotten up solely for their abusive features, and they are as unreliable in their statements as any can be. Some say it is a good newspaper. So is the Cincinnati Enquirer a fair, honorable, exponent of Democratic principles, and can be had here the same day as published. It is larger than the Times and more newsy, and we know it will suit the temper of the general reader more clearly than the hermophradite Times.

—Lucy Stone says she despises the custom of men lifting their hats to women, and she wants no man to salute her in that way. What Lucy likes is an easy, natural, hearty greeting, something like, "Hello, Stoney, old girl, how does she run."

The Lecture.

Never has Auburn been favored with a more handsome, intelligent audience than that assembled last Tuesday evening to hear Mr. Tilton. Albion, Angola Waterloo, Butler, Spencerville and other points contributed their best citizens to hear the master orator. And never has such a lecture been delivered in this vicinity. It was simply grand with splendid oratory, rich with pure sentiment and overflowing with masterly eloquence. We heard the same speaker on the same subject at Washington two years ago, but must decide in favor of Auburn as to the two efforts We understand Angola will endeavor to secure a lecture from him in a few weeks on a different subject, and if so they can count on a few from Auburn.

Attention Greenback Men!

Waterloo, Ind., Feb. 26, 1878.

Pursuant to a call of the Waterloo Greenback Club, together with the various other clubs of the county uniting there will be a county convention held in the town of Waterloo, on the 20th day of March, 1878, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of creating a County Central Committee, and to appoint delegates to the State Convention, to be held at Indianapolis on the 22nd of May next, and to transact such other business as may properly come before said Convention. It is highly desirable that every township in the county be represented, and that all citizens of the county, regardless of past political party affiliation, who are desirous of establishing the soverignty of the people over and beyond the encroachments and control of an unjust and oppressive money power, and those who are in sympathy and identified with the National Greenback Party, are cordially invited to attend. Let every greenback man in the county appoint himself a delegate to this convention

Committee.

Attendance at the Schools.

The following list comprises the names of the pupils who were neither absent nor tardy during the past month:

HIGH SCHOOL.

J. Snull, M. Hoffman, W. Rose and S. Snyder.

SCHOOL OF MRS. THOMAS.

Alfred Rowland, Flora Hoffman, Wm. Stamets, Clara Stamets.

SCHOOL OF MISS TOWER.

SCHOOL OF MISS WIDNEY.

Aliza Ralston, Frank Stamets, Bertie Shaffer, Clara Walborn, Minnie Wilson, Mary Ashley, Frank Eckhart, Frank Spake.

SCHOOL OF MISS TRITCH.

Minna Mitchell, Dora Jones Maggie Snyder, Tutie Peterson, Emmet Ensley.

SCHOOL OF MISS CLARK.

Laura Huffman, Lizzie Ashley, Willie Culbertson, Mary Burett.

SCHOOL OF MISS M'TICH.

Lindon Kuhlman, Laura Miser, Charles Rainier, Minnie Lameback, John Dawson, Frank Kagey, Theresa Ashley, Harry Parent, Bertha Henry, Ella Somers, Frank Weaver, Albert Weaver, Samuel Miser, Chas. Hoffman, Frank Campbell.

M. Seiler, Supt.

—Dr. W. T. Knapp, recently located, has decided to remove to Hillsdale, Michigan, where a better field is offered for his professional services. The Doctor has made many friends during his short stay, and is recognized as a thorough able physician, and a clever enterprising citizen. We wish him every success.

—See what the druggists say about Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. "It never fails to cure the worst cough or cold promptly and effetually." Price only 25 cents a bottle. Sold in every drug store.

Township Caucuses.

BUTLER TOWNSHIP.

The Democrats of Butler township are requested to assemble at Butler Center, on Saturday, at 2 o'clock P. M. March 16th, 1878, to nominate candidates, for the various township offices.

W. I. Wone, Chairman.

—Of the 400 cases pending in the DeKalb circuit court, one-tenth (40) are said to be for divorce. Can it be possible that such a sad condition of infelicity exists in our sister county? How is this? brethren of the press.—Angola Herald.

This is a foul aspersion on DeKalb county. There are only 39. Exact figures should always be given.

—What degree of sincerity does it indicate when church members neglect to attend their places of worship, and seek other places of pleasure instead, on the same evening appointed for meeting at their church?

When roads are bad, and mud is deep,
The people from their churches keep;
But, to a party, father off,
They'll wade the mud, both deep and soft.

—The silver bill as amended by the Senate, went back to the House, and was passed last week. It is now in the hands of the President, and the country is anxously awaiting his action. Sherman will have a good partner in destroying the business of the country, if Hayes vetoes the bill.

—Dr. Yarnell, of the Health Institute at Rome City, visited Auburn promptly as announced, notwithstanding the very bad weather which prevailed at the time. The doctor is prompt, energetic and very generally successful in the treatment of chronic diseases.

—Now Columbia City comes forward with a first class attempt at suicide. A young woman of doubtful reputation, named Emma A. Patton, on the account of the cruelty of her step-father, took nux vomica. The "Post" says this is the third attempt. One more unfortunate.

—DeKalb county was represented in the late State Convention by C. A. O. McClellan, Simon Ochs, West Work, C. Kelly Baxter, Hon. R. M. Lockhart and the editor. Baxter would come around about every half hour, shake hands and say, "Isn't it spendid." It did us good to see him enjoy himself once.

—Linn, of the Wabash Courier, was in the attendance at the State Convention last week, and the result was he got the Declaratian of Independance for the Emancipation Proclamation, quite a mistake in these degenerate days. His Democracy is only excelled by his patriotism.

—J. P. Prickett, of the Albion "New Era," and W. K. Shaffer of the Angola "Herald," gave us a call Tuesday. They were in attendance upon the Tilton lecture. It is always pleasant, to meet such genial accomplished members of the corps editorial.

—John Stacy, who was sentenced to two years for attempted rape, last term of court, was brought back from Michigan City, Tuesday for a new trial. The Supreme Court reversed the decision of the lower court as to venue, and a new trial will be had.

—Old man Lord, who married the beautiful Mrs. Hicks, has compromised with his heirs. His new wife gets a dowery of $400,000, and the balance falls to the children when the old man is gathered to his fathers. The Lord be praised.

—The young man who annoys several families at the upper end of town by bawling like a calf, will get his coattail filled full of his "fathers" hide, in the shape of a boot, if he doesn't let up soon.

J. J. HOFFMAN.

I OWE NO MAN A DOLLAR.

Oh, do not envy, my own dear wife,
  The wealth of our next-door neighbor,
But bid me still to be stout of heart,
  And cheerfully follow my labor.
You must know the last of those little debts
  That have been our lingering sorrow
Is paid this night! So we'll both go forth
  And shake hands with the world to-morrow!
Oh, the creditor is but a shame-faced dog
  With the debtor's name on his collar,
While I'm a king and you are a queen,
  For we owe no man a dollar.

Our neighbor you saw in his coach to-day,
  With his wife and his flaunting daughter,
While we sat down at our coverless board,
  To a crust and a cup of water.
I saw that a tear-drop stood in your eye,
  Though you tried your best to conceal it;
I knew that the contrast reached your heart,
  And you could not help but feel it;
But knowing now that our scanty fare
  Has freed my neck from the collar,
You'll join my laugh, and help me shout
  That I owe no man a dollar!

This neighbor whose show has dazzled your eyes,
  In fact, is a wretched debtor;
I pity him oft, from my very heart,
  And I wish that his lot were better;
Why, the man is the veriest slave alive;
  For his dashing wife and daughter
Will live in style though ruin should come—
  So he goes like a lamb to the slaughter!
But he feels it the tighter every day—
  That terrible debtor's collar!
Oh, what would he give could he say with us,
  That he owed no man a dollar!

You seemed amazed—but I'll tell you more,
  Within two hours I met him,
Sneaking away with a frightened air
  As if a fiend had beset him;
Yet he fled from a very worthy man,
  Whom I met with the greatest pleasure—
Whom I called by name, and forced to stop,
  Though he said he was not at leisure.
He held my last note! so I held him fast!
  Till he freed my neck from the collar;
Then I shook his hand as I proudly said,
  "Now I owe no man a dollar!"

Ah! now you smile, for you feel the force
  Of the truths I've been repeating;
I knew that a downright honest heart
  In that gentle breast was beating!
To-morrow I'll rise with a giant's strength
  To follow my daily labor;
But ere we sleep let us humbly pray
  For our wretched next-door neighbor;
And we'll pray for the time when all shall be free
  From the weight of the debtor's collar—
When the poorest will lift his voice and cry,
  "Now I owe no man a dollar!"

POPPET'S CIGARETTE.

On one of the brightest days of a bright June, two of the fairest of fair company, at a seaside resort, sat beneath a luxurious tree in a pine grove, engaged in that richest of sweet employments, discussing the personal qualities of Mr. Dick Redfern, who, lucky dog, was engaged to be married to one of the jewels, whose name was Agnes Catherine Preston, but who was familiarly called "Poppet" by her friends.

"My love," said she, addressing her companion, who lay with her head resting upon her hands, observing her through her half-shut eyes, "My love, I am not above admitting to you that I think I've got a pretty good sort of a fellow on the whole. I admit that he has a few blemishes; who has not? There are a few points in which I could correct him, but, taking him all in all, I think that, with a firm hand and resolute will, I can bring him into tolerable subjection. I do not feel sure that a girl of your easy temperament would succeed with him, but I, being possessed of considerable vim and fire, am convinced that the task will occupy me but a few hours; and so I think I am safe in permitting you to congratulate me on my acquisition. In one week after our marriage we shall be the happiest couple in the State."

"But suppose he kicks?"

"Kicks!" (this with surprised emphasis).

"Yes, kicks. It seems reasonable enough that a young fellow, who is enticed out of bachelorhood by a pretty fair sort of a girl, will not entirely relinquish his independence without a fight. And, even at the risk of making a sworn foe of you, I should like to suggest something that has probably never entered your head."

"What is it?"

"Will you promise not to fly at me?"

"Nonsense; I'm not a fury."

"Very well, then. I should like just to hint, in the most amicable way, that you have a few slight faults of your own."

"I—faults!"

"You have some decided faults."

"Such as what, pray?"

"Oh, now, that's another thing. I don't profess to be able to point out the beams in your eye, when I am conscious there are plenty of motes in my own."

"Now, please—please, Molly!"

"Do you really want me to tell? Truly and honestly?"

"Certainly," was the faint response, uttered with an apprehensive look.

"Well, included among the rest," proceeded the indomitable critic, "I perceive a foolish obstinacy, a belief in your own self, an inability to look beyond your own desires. If you were asked, for instance, to give up a pleasure for the good of your husband, or for the benefit of any one else, you would never consent with a good grace. It is clear selfishness, mixed with a good proportion of pride, which is, if you will permit a dear friend to say so, extremely silly."

"Well—well!"

"And—"

"Oh, wait a moment; let me comprehend this first. Obstinate, foolishly proud, selfish—I think I have it—go on."

"No. On the whole I think I won't. You've got it all there. All the rest of the flaws in your style of mind and temper are subordinate to those. Correct these radical faults, and you will be an angel!"

"Oh, but I don't admit a word of it!"

"Indeed!"

"Certainly not. On the contrary, I am sure you have made a mistake. I am generous, confiding, yielding, and amiable; but—oh, Molly, have you got a cigarette in your pocket? I feel that I cannot continue the course of my remarks without a stimulant."

I am ashamed to say that the blonde-haired Molly thrust her hand into her pocket, and pulled out a little bunch of Honradas, from which her companion extracted a dainty, white paper tube, and lighted it with a practiced hand. She placed it between her lips, and enjoyingly drew in a volume of smoke; then emitted it in a slender stream, until it was nearly exhausted; and then she heard a step in the grass behind her, and, being startled, she puffed out the rest through her nostrils, after the manner of the Cubans, and looked around.

She saw her sweetheart, Dick, towering above her, with a curious expression upon his face. He said nothing. She nodded, and, placing the cigarette between her lips, she put out her hand to him. He took it, and sat down.

"By George!" exclaimed he, first bowing to Molly.

"What is the matter?" cried Poppet.

"I am surprised—confounded!"

"At what?"

"At you."

"An excellent subject."

"That's a fact. I thought you agreed with me the other night that this woman-smoking is a bad habit?"

"Yes, certainly—if it is a habit. It is dreadful."

"Then it isn't the smoking, it's only the habit you refer to, is it?"

Poppet looked puzzled. There was a silence, a long one; meanwhile Poppet smoked vigorously; her little clouds puffed into the two faces beside her, and Dick began to grow red. Finally he got up.

"Poppet, I'd like to speak to you a moment."

"Oh, dear! What's it about, Dick? I can't get up."

"Very well, then."

He looked moody.

"Is it about smoking?—is it?"

"Why, yes."

"Oh, then, if you are going to scold, why do you want to take me aside? If it is sensible, why not give Molly the benefit of it?"

Dick looked volumes. He half laughed and half swore. This was a terrible sort of girl.

"Well, then, I tell you flatly I do not approve of it."

"That isn't much of an argument."

"But I hoped you would consider it a reason. I would quit any habit that offended you, and feel glad of the chance of pleasing you."

"If I adopted that principle, mercy knows what there would be left for me to do. You always object."

"I beg your pardon."

"Which, I fancy, is your polite way of telling me that I fib."

"As you please." Dick's eyes began to light up. "Poppet, I remember distinctly that you agreed with me that it is an unpleasant sight to see a woman smoke. It is useless, hoydenish, fast, and you know it. I expressly ask you to throw away that cigarette."

"And I say expressly that I shall do no such thing. To dare to come here, before my best friend, and ask me to give up one of the few pleasures I have, simply because your Highness has come to the conclusion that I do not show off to advantage in a cloud of smoke! It is preposterous! absurd! idiotic!"

"Poppet!"

"And I wish you to understand, sir, that I shall retain as many of my habits as pleases me. It so happens that I enjoy smoking, therefore I shall smoke on all occasions, and what I like, whether it is a cigarette, or a cigar, or a meerschaum or a clay pipes—it is all the same to me."

Mr. Dick Redfern arose easily to his feet, took off his hat, made a low bow, and went away; leaving his sweetheart fuming and glaring and smoking, while in her friend's eyes there was a faint trace of tears.

"I believe it is you who are the idiot!" said she.

"At any rate, I shall now enjoy my cigarette without interruption," replied the other, "and to show him how little I care for what he says, I shall go this evening and smoke a good Havana under his window. He will smell it, look out, see me and come down, and I shall forgive him."

But Dick was savage. It was the middle of the afternoon, and it was hot, and so he brought a jug of lemonade, and sat down in a corner of his room, upon a Japanese fauteuil, to think over his situation.

He sat until the hotel bell rang for tea. He felt neither like eating nor drinking. A man who feels he must give up his sweetheart rarely does. He sat until dusk. He heard them dancing, and he knew that Miss Preston was in the middle of the rout. He grew more and more indignant, and more sure that he was right and that she was wrong. He nursed his troubled mind, and recalled all her words. It was not the miserable cigarette, but it was the disposition she showed. If she would act thus in the delicious moments of their courtship, what would she not be capable of doing when in the midst of the humdrum of married life? He reasoned with himself that there was nothing to do but to surrender her—to send back her letters and pictures, and then to go away on a sea-voyage.

It grew dark. His room was but a few feet from the ground, and they began to take down the Chinese lanterns from the trees outside. Then it grew very dark. A little breeze sprung up, but still he kept his three windows wide open, and sat looking out at the lonely picture.

He began to feel miserable, wretched, deserted. To be suddenly bereft of that thing that gave his life a motive and an object, was to make his heart sink and his spirit fail him.

It grew to be 11 o'clock. The notes of the huge bell sounded frightfully loud. As its last stroke sounded, he thought he heard a noise in the room. He looked about cautiously. By the faint glow of the stars, which came down through the overarching trees, he perceived a man's head rise cautiously above the sill of the furthest window. The body followed. Then it sank back again. Presently he heard footsteps in the grass just outside the window close beside him. Then whispers. It seemed that there were three men.

One said: "Are you sure she isn't in there?"

"Yes," was the reply; "I saw her in the grove, not a minute ago."

"Then go ahead. Get in, you two; you'll find the box in the top drawer of her bureau, on the right-hand side."

Dick then remembered that Poppet, or rather, Miss Preston, had once occupied this room, and that she always carried a great deal of jewelry about with her at the watering-places.

Dick began to remember his boxing-lessons. He slipped off his shoes, and took a position behind a tall chair in the corner.

Slowly and noiselessly two men entered the room through the first window, and in a moment the third followed. Dick heard them at his bureaus.

"Gad, they won't find much there, though," reflected he.

The men fumbled everything, and ransacked every drawer, meanwhile uttering half-suppressed sounds of anger. Dick thought he had better commence operations. He crept out silently, and approached them slowly. He got behind them, and, with a savage blow, knocked one fellow into the fire-place, and another toward the window; but, before he could recover to attack the third, the thief, who was as good a boxer as himself, dealt him a tremendous blow, and Dick staggered and fell. In an instant all three were upon him, and a handkerchief was forced between his teeth, and he was gagged, and his hands and arms pinioned.

The one struck a match, and, while secreting their own faces, they examined him, and took possession of his watch and wallet, and then made the complete tour of the apartment. Dick heard them at his ring-box, and he knew his diamond studs were on the way to the pawnbroker's.

Suddenly one of the men whispered an alarm.

"Hist! hist!"

"What is it?"

"There's a man outside the window, sitting on a bench. There was a pause.

"It's a woman."

"A woman! don't you see the light of his cigar, you fool?"

"By George, let's get out of this!"

The smell of a Havana floated in at the window.

"Leave everything. If we're caught with this stuff, it'll be ten years in quod at least."

In a moment Dick was alone. He rolled about and tried to kick.

Presently he heard a voice; a woman's voice. It was Poppet. She was calling him faintly, as if she were in pain.

"Oh, Dick, Dick! come and help me! I'm so sick—so dreadful ill! I'm afraid I'm going to die!"

"It's that Havana the little stupid has been trying to provoke me with. I'll let her suffer a little," thought Dick.

For ten minutes he lay still, until he knew she was in the proper agony; then he raised his heels, and beat a tremendous tattoo upon the floor, which raised the house in a minute.

When he was released he explained matters, and, before he could get the wondering crowd out of his chamber, Poppet appeared at the door, white and haggard.

Dick ran to her and led her away.

She put her aching head upon his shoulder, and whispered:

"Oh, Dick, Dick! I'll never—never be such a fool again. Is there anything else you'd like to have me give up—is there? Oh, Dick, did those wretches hurt you? Poor boy—poor—oh, how my head goes around just like a t-o-p!"

"You saved my trinkets for me."

"But did he think he lost his Jewel?"

She opened her eyes, and, by the light of the gas, she gave him a heavenly look and a smile.

"Never, never!" cried Dick.

He then led her home to a pretty cottage on the top of some mighty rocks, where they found her father going about swinging a watchman's rattle, and raising a hue and cry for his lost one.

"Never mind, pa," cried Poppet, airily.

"Never mind, indeed!" echoed the old gentleman. "Oh, you're there, Dick, are you? All right, then!"

The author feels, with this model man, that it is time to retire. One does little good by penetrating too far into mystery. The two brewed some lemonade without sugar, and then went and lolled upon the wicket-gate, and gazed at the moon and the illuminated waters, and decided that life was pleasant.

The New Horse-Shoe.

The English agricultural and other press are in raptures over the Yates horse-shoe, constructed of cow-hide. It is composed of three thicknesses of cow-hide, compressed into a steel mold, and then subjected to a chemical preparation. It is claimed for it that it lasts longer and weighs only one-fourth as much as the common iron shoe; that it will never cause the hoof to split, nor have the least injurious influence on the foot. It requires no calks; even on asphalt the horse never slips. The shoe is so elastic that the horse's step is lighter and surer. It adheres so closely to the foot that neither dust nor water can penetrate between the shoe and hoof. If all that is claimed for it be true, the new hide shoe will prove a great improvement upon the old. The idea, however, is by no means a new one. At the time of the Roman and Carthagean wars it was a frequent practice among cavalry officers to bind the feet of their horses with raw cow-hide to protect them from injury during an engagement. The inventor of the new shoe, Mr. Yates, of Manchester, England, is nevertheless entitled to every consideration for utilizing, in practical form, raw hide as a substitute for heavy iron shoes.—Turf, Field and Farm.

Hydrophobia Increasing.

"It is hard that a strong and healthy man should have to go for a dog," said Mr. Buckland, of Chicopee, as he was dying of hydrophobia last week. His death and that of three other strong and healthy men in Massachusetts and Connecticut, within a short time, from hydrophobia, have alarmed many people. Two of the dogs that bit two of the men have escaped, and how many more deaths will result therefrom remains to be seen. In the Connecticut valley it is feared that rabies has been widely communicated. Even valuable horses and other animals have died of it, and there is a strong feeling in favor of killing every dog within a circuit of thirty miles. The Connecticut Legislature is considering a proposition to impose a tax of $20 on every dog, with stringent penalties for non-payment. Six deaths from this disease, in various parts of the country, have been reported within a month—an increase that calls for decisive steps to prevent its further spread.—New York Sun.

Cannibalism in Manitoba.

The mail-carrier from Edmonton, Manitoba, brings to Winnipeg the dismal news that six or seven Indians on the plains, on a hunting excursion, having been long out, and in a starving condition for days, at last became cannibals. One died and was eaten; and, before the five or six survivors could reach their camp, all but one died or were killed, and shared the same horrible fate.

PIUS IX.

The Early Days of the Late Pope—How He Was Converted.

[From the New York Times.]

Wounded in his affections, disappointed in his day-dreams of martial fame, the young Count Feretti hastened from a place that had grown hateful to him. Every sight of the blue Adriatic, of the white walls of the old fort, of the blackish-green ibexes around the villa Albani re-opened his sore. He went to Rome and threw himself into the very vortex of the dissipated life of those times. The dreadful throes which society had undergone, the instability of fortune in days when no one knew what would happen on the morrow, the spectacle of the downfall of established fortunes on the one hand, and the rise of colossal wealth from nothing on the other, had worked a complete demoralization which at first the return of the Pope was powerless to cure. The honor of men, the chastity of women were subordinate to the pursuit after pleasure and the thirst of success. Men gambled like denizens of the mad-house, women lived without restraint. The fell philosophy of the Egyptians, "Eat, drink, and live," was in every heart and on every lip. "Who cares for to-morrow?" was as much the thought of the Romans then as when Horace wrote: "Quid sit futurum cras, fuge quærere." It was a carnival without end of folly and of shame. Among the boldest libertines of that bold time, among the wildest gamblers, among the most successful seekers after bonnes fortunes was Mastai Feretti. His rare personal beauty, his wonderful charm of conversation, his sparkling wit, his never-failing vivacity, made him eagerly sought after. He was, perhaps, at that time the Grammont of the hour. Men delighted to tell of the equanimity with which he supported the fortunes of the gaming-table, how he would commence an anecdote while hazarding thousands of scudi, and would finish without a tremor in his voice when fortune was adverse to him. Women whispered of his success in other fields, and gossiped of the furious rivalries between certain belle donne for his smile. Suddenly, in the midst of his social triumphs, in the height of his sad victories in the boudoir and the gambling-room, Mastai Feretti disappeared.

Among those unthinking votaries of pleasure who lived in such a whirl of excitement as to exclude both thought and real affection, there were none who cared sufficiently for the companion of their follies to ask what had become of him. He, the brilliant, the life-enjoying, from whose lips had flowed with careless grace the epicurean philosophy of the time, lay stretched in agony, God-smitten, before the humble altar of an obscure church in Rome. For as surely as in the early days of Christianity, when he thought not of it, so did God send conviction to the heart of this young libertine, in the midst of his excesses. The mysteries of a heart experience, of that second birth—that baptism of water and the spirit which the Savior of mankind has explained as necessary to eternal life—is not a subject for a newspaper article. It is essentially of the spirit, and those who think of its awful secrets must do so with solemn preparation, and with mind divested of earthly cares. But the existence of such things, though only few can know, all are compelled to believe. Even those who do not accept revelation are forced to see in the lives of Ignatius Loyola and Mastai Feretti and John Bunyan a transmitting energy which turned base clay to purest gold. Mastai Feretti, under the influence of that mysterious power, lay stretched in submissive agony before his God. When he rose up comforted the current of his life was changed. All his wasted energies, all his broken ambitions, all his lost affections came back with tenfold energy, when divinely directed into a just and noble channel. He saw his work before him. The persuasive tongue, whose golden accents had whispered of guilty love to women, the eloquence that had delighted men, were capable to do God service. He was an instrument to stay the demoralization of the age, to paint vice in its own image, strip from its false face its alluring mask, show the hollowness of its promises, and the gulf to which it unerringly led.

IMPALED UPON AN AUGER.

The Horrible Death of William Carpenter.

[From the Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.]

About 5 o'clock last evening one of the most extraordinary and horrible accidents that ever happened on the Comstock took place in the Savage carpenter shop. Here there is in use a steam auger, which points toward the workman and makes 1,000 revolutions per minute. It is a self-feeder, and anything that is laid up against the point is caught and thrown over its coils with lightning-like rapidity. William Carpenter, the unfortunate victim, at the time mentioned was boring a hole through a stick of hard wood, about three inches thick and eight feet long, and was leaning his weight against it, under the impression that there was a gauge attached to the machinery to prevent the block going further along the auger than the distance required. Suddenly a workman near Carpenter observed an indescribable look on his face as his body shot forward and doubled over the terrible machine. It had passed, like a fencer's sword, through his stomach, and was protruding at the back. He was literally impaled upon the auger, which was churning his intestines at the rate of from 1,000 to 1,500 revolutions per minute.

In the midst of this horrible agony Carpenter seems to have maintained his presence of mind, for he cast himself backward and got off the auger, falling to the floor as he did so. The most terrible excitement prevailed among his comrades in the shop, and there was a rush to the prostrate man. The sight must have almost paralyzed them. Carpenter was lying on his back, with his clothes torn and twisted above the region of his abdomen. Just above him the deadly auger was still whizzing, and clinging to it was a mass of intestines, the loose ends of which spread out with the revolutions and gave the auger the appearance of a buzz-saw. The man was removed to the bath-room and laid out upon the floor. He was still cool, and not a cry escaped him. His brother (the ex-city jailer) was sent for, and, on his arrival, he communicated his wishes in regard to his business affairs and the disposal of his affects, remarking, "My brother is an honest man, and will do the right thing." Presently it became evident that he was suffering intense pain, and the physicians in attendance decided that he had better die under the influence of chloroform. Before the drug was administered he was told that he would never come from under its influence alive. He merely nodded, bade those about him good-by, and in a few minutes was unconscious.

He lay in this state as calmly as a sleeping child until after 4 o'clock in the morning, when the influence of the chloroform passed off and he opened his eyes. He did not seem to suffer much pain, and occasionally talked to his attendants. He died at 5 o'clock, and, as those who saw him said, "died like a man." His last words were, "I am passing into the unknown."

A Chronicle reporter called at the Savage works and inspected the scene of Carpenter's death. The bath-room where he died was being washed and the blood scraped up from the floors. The most ghastly sight was the boring machine. The auger which did the work was covered with blood for its entire length, with shreds of flesh still clinging to it. A workman informed the reporter that nearly sixteen feet of intestines had been taken from it after Carpenter was taken into the bath-room to die. The framework was covered with blood, and almost everything spattered with it.

DEATH OF CENTENARIANS IN 1877.

A Long List of Departed Veterans of the Old Year.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial.]

Jan. 4. Mrs. Mary Sharkey died in New York city. She was born in Sligo, Ireland, and was 102 years of age. She ate nothing for eighteen days before her demise.

Feb. 12. Caroline Lambert died at Omaha, Neb., aged 101. She was burned to death while dressing a sore arm with kerosene.

Feb. 14. Mrs. Mary Dunham, aged 105, died at Glenville, N. Y.

Feb. 14. Aaron Easton died at Tyre, N. Y., aged 101. He was born in New Jersey, and of small stature.

Feb. 14. Mrs. Eunice White, wife of Peleg W. White, aged 102, at Macedon, N. Y.

Feb. 26. Hugh McMartin, at New York city, aged 105. Born in Ireland.

March 18. Augustin Picard, aged 109, died at Rochester, N. Y. He was born at St. Pierre, Quebec, in 1767. His father died at the age of 108, his mother at the age of 104, and his sister now lives at Quebec, aged 109. He was an inveterate smoker, regular drinker, and never had a head or stomach ache, and was confined to his bed for only eight weeks.

March 20. Philip Kavanaugh, aged 105, died at Zaleski, O. He was a native of Ireland.

March 22. Mrs. Catharine Schneider, aged 101, at Kenosha, Wis. Ill only six weeks.

March 24. Samuel Vaum, aged 104, died Trumansburg, Tompkins county, N. Y.

April 3. Capt. Fred. Lahrbush, died at New York, aged 111.

April 20. Lettis B. Steele, aged 102 years, 7 months, and 18 days, at Passaic, N. J. He was born in New Bedford, Mass., Sept. 3, 1774. He ate no food for five days before his death.

May 4. Mrs. Rosa Brady, aged 103, at New York city; born at Cavan county, in Ireland, 1774.

May 6. Bridget Rush, aged 103, in St. Joseph's Home for the Aged, in New York. She fell down stairs some days before her death.

June 26. Ann Henry, aged 105, in New York. Born in Ireland.

July 5. Mrs. Susan Hague, aged 106, in New York city. She had 54 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren. Her husband was a sea Captain, and lived to the age of 83. She never had any disease but the yellow fever.

July 6. Mrs. Margaret Boyd, aged 102 years, 10 months and 10 days, at New York city. She was born in Derry county, Ireland. She used no spectacles, and could see to darn stockings.

July 24. An unknown woman, aged 106, at residence of John Jenkins, at Newtown, Long island, who took care of her for fourteen years.

Aug. 8. Mrs. Rosa Quinn, widow of a drayman, aged 104, at Dubuque, Iowa.

Aug. 18. Mrs. Eliza Thomas, aged 106, at Ripley, O.

Aug. 26. John Francis (colored), aged 103, at Harrison, Westchester county, N. Y. He had been a slave, and escaped by underground railroad.

Sept. 22. William Goodman, aged 101, at Little Britain, Orange county, N. Y. He was born July 4, 1776, was a farm laborer, and worked until the day before his death.

Nov. 10. Thomas Grimaldi, aged 102, at Knoxville, Tenn.

Nov. 23. Joseph King, a native of Lower Canada, aged 102, at Chicago.

Nov. 28. Mrs. Elizabeth Allen, aged 105 years, 5 months, and 6 days, at Charlestown, R. I.

Dec. 9. Catharine Fitzpatrick, aged 100, at Bellevue Hospital, New York.

How the Turks Live.

It is certainly a mystery that the inhabitants of the Ottoman empire did not all perish years ago from pulmonary diseases. Their feet are first swathed in a coarse rag, which is then wound round the lower part of the leg, and bound tightly with twine; on the rag is tied a piece of sole-leather hammered into a rudely-shaped sandal, with sides rising one inch up the sides of the foot; holes are cut in the upper edges of the sandal and strings tied in them, and then fastened over the top of the foot. It is evident that their feet are wet the moment they step into mud or water over an inch in depth. This they are doing constantly in bad weather; consequently, their feet are soaking wet for a week at a stretch, and yet they live and multiply. They violate every known law of hygiene in the ventilation and often the cleanliness of their dwellings, and yet their children are generally sturdy-looking, and the adults show fair average physique. They sleep in rows on a mat laid upon the floor of their underground huts. Sometimes the floor is covered with them, and yet they do not appear to suffer for want of oxygen.—London Times.

IN ALSATIA.

BY R. H. STODDARD.

Here is a friend shall fight for thee,
  Be thou good fellow, and under ban.
Where have I met thee?—let me see—
  But, tush! what matter? a man's a man;
This is a hand has handled swords,
  So fill up thy can and clink with me!
Out with thy troubles—thou hast my word—
  Here is a friend shall fight for thee.

Thirty years man-at-arms was I;
  Trailed pike in Flanders—rough work [illegible]
Stormed forts, sacked cities—pass that by,
  Also the women dragged by the hair!
There must be soldiers, I suppose,
  So long as Kings and peoples be;
Marry, sir, 'tis a world of blows,
  But here is a friend shall fight for thee.

"Free lance, freebooter," runs the song,
  Writ by some skulking clerk, I wot.
I never do peaceful burghers wrong,
  Nor kiss a woman, an she would not;
Never take purses, but from the dead,
  That are long past spending—unlike me;
Who seek not your gold, but [illegible]
  For here is the friend shall fight for thee.

What knaves be these? No friends of mine,
  I'll parley with them: What want ye here?
The splash on my ruffle—pshaw! is wine—
  Will draw on us, dogs, if you dare come [illegible]
Have at ye, then, without a word—
  Man enough yet for two or three.
Old fellow, thou hast one friend—thy sword,
  For this is the friend that fights for thee!

Fish as a Legal Tender.

In some pleasant reminiscences of the early Wisconsin bar, a writer in the Milwaukee Sentinel tells the following anecdote of Judge Frazier: "In a case where a judgment had been obtained against a party by the name of Lott Blanchard, an application was made for a stay of execution for one year, under the statute then in force, which authorized it to be done where the debtor could show that he had no property. Blanchard appeared before the Judge, who questioned him as to his means to pay the judgment, and the reply was that he was destitute of any property. He was then asked what his business was, and he replied a fisherman. H. N. Wells was the attorney for the creditor, and the Judge, on finding that the debtor was willing to pay the judgment in fish, addressed Mr. Wells and told him that he must receive fish in payment, at the same time giving the debtor explicit orders to deliver 'good and not stinking fish.' Whether the fish were ever paid or not was never informed."

KILLED BY POISONOUS SNAKES.

Nineteen Thousand Persons Perishing in British India in a Single Year.

[From the Pall Mall Gazette.]

A resolution of the Government of India, dated Simla, Nov. 15, on the results of the measures adopted to exterminate wild animals and venomous snakes in British India, in 1876, says:

Last year 21,600 persons and 48,000 head of cattle were destroyed by wild animals and venomous snakes; 22,357 wild animals and 270,185 venomous snakes were killed, and 120,015 rs. had been expended in rewards. This year 19,273 persons and 54,830 head of cattle have so perished; 212,371 snakes and 23,459 wild animals have been killed, and 124,574 rs. have been expended in rewards. In Madras, Bengal, and in the Northwestern provinces and Oudh, the numbers of persons killed by wild animals and by snakes were considerably less in 1876 than in 1875. In the other provinces the figures do not exhibit any great variations, except in the Central provinces, where the deaths rose from 617 in 1775 to 1,098 in 1876. The Chief Commissioner states that no new or special measures have been adopted for the extermination of wild animals and snakes, but there is no explanation of the greater mortality shown in his returns.

As regards the loss of cattle, the figures of the year seem unsatisfactory. While Madras and Bombay show fewer cattle killed, Bengal, the Northwestern provinces and Oudh, the Punjab, the Central provinces and British Burmah show materially larger numbers. It is also probable that even the figures now reported are only approximate to the truth, as the agency for reporting the mortality caused to men and cattle is still imperfect, though more perfect than it used to be. The unfavorable figures testify possibly to better reporting, and not to really greater mortality. As regards rewards paid for the destruction of wild animals (including snakes), more was paid in Madras, Bombay, Bengal, the Northwestern provinces and Oudh, the Central provinces and British Burmah, and less in the Bunjab and in Assam. The Government of India trust that in future years the returns may be more accurate and may be reviewed by the local governments which submit them, and that the measures reported may be more effective.

Appended to this resolution is the following "statement showing the results of the measures adopted in British India with the view of exterminating wild animals and venomous snakes during the year 1876:"

Number of persons killed by elephants, 52; tigers, 917; leopards, 156; bears, 123; wolves, 887; hyenas, 49; other animals, 143; snakes, 15,946; total killed, 19,273. Number of cattle killed by elephants, 3; tigers, 13,116; leopards, 15,-373; bears, 410; wolves, 12,448; hyenas, 2,039; other animals, 4,573; snakes, 6,486; total killed, 54,830. Number of animals and snakes destroyed: Elephants, 4; tigers, 1,693; leopards, 3,763; bears, 1,362; wolves, 5,976; hyenas, 1,585; other animals, 8,053; snakes, 212,371; total number, excluding snakes, destroyed, 23,459.

Some Other Rights of Woman.

From Bob Ingersoll's new lecture: "I believe woman is the equal of man and has all the rights of man, and one more, that of protection. I believe the institution of marriage to be the holiest and most sacred institution among men. Yet it took thousands of years to advance from slavery up to the marriage institution. I hate a man who thinks he is the head of the family. I do. I despise him. I hate one of those dignified galoots. I never saw a dignified man who was not a dunce. Solemnity is a breastwork which mediocrity throws up to defend itself from the eyes of the world. I hate a man who is an aristocrat in his family, and whose wife is obliged to be a beggar. She says, 'I want a dollar,' and asks for it as if she were standing on a bomb-shell, and he replies, 'What did you do with the 50 cents I gave you?' How many women are obliged to be continual beggars. How can you raise children in such an atmosphere? It's a terrible thing; it's wretched and infamous. I believe in the democracy of the family. Every home should be a little republic in itself. Love is the only thing that will pay 10 per cent. to both borrower and lender. Love is the only thing where the last possible extravagance is the height of economy. What right has man to be the head of the family? A man should be cheerful and pleasant on coming into a house. When you enslave anybody you make him dishonest. A hut with love is a palace fit for a King. A little while ago I stood at the tomb of the dead Napoleon, and, when I thought of his past life, I thought I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes, living in a hut with a little wife I loved, with children upon my knee and their arms about my neck, and died unnoticed and unknown, loved by those who knew me, than to have been that King. It is not necessary to be great or rich or powerful to be happy."

Why Maine Hates Massachusetts.

The Boston Herald wants to know the causes of the alienation between Maine and Massachusetts. A long summer day would not suffice to tell them all. But here is one: The treatment of Maine men and Maine troops by Massachusetts in the war of 1812. Two instances we will mention. William Widgery, the Maine Representative who sustained the declaration of war, barely escaped with his life from a Newburyport mob on his way home from the capital. Maine soldiers fared scarcely better. The company recruited in York county for the Third United States Artillery was hooted in every town in Massachusetts through which it passed on its way to the lakes, and on the shop doors of many of the villages was scrawled this legend in chalk: "Down with the war hawks." On their return home our soldiers received quite as shabby treatment. With true Yankee thrift the men of Massachusetts charged them exorbitant prices for so slight things as a glass of milk or a morsel of bread. Their homeward march through Massachusetts might be depicted in Paulding's lines:

Saved this good land, and when the tug was o'er
Begged their way home at every scoundrel's door.

The truth is, Massachusetts was disloyal to the very heart in that war. She meditated treason, but wanted the courage to achieve it. Naturally she desires that this shameful part of her history shall be forgotten. But the memory of insult and abuse has not yet died out of the minds of Maine people.—Portland Press.

Is the World Growing Colder?

A curious theory of the future fate of the world is being discussed by a Swedish paper. The question is whether recent and long-continued observations do not point to the advent of a second glacial period, when the fair countries now basking in the fostering warmth of a tropical sun will ultimately give way to the perennial frost and snow of the polar regions. The researches of geologists have proved the existence in Greenland and other Arctic lands of fossil palms and other tropical plants, which show that these regions were formerly covered with a rich vegetation which only equatorial climes can now produce. Then came a great ice age, which buried this vegetation beneath the mantle of cold which still prevails at the polar extremities of the earth. Is this kingdom of ice and snow again extending its way toward the equator? From the Antarctic circle we have no data which supply an answer to the question; but it is asserted that the climate of Norway, Sweden and Iceland is annually becoming more severe. Great masses of ice are frequently observed by navigators in far more southerly position during the summer months in the Atlantic than was the case a few years ago; and the effect of these icebergs is to materially reduce the temperature of Scandinavia and Iceland. The latter island is suffering so severely that the corn no longer ripens there, and the inhabitants, in fear of approaching famine and still colder climate, are emigrating to North America. The influence of the gulf stream on the climate of Norway, which has been not less marked than its effects on the coasts of Ireland and Scotland, is being effaced by the intensity of the cold brought by the masses of ice which it is for the gulf stream to carry toward the eastern side of the North Atlantic. This extraordinary cold appears to be rather of periodical occurrence than of gradually and annually increasing intensity, and our Swedish contemporary appears to have forgotten that the existence of larger quantities of ice than usual in the Atlantic rather points to a recent period of stormy but hot weather in the polar regions than to an unusual intensity and extension of the reign of polar cold. Still the phenomenon is of great interest and importance, and deserves careful attention.

Thought He Had 'Em Again.

Sniffles brought his two weeks' spree to a close on Saturday night. He lay on a lounge in the parlor, feeling as mean as sour lager, when something in the corner of the room attracted his attention. Raising on his elbow he gazed steadily at it. Rubbing his eyes, he stared again; and, as he stared, his terror grew. Calling his wife, he asked, hoarsely:

"Marindy, what is that?"

"What is what, Likey?"

Sniffles' name was Lycurgus, and his wife calls him Likey for short and sweet.

"Why, that—that—thing in the corner," said the frightened man, pointing at it with a hand shaking like a politician.

"Likey, dear, I see nothing," replied the woman.

"What! you don't see it?" he shrieked.

"No."

"Then I've got 'em. Oh, heavens! bring me the Bible, Miranda—bring it quick! Here, here on this sacred book, I swear never to drink a drop of whisky. If I break my vow may my right hand cleave to the roof of my mouth, and—"

Here, catching another glance of the terrible object, he clutched his wife and begged, in piteous tones:

"Don't leave me; don't leave your Likey!" and, burying his face in the folds of her dress, he sobbed and moaned himself into a troubled sleep.

Then his wife stole gently to the corner, picked up the toy snake, and threw it into the stove.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

The Heart.

Throb, throb, throb. Never sleeping, but often tired, loaded with care, chilled by despair, bleeding with wounds, often inflicted by those who do not understand it, or burdened with affection, it must beat on for a lifetime. Nothing finds a lodgment in its chambers that does not add to its labors. Every thought that the mind generates steps upon the heart before it wings its way into the outer world. The memory of the dead loved ones are mountains of weight upon its sensitiveness; the anxieties of the soul stream to the heart and bank themselves upon it, as the early snowdrifts cover the tender plant; love, if it loves, fires it with feverish warmth and makes it the more sensitive; hate, if it hates, heats it to desperation and fills it with conflicts. Still it works on. When slumber closes the eyelids the heart is beating—beating beneath all its burdens; it works while we sleep; it works while we play; it aches when we laugh. Do not unnecessarily wound it; do not add to its bleeding wounds. Speak a kind word to cheer it; warm it when it is cold; encourage it when it despairs.—Good Words.

The Perfect Whip.

Always have an apron on your box; it hides a bad seat and a pair of bent knees. Sit straight on your box, with your elbows close to your side, your hands well down, your shoulders well back, your head erect, and your eyes well in front of you. Do not sit back up, like a "pig in a rage," and do not bend over your foot-board as if you were looking after the stump of the cigar you have just dropped. Above all, do not sit with your knees bent. Start quietly off the crown of a hill. If your pole-chain breaks, look out for loose gravel or fresh broken stones; they are a wonderful help in times of need. Never omit to have a pair of worsted gloves about the coach to put on in case of rain; they are the only things through which the reins do not slip. Always have a chain-trace in your boot.—Birch-Reynardson.

THE WORKSHOP.

Granite weighs 42 cwt. to the cubic yard.

A cubic foot of hard coal weighs 94 pounds.

A cistern 5 feet in diameter and 5 feet deep holds 732 gallons.

Waterproof mastic cement is five parts river sand, five parts ground stone lime, ten parts red lead, in powder.

Powdered chalk, brick-dust or fine saw-dust, added to glue, will make it hold with more than ordinary firmness.

In Breslau, Prussia, a successful attempt has been made to erect a paper chimney about fifty feet high. By a chemical preparation the paper is rendered impervious to fire or water.

Bottle or green glass is made of the commonest materials in about the following proportions: Sand, 100 parts; kelp or impure soda, 30; wood ashes, 43; potter's clay, 100; cullet or broken glass, 100.

Cements that are used in a fused state, as resin or shellac, will not adhere, unless the parts to be joined are heated to the fusing point of cement. If glue is employed, the surface should be made so warm that the melted glue is not chilled before it has time to effect a thorough adhesion.

Soluble or water glass is formed by mixing well 200 grains of fine sand, and 600 of carbonate of potassa; fuse in a crucible capable of holding four times as much; carbonic acid escapes; the silica and potassa combine and form glass. Pour out the glass, which is commonly termed silicated potassa, on an iron plate. The compound thus formed is pure silica soap.

A burning chimney, when the soot has been lighted by a fire in the fireplace, can be extinguished by shutting all the doors in the room, so as to prevent any current of air up the chimney; then, by throwing a few handfuls of common salt upon the fire in the grate or on the hearth, the fire in the chimney will be immediately extinguished. The philosophy of this is that, in the process of burning the salt, muriatic-acid gas is evolved, which is a prompt extinguisher of fire.

For welding iron and steel a composition has lately been patented in Europe, consisting of iron filings forty parts, borax twenty parts, balsom copaiba or some other resinous oil two parts, and sal-ammoniac three parts. They are mixed, heated and pulverized. The process of welding proceeds as usual, the surfaces to be welded are powdered with the composition and then brought to a cherry-red heat, at which the powder melts, when the portions to be united are taken from the fire and joined.

PHYSICIANS have long prescribed Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a relief and cure of Heart Disease, for the simple reason that they have seen its favorable workings in all the many forms of disease the Heart is liable to, and it can truly be recommended as a scientific remedy for that dreaded of all diseases, whose subtle workings are not usually seen until the patient is beyond ordinary help. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. We can pronounce Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR a certain remedy, and advise you to use it. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing list of testimonials of cures, etc.

For sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

To Housekeepers.

The attention of heads of families is respectfully invited to the superior quality, in every respect, of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER. It is entirely free from adulteration of any kind, and every package contains absolute full weight. Consumers should bear in mind the fact that a strictly pure, full weight baking powder, although it costs a little more than the adulterated, cheap, light weight, or bulk powders, is by far the cheapest, both in purse and health.

Aching Heads and Uneasy Nerves

Are often soothed by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, because that searching corrective completely removes the causes of brain and nerve excitement, which are to be found in the derangement of the stomach, and of its associate organs, the liver and bowels. It is a truth which cannot be too earnestly insisted upon, that the effect of mere sedatives and narcotics, like bromide of potassium, valerian, chloral hydrate and opium, is less appreciable the longer they are used, and that they can never permanently relieve nervous excitability, because they cannot remedy the weakness and organic derangement which lies at its roots. Hostetter's Bitters, however, can and does cure nervous maladies, for the reason already stated. Sick headache, restlessness at night, vertigo, mental heaviness and depression of spirits, as well as the dyspeptic condition of the stomach, and torpidity of the liver and bowels, which give rise to them, are entirely obviated by this benign alterative tonic.

DO YOU want a good Story Paper? Such is THE CHICAGO LEDGER. Send five cents for two copies.

THE old life preserver is what they call Johnson's Anodyne Liniment way up in Maine where it is made. This name is well deserved, for it is the best liniment in the world. It will certainly prevent diphtheria, and will relieve croup and asthma instantly.

DR. PIERCE'S Golden Medical Discovery will cure a cough in one-half the time necessary to cure it with any other medicine; and it does it, not by drying it up, but by removing the cause, subduing the irritation, and healing the affected parts. Sold by druggists.

EXPOSE THE FRAUD.—Patent medicine venders are now putting up Condition Powders in packages as large as a nigger's foot for 25 cents, but they are utterly worthless. One small package of Sheridan's Condition Powders are worth a dray load of them.

TWO COPIES of THE CHICAGO LEDGER sent to any address for five cents.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE for CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

LANDRETHS'
SEED WAREHOUSE,
PHILADELPHIA.
We wish to call attention to our Bloomsdale strains of
ONION SEED.
It has ever been our practice, owing to the force of climatic influences, to raise full-sized Onions from Sets, Seedlings, or Buttons, as they are indifferently called, the growth of the preceding year, and not direct from the seed proper; as a result in a long series of years, generations on generations of Onions, a habit has been confirmed and established of precocious bulbing; consequently (black) seed raised here in the southeastern corner of Pennsylvania, when transported northward, carries with it, it is believed, the fixed habit of early ripening, and crops of large onions, it is confidently predicted, may be produced at the North from such seed in advance of the season, and free from the "stiff-necks" so abundantly produced by seed raised in a colder climate.
An experiment the present season, made with the Bloomsdale strain of Early Red in Wisconsin, in latitude 46° (north of lat. of Toronto, Canada), gave the most surprising results; another, with the same variety, in Nebraska, latitude 42°, excited the highest admiration—not a single stiff-neck was observed.
These facts are at least highly suggestive, and merit the examination of NORTHERN and NORTHWESTERN onion-growers and dealers in seed.
We especially commend the EARLY RED—it is incomparably superior to the "Wethersfield" or "New England Red." Two other good sorts are the Large Yellow Strasburg or Dutch, and the pure White or Silver Skin. Prices (unprecedentedly low) on application. 1,500 Acres in Seeds. Send for Catalogue.

Choirs, Singing Schools, Societies
SHOULD USE
The Salutation ($12.00 per doz.), or Zion ($12.00 per doz.), or The Encore ($7.50 per doz.), or Perkins' Singing School ($6.75 doz.), or Johnson's Chorus Choir Instruction Book ($12.00 per doz.).
The first two are first-class Church music books, by L. O. Emerson and W. O. Perkins, and have full instructive courses. The last three are fitted especially for Singing Schools by the very best talent. Now for a spirited Winter and Spring Singing Class!
Also give new interest to the year's practice by getting up one of our 40 CANTATAS (send for circulars). Five of them are:
Belshazzar, . . Butterfield. $1.25
Don Munio, . Dudley Buck. 1.50
Joseph's Bondage, . Chadwick. 1.25
Prodigal Son, . . Sullivan. 1.25
Walpurgis Night, . Mendelssohn. .80
Belshazzar and Joseph's Bondage are dramatized, and are splendid musical dramas.

DAY'S AGUE TONIC

CURES EVERY FORM OF CHILLS, OR MONEY RETURNED.

DAY'S TONIC Cures Chills and Fever.
DAY'S TONIC Cures Dumb Chills.
DAY'S TONIC Supersedes Quinine.
DAY'S TONIC Cures Old Chronic Chills.
DAY'S TONIC Invaluable for Children.
DAY'S TONIC Cleanses the Stomach.
DAY'S TONIC Acts on Liver and Bowels.
DAY'S TONIC Don't Buzz the Head.
DAY'S TONIC Don't contain Quinine.

DAY'S TONIC

Is a new innovation, and possesses advantages heretofore unknown and unclaimed by others.

It does not contain Quinine or any poison; it does not produce buzzing or roaring in the head, which follows the use of Quinine; it is retained by delicate stomachs; it acts upon the liver and bowels without the use of any other medicine; it never fails to cure, and our agents are authorised to return the money in each and every case of failure; one bottle will cure two cases. Try it and see. Sold by all Druggists at $1.00.

CURATIVE

RHEUMATISM

AND NEURALGIA.

This marvelous preparation has cured hundreds of the most distressing cases of Chronic Rheumatism and Neuralgia, even when all other remedies have failed. It is fast becoming the

Acknowledged Antidote

for these diseases and can be relied upon by sufferers to relieve them of their pains and affect a permanent cure.

Do Not Give Up

your case as hopeless and settle down to the conviction that no medicine will help you; all we ask is a fair trial of the CURATIVE, and that you bear in mind that the nature of these diseases require persistent and faithful application to insure a perfect cure. In every community where the CURATIVE has been placed will be found many witnesses who will testify to what it has done for them.

Positively the Best.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound is the very best compound ever prepared, advertised, or sold by any person, or under any name or under any name whatever, for the immediate relief and permanent cure of coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough, bronchitis, asthama, and all diseases of a consumptive type. It will thoroubly eradicate these alarming symptoms in one half of the time required to do so by other medicine. It is purely vegetable, and contains not a particle of opium or other dangerous drug. It never fails. Every bottle guaranteed to perform exactly as represented.

For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup is perfectly safe. Extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

A Gentle hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,,—it is no wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing consumption, hemorrhages, pneumania, severe coughs, croup or any diseases of the throat or lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and villiage on this continent. Sameple bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitas, Catarrh, Asthama, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for general debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. The receipt will be sent free of charge, to all who desire it, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Address with stamp naming this paper, Dr. J. C. Stone, 44 North Ninth Street, Philadeldhia Pa.

A [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] in [illegible] in [illegible] Knoxville, Tenn.

The door of the house was opened, and a tall and slender young man stepped out.

His face was very pale, he trembled visibly, and his whole appearance indicated that he was greatly frightened.

No sooner had he descended from the lower [illegible] than [illegible] about [illegible] brutal expression of countenance, collard him, and, with a savage oath, exclaimed:

"Riordan, I ought to cut your throat, sneaking scamp that you are."

"For God's sake, Scribner, don't kill me!" cried the young man, piteously.

"You did not [illegible] up to-night, Riordan."

"I overslept myself, Scribner. I was acting in good faith toward you—"

"Are you ready to go now?"

"Yes, Scribner.'

"Then come on.

THAT INFERNAL DOCTOR,

Rockway, [illegible] you and me to the gallows."

"Had we not better leave this part of the country instead of—"

"Instead of killing him?" exclaimed Scribner, with a scornful laugh. "No, you white-livered coward. I ain't going to leave here. Knoxville and surroundings are good enough for me.',

"But Dr. Rockway has a large family pleaded the young man.

"Do you, fool, perhaps, expect that Rockway will make you his son-in-law? You, who ravished his daughter Bell?" cried Scribner, sneeringly. "Why, if I let him know that it was you who did that, he would not only forgive me for stealing his best six horses, but would collect all his neighbors, and they would

"BURN YOU ALIVE!"

Riordan shuddered, and made no reply.

Scribner added: "No; the old fellow must die! You knock at his door, and when he opens it tell him that a very sick man needs at once his professional services. I shall stand close behind you, and I shall fire two pistol-shots at him. Then you fire, and in the darkness it will be easy for us to escape. An hour afterward we shall meet at the Abingdon cross-road. Now, Mr. Riordan, if you are so chicken-hearted as to flinch, I shall have another bullet for you.'

Riordan faltered out that he was ready to do Scribner's bidding, and they set out for the house of Dr. Rockway.

The latter was a very wealthy man. He lived with his large family in an elegant mansion about one mile from Knoxville. Notwitstanding his large fortune, he devoted himself with the utmost energy to the practice of his profession.

In times gone by he had been noted for the cheerfulness of his disposition. But about a year ago had befallen him and his family, and ever since he had been gloomy and malancholy. His beautiful daughter Bella, a girl of sixteen, had been brutally outraged by an unknown ruffian upon returning one evening from a neighbor's house. Notwithstanding all efforts the perpetrator of this dastardly crime had not been discovered.

A GREAT MISFORTUNE

He was, as we know from the lips of the villian Scribner, the young man Riordan, who, though decended from a decent family, had become a horse thief and a highway robber.

He had seen Bella once and had fallen in love with her. Under the influence of liquor he had committed the infamous outrage.

He knocked at Dr. Rockway's door. A female voice, which he recognized as his beautiful victim, asked within:

"Who is here?"

"Is Dr. Rockway in? A very sick man needs his professional services at once.'

"Who is he?'

"Call the Doctor at once.'

The door opened, and a female form in a white night-dress appeared.

It was Bella. She was always armed at night with a small pistol.

"FOR GOD'S SAKE, STAND BACK,"

Cried Riordan to her.

At the same moment Scribner, who stood behind Riordan fired at the girl, but missed her.

Miss Rockway, believing that Riordan had shot, fired at him. Her bullet entered his left breast.

Scribner ran away at the top of his speed. The Doctor's house was at once in alarm. He himself came with a light, and examined the wound of the prostrate and groaning Riordan.

"You have but a few minutes to live,' he said to the young man.

The latter then made a clean breast of his crimes, and expired imploring Miss Rockway's forgiveness

Scribner was arrested next day, and summarily hung.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

The Democracy of the [illegible] in delegate [illegible]

The National bank notes [illegible] tired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government [illegible] legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as by the terms of the original contract under which they were issued, expressly [illegible]

[illegible] right to issue [illegible] as coin is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound busines interests of the country may, from time to time, require.

We are in favor of such legislation by Congress as will authorize the taxation by the states of United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad, through the medium of foreign syndicates, or other methods, and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by [illegible] so as to distribute said debts among the people at home—affording the most favorable and practical opportunities for the investment of their savings in the funded dept of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation which shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar, of 412½ grains, to the coin of the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public and private, and that the coinage thereof shall be unlimited, and upon the same terms and conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

We are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent collision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employees of corporations engaged in the busines of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that said lien should be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and the owner.

The Democratic party is a friend of the common school system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last appointment of the State for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonerable, and we demand that the next Legislature, in apportioning the State for Legislative purposes, as will be their imperative duty, shall have regard for population alone and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the Circuit Courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the States, tend to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the true intests of the people. And we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the Constitution, and expressed in the Judiciary Act of 1789.

We are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the Federal Government, either in lands, bonds, money or by pledge of public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders in the Republican party who secretly connived, and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme by and through venial returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for President and Vice President were wrongfully kept out of the position to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against free government, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that can only be condoned when the malafactors who seated a fraud in the Presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the President of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the acts of Federal officers in attempting to interfere with the rights and powers of the State courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

We make the following extract from an article on "Gravel Roads," which appeared in the Plymouth Democrat last week. This is a subject that is attracting general attention, and we commend to our readers what the Democrat has to say in favor of such highways. It says:

The question of gravel roads is one in which the people everywhere are, or at least should be, interested. The question has been brought to the attention of the people time and again, but, in this locality at least, no good has resulted from the agitation, nor is any good likely to result therefrom in the near future. H. B. Dickson, who has had considerable experience in wagon road traveling in Indiana, in a letter from Owensburg of a recent date, gives his experience, comparing the ease and comfort with which travelers can move along over gravel roads with the difficulties and dangers encountered in pulling along through the mud. He says he has never been more firmly convinced that gravel roads are the best investment tax payers can make, than during the past days. With a carriage and a single horse on a gravel road he drove thirty miles in half a day, easily and pleasantly, while a day later in going a distance of eight miles with a buggy and two horses, more time was consumed than in going the thirty miles, and besides the buggy and harness were broken, and the horses injured enough to have paid toll on a gravel road for years. He is of the opinion if gravel roads run in every direction from Plymouth to the several townships of the county, the value of property would be greatly increased thereby, and would be the means of concentrating trade at the county seat, that is now scattered in the small places outside of its limits. It is estimated that gravel roads increase the value of every farm they pass, from ten to twenty per cent., and that they save more than the amount of toll in the wear and tear of wagons, buggies and horses. They enable farmers to do their work in the proper season, and they are not compelled to wait until summer commences to get their produce to market.

A Mule's Wonderful Trickery.

"Speaking about mules," remarked a sixfooter in Arkansas, as he cracked his whip at market, "I've got a mule at home which knows as much as I do, and I want to hear somebody say I'm half a fool." No one said so, and he went on. "I've stood around here and heard men blow about kicking mules till I've got disgusted. When you comes down to kicking, I want to bet on my mule. A friend came along and took dinner with me the other day, and as he seemed a little down-hearted, I took him out to see Thomas Jefferson, my champion mule. I was telling the good man how that mule would flop his feet around, and he said he would like to see a little fun. He'd passed his whole life in the South, but had never seen a mule lay his whole soule into a big time at kicking. "Well," he said, after borrowing some tobacco, "I took Thomas out of the stable, backed him up agin a hill, gin him a cuff on the ear, and we stood by to see the amusement. It was a good place to kick his durndest, and what do you suppose he did? In ten minutes by the watch he was out of sight. In five more we couldn't feel him with a twelve foot pole, and—and —" the crowd began to yell and sneer' and the narrator looked around and asked; "Does anybody think I'm lying? Would I lie for one mule? Right here under my arm is a pound of tallow candles which are to light the hole for to go in after Thomas; and I got word not an hour ago that the hind feet of a mule were sticking out of a hill thirty-nine miles as the bird flies from where my mule went in. I'm shaky on religion, gentlemen, but our family never had a liar in it."

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

SIXTEEN leading Crispins have been arrested at Marlboro, Mass., on indictments charging them with conspiracy in connection with recent labor troubles.

A BLACKMAILING story was written and printed in the New York Sun, the intended victim being no less a personage than the high Russian Princess Soveroff, who is now sojourning in New York, and said to be in high favor at the court of the Czar. The Sun publishers refused to divulge the author's name. Count Kalonoroff, nephew of the Princess, went to the Police Court to obtain a warrant for the arrest of the publishers of the offensive article. He was informed that a warrant could not be issued. Upon subsequent legal advice, the Princess resolved upon an entirely different course, and one that will tend to make the case not only celebrated, but of international importance. The blackmail having been attempted through the Postoffice, the offense comes within the jurisdiction of the National Government. The attention of the Russian Government will be called to the publication, and efforts made through it to have the United States Government take the matter up.

AN organized gang of Mollie Maguires, who have been committing depredations in Westmoreland county, Pa., for the past two years, has just been broken up by one of the band turning informer. Some of them are under arrest and others have fled. Several murders are charged to them.

THE WEST.

SOME excitement has been produced in St. Louis by the discovery of a heavy defalcation on the part of John F. Thornton, Clerk of the Circuit Court.

THE two murderers of Hugh McConville, who committed the crime at Chicago some weeks since, have been found guilty and sentenced to death....Chicago pork-packers have handled and packed 2,874,310 hogs from Nov. 1 to date, being 836,881 more than for the corresponding period last season.

DUNCAN, the defaulting President of the Pioneer Bank, of San Francisco, has at last been arrested, and will be prosecuted for his crime. He had been hiding in the city ever since the discovery of his defalcation.

ZACHIAS C. MITCHELL, a hitherto prominent and respected lawyer of St. Louis, Mo., has fallen into deep disgrace. He has been arrested on a charge of forging a note for $800. The proof against him is positive....Cameron, Amberg & Co., well-known printers and blank-book manufacturers of Chicago, have sustained a severe loss by fire. The damage to their establishment is estimated at $60,000.... At a meeting of the butter-dealers of Cincinnati, the other day, it was decided to memorialize the Legislature, asking the passage of such laws as will compel the branding of packages containing oleomargarine with its name.

THE SOUTH.

JAMES M. DAVIS, United States Deputy Revenue Collector, has just returned to Nashville from the most successful revenue raid ever made in Tennessee, having destroyed fourteen illicit concerns in Putnam, White, and DeKalb counties. James Milan and Frank Lewis are among the captured. Besides illicit distilling, they are charged with a peculiarly atrocious murder....Thomas C. Anderson was called before the bar of the Superior Criminal Court at New Orleans, the other day. The motion in arrest of judgment was overruled, and, when asked if he had anything to offer before his sentence, Anderson said that he considered his case a cruel prosecution under the forms of law; that he was in the power of the court, and ready to receive his sentence. Judge Whittaker answered that the accused had had a fair trial before an impartial jury, and that the verdict was fully justified by the evidence. He then sentenced Anderson, in consequence of the recommendation of the jury to the mercy of the court, to the lowest term under the law—two years at hard labor in the State penitentiary, and costs.

A Richmond (Va.) telegram says that "Gov. Holliday has vetoed the Barbour bill, which embodied the scheme of the anti-debt-payers in the Virginia Legislature. The veto created great excitement, and a boisterous attempt was made in the House to prevent its reading being heard. The bill, it is said, cannot be passed over the veto, and will occasion an extra session of the Legislature."

WASHINGTON.

THERE is no change in the position of the Government on the Mexican question. While a friendly feeling is expressed toward Mexico, there are no signs at present of an immediate recognition of the administration of President Diaz.

MANY members of Congress are of the opinion that the Wood Tariff bill will be defeated ....Robert W. Taylor, First Comptroller of the Treasury, died of paralysis last week.

THE President, not long ago, received information to the effect that colored men were being kidnapped from Florida, taken to Cuba and sold into slavery. He has determined, if such is the case, to put a stop to this newly-arisen slave trade, and, with that end in view, has dispatched a confidential agent to Havana, in the person of Congressman Leonard, of Louisiana, for the purpose of obtaining all the facts in the case.

GENERAL.

FOUR Government vessels are to be dispatched to France with full loads of American goods for exhibit at the Paris Exposition. All the space allowed to the United States has been already assigned by the Chief Commissioner.

GRAIN in sight in the States and Canada. Wheat, 9,285,000 bushels; corn, 4,836,000 bushels; oats, 2,982,000 bushels; rye, 790,000 bushels....George H. Baker, late Minister to Russia, believes that in the present European troubles Russia will stand with Germany, whatever may come, and that Austria will stand with Germany. He thinks the Russian party at Constantinople, composed of the Turks who favor an alliance with Russia, is very strong.

HON. A. G. CATTELL, formerly United States Senator from New Jersey, is now an inmate of a mad-house....A New York dispatch says: "The 4-per-cent. bonds seem to suit the farmers out West, who are subscribing largely. It is said that orders from Western cities for subscriptions to the new popular loan of 4-per-cent. bonds are being received in New York at an average of nearly $100,000 a day, principally from Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati."

POLITICAL.

A CALL has ben issued for the meeting of the Illinois Democratic State Convention at the State Capital on Wednesday, the 11th day of April, 1878.

JUDGE WHITTAKER has refused the application of Anderson, of the Louisiana Returning Board, for a new trial.

AT a meeting of the Socialistic Labor party of New York city, the other day, the red flag of the Commune was displayed. Resolutions were adopted denouncing a standing army and the existence of armories in cities, and setting forth that more protection should be given to free speech. "Only let the army be abolished," one speaker said, "and labor would make such a move as would insure its rights, and render it equal with capital."

REPRESENTATIVE SOUTHARD, of Ohio, has introduced in Congress a bill to amend the Federal constitution by an article providing for the election of three Presidents, representing the Southern, the Western, and the Middle and Eastern States, the three to be a [illegible] for the Government, etc....A Washington [illegible] [illegible] a movement [illegible] [illegible] writ of [illegible] [illegible] in Washington [illegible] [illegible]. FOREIGN NEWS.

THE announcement is made that the Governments of Germany and France have expressed satisfaction with the choice of a Pope. This is especially important in the case of Germany, because it may lead to the modification of the the ecclesiastical laws by which Bismarck contrives to exclude from the German nation any ideas except such as the Hohenzollern house might choose to supply—religious as well as political.

DISPATCHES of Feb. 27 state that Russia and Servia are at loggerheads regarding the occupation of the territory in what is known as Old Servia which the troops of Prince Milan held at the time of the suspension of hostilities; the anti-Russian demonstration in London was a success as to numbers and brute force, 100,000 persons being present; and that clause in the peace conditions which contemplates the occupation of Bulgaria by Russian troops for two years after the reconstruction of that province into a principality is likely to meet with a vigorous protest from Austria....An explosion of dynamite at Parma, Italy, recently, killed six and wounded sixty-three persons.

THE Shah of Persia is about to pay a visit to the Czar at St. Petersburg, and will be entertained magnificently by the Imperial Court of Russia.

CABLE dispatches of the 27th ult. state that negotiations between Russia and Turkey were concluded, and the basis of a permanent peace agreed upon; and that Russia had no intention of relinquishing any of her advantages to please either Austria or England, but was resolved to fight rather than abate one jot of her intentions.

A ROME dispatch indicates that the new Pope "will not be as liberal as has been supposed"—in other words, that Pope Leo XIII. will be a different kind of man from what he lately was as Cardinal Pecci.

A NUMBER of heavy commercial failures are announced in Cork and Belfast, Ireland....It is announced from London that in the event of war Lord Napier will be placed in command of the British forces, with Sir Garnet Wolseley, the hero of the Ashantee war, as Chief of Staff....Dr. Arif, President of the Red Crescent Society in Constantinople, appeals to America for help. Thousands of victims are succumbing day by day, he says, to hunger and cold, and the cry for aid is to those throughout the world who sympathize with suffering humanity.

CABLE dispatches of the 1st inst. say that a greater part of the Russian conditions had been accepted by the Porte, though the question relative to the surrender of the Turkish fleet was still unsettled. It was rumored in several European capitals that there would be no conference, and that Russia, England and Austria would be left to settle their differences among themselves. There was much excitement in St. Petersburg over the active war preparations in England.

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO MESSAGE.

Following is the full text of the President's message vetoing the Silver bill:

To the House of Representatives:

After a very careful consideration of House bill No. 1,093, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," I feel compelled to return it to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with my objections to its passage. Holding the opinion, which I expressed in my annual message, "that neither the interests of the Government nor of the people of the United States would be promoted by disparaging silver as one of the two precious metals which furnish the coinage of the world, and that legislation which looks to maintaining the volume of intrinsic money to as full a measure of both metals as their relative commercial values will permit would be neither unjust nor inexpedient," it has been my earnest desire to concur with Congress in the adoption of such measures to increase the silver coinage of the country as would not impair the obligation of contracts, either public or private, nor injuriously affect public credit. It is only upon the conviction that this bill does not meet these essential requirements that I feel it my duty to withhold from it my approval. My present official duty as to this bill permits only an attention to the specific objections to its passage, which seem to me so important as to justify me in asking from the wisdom and duty of Congress that further consideration of the bill for which the constitution has in such cases provided. The bill provides for the coinage of silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, of standard silver, to be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in contracts. It is well known that the market value of that number of grains of standard silver during the past year has been from 90 to 92 cents, as compared with the standard gold dollar. Thus the silver dollar authorized by this Silver bill is worth 8 to 10 per cent. less than it purports to be worth, and is made a legal tender for debts contracted when the law did not recognize such coins as lawful money. The right to pay duties in silver, or in certificates of silver deposits, will, when they are issued in sufficient amount to circulate, put an end to the receipt of revenue in gold, and thus compel the payment of silver for both the principal and interest of the public debts. Prior to February, 1873, there was $1,143,493,400 of the bonded debt now outstanding issued, when the silver dollar was unknown in circulation in this country, and was only a convenient form of silver bullion for exportation. Since February, 1873, $583,440,350 of the funded debt has been issued, when gold alone was the coin for which the bonds were sold, and gold alone was the coin in which both parties to the contract understood that the bonds would be paid. These bonds entered into the markets of the world. They were paid for in gold when silver had greatly depreciated and when no one would have bought them if it had been understood that they would be paid in silver. The sum of $225,000,000 of these bonds has been sold during my administration for gold coin, and the United States received the benefit of these sales by a reduction of the rate of interest to 4 per cent. During the progress of these sales a doubt was suggested as to the coin in which the payment of these bonds would be made. The public announcement was thereupon authorized that it was not to be anticipated that any further legislation of Congress or any action of any department of the Government would sanction or tolerate the redemption of the principal of these bonds or the payment of the interest thereon in coin of less value than the coin authorized by law at the time of the issue of the bonds, being the coin exacted by the Government in exchange for the same. In view of these facts it will be justly regarded as a grave breach of public faith to undertake to pay these bonds, principal or interest, in silver coin worth in the market less than the coin received for them. It is said that the silver dollar made a legal tender by this bill will, under its operation, be equivalent in value to the gold dollar. Many supporters of this bill believe this, and would not justify an attempt to pay debts either public or private in coin of inferior value to the money of the world. The capital defect of the bill is that it contains no provision protecting from its operation pre-existing debts in case the coinage which it creates shall continue to be of less value than that which was the sole legal tender when they were contracted. If it is now proposed for the purpose of taking advantage of the depreciation of silver in the payment of debts to coin and make a legal tender a silver dollar of a less commercial value, [illegible] whether of [illegible] [illegible] money in this [illegible] will [illegible] be questioned [illegible]. In all [illegible] heretofore contracted [illegible] silver dollars should be made a legal tender only at their market value. The standard of value should not be changed without the consent of both parties to the contract. National promises should be kept with unflinching fidelity. There is no power to compel a nation to pay its just debts. Its credit depends on its honor. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] has led or allowed its creditors to expect. I cannot approve a bill which, in my judgment, authorizes the violation of sacred obligations. The obligation of the public faith transcends all questions of profit or public advantage. Its unquestionable maintenance is the dictate as well of the highest expediency as of the most necessary duty, and should ever be carefully guarded by the Executive, by Congress, and by the people. It is my firm conviction that if the country is to be benefited by a silver coinage it can be done only by the issue of silver dollars of full value, which will defraud no man. A currency worth less than it purports to be worth will in the end defraud not only creditors but all who are engaged in legitimate business, and none more surely than those who are dependent on their daily labor for the daily bread. R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Feb. 28, 1878.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, Feb. 25.—SENATE.—Vice President Wheeler, who has been suffering recently from neuralgia, gave notice of his intended absence for several days, and asked that a President pro tem. be designated....Mr. Conkling presented the petition of James Gordon Bennett asking Congress to aid him in seeking new discoveries at the North pole. He had purchased the Arctic vessel Pandora, and intended to man and run her at his own expense. The petitioner desired that the vessel should carry the American flag.... The House joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain arms to the Washington Light Infantry, of Charleston, S. C., was taken up and passed after considerable debate....A large number of petitions were presented on various subjects.... Several amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill were offered and referred.

HOUSE.—A bill was presented proposing to give Dr. Mudd, of Maryland, $3,000 for aiding cholera sufferers at the Dry Tortugas. Dr. Mudd was the surgeon who set the leg of John Wilkes Booth, and who was sent to Dry Tortugas for it....Mr. Shalley introduced a bill authorizing the issue of United States notes, and providing for the redemption of certain United States bonds....A number of bills for issuing certificates of silver bullion deposited in the United States mints were introduced and referred....The following bills were also introduced: By Mr. Southard, proposing an amendment to the constitution relating to the election of President and Vice President; by Mr. Fort, to gradually retire the circulating notes of national-banking associations and replace the same with United States treasury notes; by Mr. Bland, for the free coinage of the silver dollar; also to utilize the product of the gold and silver mines, and provide for the issuing of certificates for gold and silver bullion deposited in the mints; by Mr. Blair, authorizing the Southern Pacific railroad to extend its line westwardly to El Paso; by Mr. Crittenden, to reduce the pay of navy officers, and reduce the number of such officers in the line and staff....Mr. Goode, Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, reported a bill applying the proceeds of the public lands to support free schools. Recommitted.... Mr. Turner asked leave to offer a resolution for the appointment of a select committee of thirteen members to inquire into the causes of the prevailing depression throughout the country. Mr. Conger objected....Mr. Roberts, Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution for the appointment of experts to aid the committee of investigation. Defeated—yeas, 78; nays, 160....On motion of Mr. Hewitt of Alabama, the House, by a vote of 174 to 51, went into committee of the whole, Mr. Southard in the chair, and resumed consideration of the bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and Indian wars.

TUESDAY, Feb. 26.—SENATE.—The Senate proceeded to the election of a presiding officer, Vice President Wheeler having been compelled, on account of ill-health, to temporarily vacate the chair. The Republicans nominated Mr. Ferry, and the Democrats Mr. Thurman. Result: Ferry, 30; Thurman, 26. Judge Davis, of Illinois, voted for Mr. Thurman. No other business of importance was transacted in open session....In executive session the Senate considered the nomination of ex-Gov. Parsons, of Alabama, to be District Attorney for that State. After some discussion the case was postponed without action. The nomination of [illegible] for reappointment as Marshal for Montana Territory was rejected.

HOUSE.—A petition 700 yards long, and signed by 50,000 names, for the repeal of the law in relation to the transmission of matter through the mails, was referred....Mr. Rice, Chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill providing that, in case of death or resignation of a Pension Agent, the President may temporarily appoint his successor. Passed...Mr. Chalmers, of Mississippi, obtained the floor and addressed the House in reply to a speech made by Mr. Garfield some days previous. In reference to that speech, he said the voice was the voice of Jacob, but the hand was the hand of Esau. While declaring his ardent desire to see peace and harmony restored in the Union, that gentleman made an appeal to the passions of the North by a feigned description of the ingratitude of the South that would have "moved the stones to mutiny." The object of the gentleman from Ohio (Garfield) as well as the gentleman from Maine (Hale) was too clear to be misunderstood. It was a cunning and carefully-prepared assault on the Southern policy of the President. They had intended either to drive the President from his policy of conciliation or else drive the Republican party farther from the President. Another object had been to draw from Southern gentlemen some declaration of hostility toward the title of the President, in hopes that that would not only alienate him from them, but also as another evidence of Southern ingratitude. He said that the Democratic party did not intend to build up the Republican party by making war on the President. The Democratic party was satisfied with President Hayes. He was in his seat, whether he had obtained it by fraud, mistake, or accident. Referring to the prosecution of the Returning Board he said the gentleman from Maine (Hale) had condoled with members of the board, and had said that the North was deeply impressed with the ingratitude of the South. He (Chalmers) thought the whole country was impressed with the belief that the Returning Board could not be trusted, and that some of the visiting statesmen were not worthy of trust. Referring again to the policy of President Hayes, he said that the gentleman had shown himself to be an honorable, upright and honest man, and while he (Chalmers) did not think the President deserved any special credit for doing his constitutional duty (except that it stood in marked contrast to the action of his predecessors), he was unwilling to see any movement in the South that looked like an act of ingratitude toward the President, and if he (Chalmers) were Governor of Louisiana he should not hesitate to pardon every one of the members of the Returning Board as fast as they were convicted....Mr. Butler addressed the House on the financial question. He advocated the full restoration of silver to the coinage of the country, and made a lengthy argument in favor of a greenback currency. He said "we want the greenback for our currency, and mean to have it."

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 27.—SENATE.—Mr. Hoar presented the petition of citizens of Cape Cod, remonstrating against the passage of Mr. Sargent's bill to organize a coast guard and life-saving service, Mr. Sargent made a speech attacking the life-saving service as at present organized, and charging that a disgraceful state of inefficiency existed....Mr. Allison introduced a bill to provide for the entry of lands by Indians under the Homestead law....Mr. Maxey introduced a bill to establish the rank of Senior Inspector General of the United States army....The bill for continuing the work of improving the Capitol grounds was discussed without any action being taken....Consideration was resumed of the bill to authorize a long bond for the investment of savings, and Mr. Wallace explained at length the provisions of the measure....The bill empowering the President to fill the vacant New York Pension Agency was passed, after considerable opposition on the part of Messrs. Conkling and Blaine, by a vote of 48 to 6.

HOUSE.—The bill authorizing the President to review the court-martial proceedings of 1861 in the case of ex-Surgeon General Hammond was passed without debate....The bill pensioning soldiers of the Mexican war was discussed without action.... Mr. Banning, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to sell the following ordnance establishments: Watervliet arsenal, New York; Washington arsenal, District of Columbia; Allegheny arsenal, Pennsylvania; Pikesville, Md., and Watertown arsenal, Mississippi.

THURSDAY, Feb. 28.—SENATE.—The House bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river at Glasgow, Mo., was reported favorably and placed on the calendar....Mr. Whyte submitted a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Navy for information relating to the Huron disaster....At 3 o'clock the Clerk of the House appeared with the President's veto message, and announced in the constitutional way the action of the House upon it. The opponents of silver endeavored, by technical objections, to delay the measure. These were speedily overcome by the silverites, and the message was received and read. The President pro tempore—Shall the bill be passed? A Senator—Notwithstanding the objections of the President? The President pro tempore—The Chair uses the words of the constitution. The Clerk then proceeded to call the roll, and the bill was passed over the veto—yeas, 46; nays, 19. This vote was stronger than the silver men [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], together with the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] of Mr. Hill, of Georgia.

HOUSE.—The President sent to the House a message vetoing the Silver bill. Great confusion on the floor ensued when the reading was concluded. The Speaker said the question was, "Shall the House pass the bill, notwithstanding the veto. Mr. Stephens was recognized to move the previous question on passing the bill. This was sustained by the House by an almost unanimous vote, and [illegible] Mr. Foot asked that the message be again read. Mr. Cox objected, saying that the message was "a charge of fraud by a fraud." Mr. McCook called Mr. Cox to order, and demanded [illegible] be taken down. [illegible] Much [illegible] Mr. Cox [illegible] would [illegible] McCook [illegible] vote was then [illegible] 73. The Speaker [illegible] "In [illegible] situation, two-thirds [illegible] and the bill [illegible] dent to the [illegible] house [illegible] clapping [illegible] and [illegible] ate. [illegible] original [illegible] while [illegible] voted [illegible] occasion voted with the silverites....The House passed the bill [illegible] estimates for appropriations needed by the Navy Department to be made in full....The Naval Committee [illegible] report on the bill [illegible] Howgate's Arctic [illegible] expedition....Some hours were spent in debating the bill pensioning soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars.

LOUISIANA POLITICS.

Partisan Debate in the House of Representatives—Eugene Hale Attacks the President's Southern Policy—Gen. Garfield Defends the Administration.

[Compiled from the House Proceedings.]

Mr. Hale, of Maine, said he had been profoundly moved with his observation of the course of events in Louisiana for the past year, and especially for the past six months. In the beginning he had watched the experiment made there hopefully, believing that the magnanimous and conciliatory course pursued by the President toward that people would be met by a generous and hearty return, but he had seen that honor and the plighted support pledged in return for generosity had been forfeited; that the resolutions of that State Legislature went for nothing, and that political prosecutions were urged to-day in Louisiana with a spirit of violence which reminded him of older days. He therefore could keep silence no longer. He reviewed the course of events in Louisiana from the close of Grant's administration, bringing forward prominently the fact that the title of the Packard Government and the Packard Legislature had been settled by the Electoral Commission, it being based on the count of the Returning Board, the same Board whose action in the case of the President had been confirmed by the Electoral Commission whose decision had been accepted by both houses of Congress. Its title had also since been affirmed by the Senate in the admission to a seat in that body of Kellogg, elected to the Senate by the Packard Legislature. He spoke of the call of that Legislature on the Federal Government for protection against domestic violence. He did not know, and nobody could tell, the reflections that passed through the mind of the President on that subject, but he could see that the President, looking on the subject with a desire for peace, with a disposition for conciliation, with a tendency toward tenderness, determined to start out and commit his administration to a course, not of repression or a strong iron hand upon the people, but of concession, of magnanimity, and disregard the call of the Legislature of Louisiana. He went on to speak of the sending of the commission to Louisiana by the President, the result of whose mission was the disintegration of the Packard Government and the installation of the Nicholls Government, and he declared that no experiment in that direction had ever been made so thoroughly as the President had made this one. The Legislature and Gov. Nicholls had promised a pardon for all political offenses. He asked the House to turn back its mind, and he asked President Hayes to turn back his mind six months, to the 1st of May, 1877. Would anybody have been found then to predict that in less than sixty days the men who, foremost of all, had made themselves offensive to the Louisiana Democracy, because they had carried out the law of that State and had thereby become political offenders against that party in Louisiana and throughout the country, would have been prosecuted? Would the President have believed it? Would anyone have believed it?

Mr. Hale argued that there was no legal ground for the prosecution of Anderson, of the Returning Board, who had been for twenty years elected to the Legislature from his own parish, who had always stood high in public and private estimate, and who had never before been considered an outcast and a malefactor. In confirmation of his statement that there was a compact that there should be no political prosecutions in Louisiana, he quoted a letter in a New York paper.

Mr. Hale went on to say that the adherents of the Democratic party in the South, who were now so eager for upholding the law and for the punishment of any infraction of it, lurked in the swamps and on the hill-sides and in the ravines of the South, to ambush and shoot down officers of the revenue. It was a party so sensitive to-day that it robbed constituencies of their representatives on this floor and cast decisive votes in the House, at the hands of men who had no more right to seats than Dick Turpin had to the booty which he had plundered on the highway.

Mr. Atkins indignantly denied the statement of Mr. Hale as to the ambushing and murder of revenue officers.

Mr. Hale said that there was a profound impression that the proceeding in Louisiana had its root, its mainspring, its source elsewhere; that there were many who believed that the whole performance had been dictated and driven forward by the restless men who did not mean ever to admit that the Presidential title has been settled. The President of the United States was learning to-day a lesson of misplaced confidence. It was the old, old story. There had been nothing which the President could do to make efficacious his course toward the South which he had not done. There had been no encouragement which could be held out to that section showing the President's good faith which the President had not resorted to. He had appointed Cabinet Ministers, Foreign Ministers, and other high officials from that section because he had been anxious that, if the experiment failed, nobody should be able to say it had failed from any lack on his part, and how the return was received from Louisiana. In conclusion he intimated that it might be the constitutional duty of the President to see to it that no injustice was done to a citizen of the United States.

Mr. Gibson replied to Mr. Hale. He denied that there had been any such compact for immunity for crime as had been asserted by Mr. Hale. As to the case of the murder of Webber in Feliciana parish, of which Mr. Hale had spoken, he (Gibson) had interested himself in having the guilty party brought to justice, and the information which he received was that it was the general impression that Webber had been murdered by a man of his own party, a personal enemy. He portrayed the state of affairs in Louisiana during late years when no guilty man had been punished, and when no honest man felt his life secure from lawlessness, but since the Nicholls Government had been inaugurated, no man, whether poor or rich, who committed a crime had escaped punishment. He denied that the Returning Board was being persecuted on political grounds. Who had anything to gain by that? Certainly not the people of Louisiana. Certainly not the National Democratic party, for Hayes' title had been passed upon by Congress. The Returning Board was being prosecuted for forgery. That crime of forgery was trivial in so far as the recent election was concerned, but it was a crime of enormous proportions, and the man who falsified the returns struck a blow at civil liberty and free government. If this movement in Louisiana which appeared to be a very simple one was to excite the public mind, to excite animosities, which he had hoped were sleeping in Northern communities, he should deplore it more than any other man. Reverting to the charges of a compact between the authorities of Louisiana and the Federal Government, he denied it not only for the Nicholls Government, not only for his friends, but he denied it for the President and the Cabinet. They would not be guilty of such crimes.

Mr. Carlisle quoted from a speech made by President Hayes to prove that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] from constitutional duty, and not as an act of conciliation.

Mr. Hale asked then if the people of the South were placed under any obligation by it.

Mr. Gibson replied that they were placed under the highest obligations that American citizens could assume. The obligation of freemen in a free State in the American Union, to obey the laws of the United States and to obey the laws of that State.

Mr. Clymer said every portion of the country outside the borders of Louisiana as well as in it was interested in the proceedings now taking place in that State. In behalf of the people whom he represented he could say that they desire that the persons connected with the electoral fraud as principals should be punished; and that all who were abettors and aiders should be punished, because while the country might have to submit to the consequences of that fraud, in the interest of human liberty all people everywhere should know how and by whom this great crime had been perpetrated. The question should not be considered as a local one. The whole people should give encouragement to the people of Louisiana to go forward and discover who were the principals. He denied that any obligation implied from the resolutions adopted by the Louisiana Legislature or any expression used by Gov. Nicholls was binding on him or anybody. The Returning-Board prosecutions could do no harm in the present, and they might be of immense value in the future.

Mr. Garfield next obtained the floor and said that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Clymer) called upon the people of Louisiana to help the Democratic party get at the great crime of the Presidential count. This he (Garfield) characterized as the entering point of the wedge which was to drive home what was called the great crime of the century. He did not intend to make an inflammatory speech. If there was a people on earth that had the right to be weary at heart of politics and partisanship it was the American people. He pictured the stages which a country must undergo in transition from a state of war to a state of peace. First, there was the military stage, when in bloody battles soldiers met to decide by power of strength the questions involved. Next came the stage that was semi-civil and semi-military. It was in this stage that Gen. Grant had taken the reins of the Government, and had endeavored to keep his administration within the province of civil and military power. When he had been succeeded by President Hayes, that gentleman had thought it was possible to declare that the semi-military period had gone, and that the period had come when only peace methods should be inaugurated. In his judgment President Hayes was an optimist, who looked only on the bright side of human nature and disliked to look at its dark side. His (President Hayes') faith and hope had been larger than the faith and hope of most people. He had gone forward to the very verge of the constitution in offering both hands in fellowship and in offering the olive branch of peace. He had gone to the limits of his power in order to bring about an era of good feeling and pacification. No man had shared more heartily the aspirations of the President than he (Garfield) had. He had tried in every way to aid the President in his project, and in order to do that there was a world of things to be forgotten and forgiven on both sides. If the strict letter of law had been adhered to at the end of the rebellion, there would have been no end to the awful spectacles of prosecution and punishment (under the law signed by George Washington) against those who had committed the crime of treason.

Mr. Waddell asked if the troops had not been removed from the South as a matter of constitutional duty, and did not the Republican party make war on the President for that?

Mr. Garfield replied that the withdrawal of the troops from the Governor's room and office in New Orleans was a constitutional duty. As a political student he (Garfield) had never doubted and did not doubt to-day that Packard had been honestly and fairly elected Governor of Louisiana.

Mr. Garfield went on to say that the action of the President in removing the troops had been looked upon by the people of Louisiana as a generous and magnanimous action, and they had garlanded the man who had performed it with the richest praise. In that era of reconciliation both sides had forgiven and forgotten much. There had been bleeding hearts in the land at the recitals of the massacre at Hamburg and Ellenton, but these horrible stories were never heard of now. Why? Because there had been a silent determination to let all that terrible chapter sleep. All the outrages which had been committed in Louisiana during the late election had been covered with the veil of oblivion. Who had begun the latter revival of the chapter? While that work of conciliation had been going forward, there had commenced at the North (he affirmed it boldly) the process for laying the keel for another Presidential campaign, and the order had gone forth to Louisiana to open upon the members of the Returning Board—to disguise it under the form of a State proceeding, but to enter a wedge—and then the Democratic power, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Clymer) had stated, would summon all its strength to drive the wedge to its head and stamp the great fraud of the election as it deserves.

Continuing, he said that many weeks ago details of all that was now taking place in Louisiana had been foreshadowed by many persons as a part of the programme. The impression was abroad that the prosecution of the Returning Board was the beginning of a purpose to reopen the whole question. One by one events were developing which would make it impossible to find the brotherhood and pacification which was so earnestly desired. It would be impossible to continue that course of pacification and brotherhood unless there was some reciprocity somewhere. It had been denied that the proceedings of the State Court had been irregular. There was a letter in to-day's New York papers from J. Madison Wells. In that letter Wells stated that five successive Grand Juries had refused to find a true bill of indictment against him, and from other statements he (Garfield) understood that three juries had refused to find a true bill against Anderson. He asked his Northern colleagues what would be thought of a District Attorney who, having tried to get an indictment against a citizen and failed, should lodge an information and have him tried. What Prosecuting Attorney in the North could stand in the face of an outraged people and do that?

He went on to say that there was an ulterior purpose behind all this persecution. It was but a cloak and cover for a raid to be made for political purposes in the name of the Democratic party upon the title of the President of the United States. It was in view of that that the people that he represented felt their efforts at pacification had been met not in the spirit in which they had been offered, and if this sort of proceeding went forward the President would be crippled in his conciliatory policy and every man who supported him would be crippled. If the Democrats desired to rob him of whatever support he hitherto had they were taking the best course to do it. The hope that both sections of the country were standing hand to hand again in old fellowship was weakening day by day, and would disappear if that line of conduct were persisted in, and it was in the light of that fact that he had attempted to state the spirit in which all those proceedings seemed to exhibit themselves.

Words Coined by Lincoln.

Noah Brooks, writing of President Lincoln in Scribner for March, says he was addicted to coining words and to using words which, though not found in the lexicons, seemed to express his meaning better than any other. Thus, of people who were pragmatic and meddlesome, he said that they were "interruptions." The quality of being easily duped he called "du-pen'-ance," and of a man who had been overtaken by a just retribution he said that "he had got his come-up-ance."

INCOME TAX.

And What Is Derived From It.

Commissioner Raum has written a letter to the Committee of Ways and Means, in reply to an inquiry from that committee in regard to the productiveness of the tax on incomes, when it was in operation, and his estimate of the probable revenue of the Government in case the income tax is reimposed. The letter contains the following statement, which shows the number of persons assessed for income in 1870; also the amount of personal-income tax collected on the lists of 1870, the rate of tax being 2½ per cent. and the exemption $2,000:

Number of persons whose taxable income was over 10,000, 8,[illegible].

Of the entire amount collected that year, the State of New York paid 35 per cent.; Pennsylvania and Massachusetts paid 13 per cent. each; Ohio, 7 per cent.; New Jersey, 5 per cent.; Illinois, 4 per cent.; Maryland and California, each 3 per cent.; Kentucky, Michigan, Connecticut and Rhode Island, each 2 per cent. These twelve States paid 92 per cent. of the entire amount collected.

At that time the country was in a comparative state of prosperity, and, taking into account the shrinkage of values since, the failures of corporations and individuals who had great wealth then, and the general depression of business, Commissioner Raum does not believe the same ratio of taxation now would yield more than one-half the revenue that was collected them. The Commissioner does not think it would pay to revive the income tax.

A Man Falls 1,400 Feet.

On Monday morning last a young man named Philip King, employed in the Owen mine, fell from the top to the bottom of the shaft, a distance of 1,400 feet. No one saw King fall into the shaft, although seven men came up in the bucket with him, and the brakesman and bucket-lander were present with lanterns. As the men descended the shaft they found a cap at the 200-foot level, and discovered blood upon the timbers at different points. Search was immediately instituted, and in the "sump," 1,400 feet below the surface, crushed, mangled, and mutilated out of all semblance of humanity, were found the remains of Philip King.—Calaveras C(al.) Chronicle.

THE late King Victor Emmanuel had many peculiarities. One of these was, he never ate in public. He sat out all his state dinners, at which he was obliged to be present, with his hands resting on the hilt of his sword, without tasting anything, except, perhaps, some trifle at dessert. His long and superabundant mustaches were the cause of this public abstemiousness. He made up for it, however, in private, when he could bind up his obstructives on each side of his face without becoming a public laughing-stock.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION AT TOLEDO.

The convention of the National Greenback party, held at Toledo on Friday, Feb. 22, was largely attended, and the proceedings were unusually harmonious. Judge Francis W. Hughes, of Pennsylvania, presided. In taking the chair he briefly thanked the body for the honor conferred on him, and reviewed at some length the history of the national-banking system from the first feeble and fruitless attempts to inaugurate it in 1789 to the present time. He then discussed at considerable length the problem of labor and capital, and declared that it would not be solved by either great political party, and would remain unsolved unless the party born here to-day should settle the question in the future. Regarding protection, he declared that the State of Pennsylvania had been misrepresented. The 54,000 Greenback votes of Pennsylvania came from a party which advocates the broadest kind of protection—the protection of labor against capital and against the extortions of usurers; the protection of miners and their families against transportation monopolists. He said protection should be applied to the agricultural interests of the Mississippi valley; that they should be shielded from the combinations of trunk lines, and remarked incidentally that he and the party favored eminent domain in respect to cottagers as against railroads.

Mr. Harper, of Illinois, made a speech, and Mr. Allis presented the views of the Greenback State Central Committee of Wisconsin on the financial question. He read a lengthy speech, in the course of which he promised that Wisconsin, which was already a strong Greenback State, would cast an overwhelming Greenback vote at the next national election if the platform adopted by this convention should be wisely formed. He arraigned the financial policy of the Government in past years as being in the sole interest of the rich and against the poor, and denounced the Secretary of the Treasury and his present policy, contrasting it with his former utterances, and said that, in brief, Wisconsin demanded the enfranchisement of labor, through a plentiful supply of Government money. Labor asked this from capital not as a charity or as a mercy, but demanded it as a right, and she will have t peaceably.

The following platform was read:

WHEREAS, Throughout our entire country the value of real estate is depreciated, industry paralyzed, trade depressed, business incomes and wages reduced, unparalleled distress inflicted upon the poorer and middle ranks of our people, the land filled with fraud, embezzlement, bankruptcy, crime, suffering, pauperism and starvation; and

WHEREAS, This state of things has been brought about by legislation in the interest of and dictated by money-lenders, bankers and bondholders; and

WHEREAS, While we recognize the fact that men in Congress connected with both the old political parties have stood up manfully for the rights of the people, and met the threats of the money power and the ridicule of an ignorant and subsidized press, yet neither the Republican nor the Democratic parties in their national policies propose remedies for the existing evils; and

WHEREAS, The Independent-Greenback party and other associations more or less effective have been unable heretofore to make a formidable opposition to the old party organizations; and

WHEREAS, The limiting of the legal-tender quality of greenbacks, the changing of currency bonds into coin bonds, the demonetization of the silver dollar, the exception of bonds from taxation, the contraction of the circulating medium, the proposed forced resumption of specie payments, and the prodigal waste of the public lands were crimes against the people, and as far as possible the results of these criminal acts must be counteracted by judicious legislation, therefore we assemble in national convention and make a declaration of our principles, and invite all patriotic citizens to unite in an effort to secure financial reform and industrial emancipation. The organization shall be known as the "National party," and under this name we will perfect, without delay, national, State and local associations to secure the election to office of such men only as will pledge themselves to do all in their power to establish these principles:

1. It is the exclusive function of the General Government to coin and create money and regulate its value. All bank issues designed to circulate as money should be suppressed, their circulating medium, whether of metal or paper, should be issued by the Government and made a full legal tender for all debts, duties and taxes in the United States at its stamped value.

2. There shall be no privileged class of creditors. Official salaries, pensions, bonds, and all other debts and obligations, public or private, shall be discharged in the legal-tender money of the United States, strictly according to the stipulations of the laws under which they were contracted.

3. That the coinage of silver be placed on the same footing as that of gold.

4. Congress shall provide said money adequate to the full employment of labor, the equitable distribution of its products, and the requirements of business, fixing a minimum amount per capita to the population as near as may be, and otherwise regulating its volume by wise and equitable provisions of law, so that the rate of interest will secure to labor its just reward.

5. It is inconsistent with the genius and spirit of popular government that any species of private property should be exempt from bearing its just share of the public burdens. Government bonds and money should be taxed precisely as other property, and a graduated income tax should be levied for the support of the Government and the payment of its debts.

6. The public lands are the common property of the whole people, and should not be sold to speculators nor gambled to railroads or other corporations, but should be donated to actual settlers in limited quantities.

7. The Government should, by general enactments, encourage the development of our agricultural, mineral, mechanical, manufacturing and commercial resources, to the end that labor may be fully and profitably employed, but no monopolies should be legalized.

8. All useless offices should be abolished, the most rigid economy enforced in every branch of the public service, and severe punishments inflicted upon public officers who betray the trusts reposed in them.

9. As educational labor has devised means for multiplying production by inventions and discoveries, and as their use requires the exercise of mind as well as body, such legislation should be had that the number of hours of daily toil will be reduced, giving to the working classes more leisure for mental improvement and social enjoyment, and saving them from premature decay and death.

10. The adoption of an American monetary system, as proposed herein, will harmonize all differences in regard to tariff and Federal taxation, reduce and equalize the cost of transportation by land and water, distribute equitably the joint earnings of capital and labor, secure to the producers of wealth the results of their labor and skill, muster out the vast army of idlers who, under the existing system, grow rich upon the earnings of others, that every man and woman may, by their own efforts, secure a competence, so that overgrown fortunes and extreme poverty will be seldom found within the limits of our republic.

11. Both National and State Governments should establish bureaus of labor and industrial statistics, clothed with the power of gathering and publishing the same.

12. That the contract system of employing labor in our prisons and reformatory institutions works great injustice to our mechanics and artisans, and should be prohibited.

13. The importation of servile labor into the United States from China is a problem of the most serious importance, and we recommend legislation looking to its suppression.

Each resolution was received with applause, but vociferous and long-continued cheering greeted the first plank, which bears more directly on the finance question. The whole platform was adopted without debate, and by a unanimous vote.

The following National Executive Committee was appointed: Massachusetts, Charles McLean; Rhode Island, J. C. Vallett; Connecticut, Alexander Troup; New York, Ralph Beaumont; New Jersey, John J. Drew; Pennsylvania, F. Dewees; Maryland, Jesse Gilmore; Virginia, Moses Stearns; West Virginia, John A. Thompson; Ohio, D. B. Sturgeon; Michigan, Moses W. Field; Indiana, O. J. Smith; Illinois, Alexander Campbell; Wisconsin, Edward P. Allis; Nebraska, Allen Root; Iowa, Daniel Campbell; Missouri, Britain A. Hill; Kentucky, P. L. D. Duppy; Tennessee, Henry Richmond; Arkansas, Charles E. Cunningham; Louisiana, D. Forney; Alabama, J. R. Woodall; Georgia, Daniel H. Pittman; Kansas, U. F. Sargent; Texas, left vacant by request until the State Convention State; Colorado, Joseph Wolf; Oregon, Thomas S. Durant; California, left vacant for the present.

A resolution was offered and unanimously adopted denouncing the Silver bill just passed in Congress as a delusion, and indignantly condemning it as a financial measure.

The Hon. S. F. Cary made an eloquent five-minute speech, in which he urged an active aggressive, forward movement, expressed hopes that the Silver League in Washington would feel the moral pressure of this convention and constitution, and would break away from parties that have been binding them so firmly.

Blanton Duncan said he had advocated the name of National party that the name might indicate that it was a party of the whole Union, and that, while he had been a Confederate soldier, he was now a true Union man. He predicted that the country would at the next election be astonished at the strength of this party, which would become the first party instead of the third party, as it is now called.

Other speeches were made by Hill of Missouri, Trevellick of Michigan, Seavers of Pennsylvania, Dana of Illinois, Solly of Kentucky, and Beaumont of New York.

THE FINANCIAL ISSUE.

A History of the National Bonds—What the People Demand.

[Extracts from Mr. Voorhees' Speech in the Senate.]

The act of Feb. 25, 1862, is the beginning of our bonded debt. The precious metals were found to be unequal to the emergency of war. Specie payments were abandoned as soon as the hour of trial came, and gold and silver cowered in the rear, while the legal-tender dollar went to the front with the flag and staid there. I was among those who doubted our right to issue it, but experience has shown it the best money, all things considered, that ever circulated on American soil. By this act of February, 1862, and by similar legislation at subsequent periods, every bond issued by the Government which did not on its face stipulate for payment in coin was made payable by the express words of law in legal-tender notes. It was plainly in the statute that these notes, now known as greenbacks, "shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, internal duties, excise, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States, except duties on imports: and of all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatever, except for interest upon bonds and notes, which shall be paid in coin; and shall also be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States, except duties on imports and interest as aforesaid."

This simple, explicit, and at the same time comprehensive enactment guaranteed to the American people the right to pay three-fourths of their national debt in national currency. It was the law of the contract when all the 5-20 bonds, amounting to over $1,500,000,000, were purchased from the Government by the bondholders and paid for in currency at par, when it was quoted at from 40 to 60 per cent. below par in coin. Every one understood the law to be as I have stated it at the time of its passage. In fact the great struggle then was whether even the interest on the bonds I have mentioned should be paid in coin. The act of Feb. 25, 1862, first passed the House without any provision at all for the coin payment of interest. That feature of the law was attached here in the Senate as an amendment, and when the act, thus amended, was returned to the House, a violent conflict at once arose. An examination of the Congressional Globe for the second session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, at pages 821 and 900, will show that both Mr. Spaulding, of New York, and Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, the leading members of the Committee of Ways and Means, and one its Chairman, united in denouncing the Senate amendment in the bitterest and severest terms. They contended, in stern and determined language, that even the payment of interest in coin was an odious and unjust discrimination in favor of the bondholder and against the soldier, the sailor and the citizen, who were compelled to receive the legal-tender currency, greatly depreciated by this very discrimination.

No one by a single word in that entire debate made the slightest pretense or intimation that the principal of the bonds was payable in coin. During the full term of seven eventful years that followed there is not a platform of either political party in any State of the Union which makes such an assertion. No claim for such a construction of the law in behalf of the bondholder ever fell from the lips of a leading member of the party in power during the same length of time in either branch of Congress, or anywhere else, so far as the public is advised. On the contrary, in many States, and notably in Ohio, the home of the President and his Secretary of the Treasury, the dominant party in its State Convention in 1868 expressed its deliberate "conviction that, according to the laws under which the 5.20 bonds were issued, said bonds should be paid in the currency of the country which may be legal tenders when the Government shall be prepared to redeem such bonds." On this doctrine the present Chief Magistrate and his Secretary took their stand only nine years ago, and told the people that the doctrine was true. Not only so, but Secretary Sherman, who now in his recent report warns us against repudiation, then gave in a letter, dated March 20, 1868, and widely published, his idea of what constituted a repudiator. Speaking on this subject, he says:

"UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, March 20, 1868.

"DEAR SIR: I was glad to receive your letter. My personal interests are the same as yours, but, like you, I do not intend to be influenced by them. My construction of the law is the result of careful examination, and I feel quite sure an impartial court would confirm it if the case should be tried before a court. I send you my views, as fully stated in a speech. Your idea that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the "principal" in legal tenders is erroneous. I think the bondholder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he paid for the bonds. If the case is to be tested by the law I am right, if it is to be tested by Jay Cooke's advertisements, I am wrong. I hate repudiation or anything like it, but we ought not to be deterred from what is right for fear of undeserved epithets. If under the law as it stands the holder of five-twenties can only be paid in gold, the bondholder can demand only the kind of money he paid, then he is a repudiator and extortioner to demand money more valuable than he gave.

"Truly yours, JOHN SHERMAN."

When it is remembered that the bondholder never paid a dollar in coin for a bond of any description, but purchased them all with Government currency, which the Government itself had depreciated by refusing to take it for custom dues and interest, the full meaning of this letter becomes very plain and forcible. It is not the offspring of impulse or inexperience. Its author was Chairman of the Finance Committee of this body, and he wrote, as he says, after "careful examination." By the light which he here throws upon the subject we may see the exact beginning of repudiation and behold the furtive and ravenous movements of the actual repudiators as they hurry up and down the precincts of legislation during the last nine years of our history. By its light too we behold the present Secretary of the Treasury, judged by his own words, as the chief of repudiators, foremost among the violators of contracts, and a leader among those who have in no instance kept the good faith of the Government with its own people a moment after they found that bad faith would bring them richer gains. In less than ten months after this letter was written, and after the denunciation of the Ohio platform, Hon. John Sherman, then a Senator, advocated and procured the passage of the act of March, 1869, for the payment of all the bonds in coin which he had declared payable in currency, thereby establishing an open repudiation of a solemn and binding contract and fastening an extortion of not less than $500,000,000 on the staggering industries of the country as the speculative profits of the operation. In the whole financial history of the civilized world no parallel can be found to this audacious deed of broken faith, deliberate treachery to the people, and national dishonesty. It stands out by itself, towering high above all common frauds, and dwarfing them in comparison with its own vast proportions. It will bear the names of those who enacted it to distant generations amid the groans, the curses, and the lamentations of those who toil on the land and on the sea; and more deeply engraven than any other name will be forever found that of the Secretary of the Treasury as the author of what he himself said constituted the twofold crime of repudiation and extortion. Do I state the case too strongly? Does any Senator think that I am not justified in the language I use or in the conclusion I state? If so, I pray him to recall the utterances of my lamented and distinguished predecessor in this body. When th.s monstrous act of repudiation was on its passage here in March, 1869, Senator Morton pointed out in the plainest and most explicit manner four distinct acts of Congress under which the people had to pay the 5.20 bonds in legal tender notes, and which were to be broken and set aside by the measure then under discussion. Among other things he said:

"And now I propound the question. It is either intended by this bill to make a new contract or it is not. If it is intended to make a new contract I protest against it. We should do gross injustice to the Government and the people of the United States after we have sold these bonds on an average for not more than 60 cents on the dollar now to make a new contract for the benefit of the holders."

Again he says:

"It gives to these laws a construction that I do not believe in, and that I have shown is contradicted by at least four acts of Congress."

And again Senator Morton exclaimed, with that power of statement which always so greatly characterized him:

"Sir, it is understood, I believe, that the passage of a bill of this kind would have the effect in Europe, where our financial questions are not well understood, to increase the demand, and that will enable the great operators to sell the bonds they have on hand at a profit. It is in the nature of a broker's operation. It is a bull movement intended to put up the price of bonds for the interest of parties dealing in them. This great interest is thundering at the doors of Congress, and has been for many months and by every means attempting to drive us into legislation for the purpose of making money for the great operators. That is what it means and nothing else."

These are words of intense and overwhelming force. Where in the whole range of debate can be found a more revolting picture of bad faith inspired by base cupidity than is here portrayed by the greatest party leader perhaps ever known in the American Congress? He has passed away, his voice is silent, and he rests after life's fitful fever, but this accusation hurled against criminal wrong-doing survives, and will continue to survive as long as it remains to be determined who have repudiated the sacred obligations and the plighted faith of the American republic. In the far distant times generations now unborn, while examining the sources of the burdens that have descended to them, will read the charge made in this presence by the late Senator from Indiana, that a combination of stock-jobbers, as destitute of conscience as pirates, and inspired alone by greed for money, successfully thundered at these doors and finally drove this Government into the most stupendous act of bad faith and legalized robbery ever practiced upon any people since the dawn of history. Five hundred millions made by great operators and five hundred millions lost to the plowman and the mechanic who have it all to pay.

Sir, thus far I have spoken in pointing out what I conceive to be the vicious legislation of this country on the great and paramount question of its finances. There are two opposing ideas on this subject now thoroughly aroused into vigilance and activity. On the one hand is the vast money-power in all its various developments of bonds, banks and loaning associations, and on the other are the great industries, the active business, and the laboring people. The issue has been years in making up, but it is now joined. Nobody need be deceived. All the widespread influences of capital are organized and combined. The holders of public securities in America and in Europe work together. They think and act in concert.

The national banks of the United States have a solid organization to protect what they have and get as much more as possible. They are asking now to be relieved from paying taxes on their circulation and deposits, in order that they may enjoy their enormous profits free from all burdens for the support of the Government. Associations of capitalists, engaged in obtaining mortgages at 12 per cent. interest on Western farms, on account of the scarcity of money in that section, are not only striving to make all such mortgages payable in gold a year hence, but they are threatening those in pecuniary distress that they shall have no further favors at the same rates, unless they agree in advance to pay gold in return for greenback loans. The power of money in the midst of times like these is very great, but I am much deceived in the people if they have not turned at last in defiance and bold warning upon their oppressors. They are not in favor of repudiating a single dollar of their public or private debts. They intend to pay everything they owe, but they intend to submit to no more changes of contracts, violations of obligations, and breaches of public faith, in order to increase their indebtedness or to take away their means to pay it. They demand, too, that certain specific wrongs shall be redressed.

First, those for whom I speak demand the restoration of the silver dollar exactly as it stood before it was touched by the act of February, 1873. They desire that it shall have unlimited coinage, not fearing that it will become too plenty for their wants; and that it be made a full legal tender, believing that it is as good now with which to pay all debts, public and private, as it was during eighty-one years of American history.

Second, they demand the repeal, unconditionally, of the act of January 14, 1875, compelling a resumption of specie payments in January, 1879, holding that the question of a return to a specie basis for our currency should be controlled entirely by the business interests of the country. They do not believe that the country should be dragged through the depths of ruin, wretchedness and degradation in order to reach a gold standard for the benefit alone of the income classes.

Third, they declare that the national-banking system be removed and a circulating medium provided by the Government for the people, without taxing them for the privilege of obtaining it. And they ask that the amount thus placed in circulation shall bear a reasonable and judicious proportion to the business transactions and the population of the United States.

Fourth, they demand that the currency circulated on the authority of the Government shall be made a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, including all dues to the Government, well knowing that it will then be at par with gold, or more likely at a premium over it.

And fifth, they demand that hereafter the financial policy of the country be framed permanently in their interest; that they shall not be discriminated against in future legislation as in the past, and that their prosperity, and not the mere growth of incomes to retired capitalists, shall be the primary duty of the Government.

In my judgment, these demands are just and moderate. I implore Senators not to suppose that they can be disregarded with safety. If they are rejected now they will be renewed hereafter with still greater determination, and perhaps with others added. I plead for the financial credit of the Government. It rests on the popular will alone, and that will can no longer be defied or menaced with impunity. The people are sovereign, and they can bind and they can loosen. If the money power is advised with wisdom it will stop and retrace its steps. It confronts a power now mightier than itself; a free people at the ballot-box, inflamed by a sense of injustice and oppression. If, however, it is joined to its golden idol; if its heart is hardened and its neck stiffened by its vast possessions; if the burning lust of avarice has made it deaf to the voice of reason and blind to all human experience, it will push on its career until it works its own destruction; for, sooner or later, the people, irrespective of party names, will unite in their own defense and establish justice.

HAZING AT PRINCETON.

A High Old Time Among the Students—A Number of Them Expelled—Their Departure the Occasion of Intense Excitement.

The Princeton College students have been at their old tricks of "hazing" again, and a great commotion is the result. Heretofore the higher classes have made the students of the lower classes their victims, but in this case the Freshmen reversed the order of things in a way that the Sophomores despised. It appears that a number of Sophomores wrote a fictitious invitation to a Freshman, inviting him to a reception. Suspecting nothing, the recipient responded, when he found himself in the company of hostile Sophomores, and straightway put him through an unmerciful hazing. The latter, when released, determined upon dire revenge. He suspected two students, Carter and Atterbury, of instigating and heading the attack upon him. What followed is related by a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune:

The night had advanced into the small hours when a party of eight Freshmen, all disguised by masks, broke into the apartment which Carter and Atterbury occupy. They produced a paper which they demanded the two Sophomores should sign, but, as it reflected discreditably upon the class of which they are members, Atterbury and Carter declined to comply. They were immediately gagged, thrown down, and bound with ropes, and the party of Freshmen amused themselves by clipping their hair so as to make their appearance as conspicuously absurd as possible. The bound and gagged couple resisted as stoutly as their ropes would permit, but the masked intruders kept steadily at their work until they had finished. Then they piled the furniture in the direst disorder, and left. The sophomores were released soon after, and determined to frighten, not to punish their assailants. To that end they charged their revolvers with blank cartridges, and followed the retiring Freshmen into the street. Having overtaken them, the two fired, and the Freshmen returned the fire with loaded weapons. A ball struck Atterbury in the thigh, a quarter of an inch from the main artery, and passed out on the other side of the leg. A meeting of the college faculty was called, and an investigation resulted in the expulsion of the following-named Freshmen: Thomas B. Bradford, Dover, Del.; Francis Lovely, Baltimore, Md.; Horace McDermott; Dayton, O.; Powell M. Bradley, Washington; W. J. Flock, Wilkesbarre; Richard H. Hutchins, Wyoming, Pa.; Edward F. Matthews and Harry H. Matthews, of Cincinnati (said to be Stanley Matthews' sons); Henry McAlpine, Jr., Savannah, Ga.; John J. M. Shaw, Pittsburg, Pa. The following Sophomores were also expelled: Robert E. Annim, Princeton; Atterbury and Carter, the ring-leaders of the hazing; George S. Johns, St. Charles, Mo.; John S. Meigs, Chicago; Julian Olds, Princeton; and H. C. Porter, Towanda, Pa. The Matthews brothers, from Cincinnati, went at once to the Treasurer of the college and drew out $20 that had been deposited with him to their credit, and also drew from the bank all the money that stood to their credit there. They then packed their trunks, and, with the others, were ready to take the 5:30 train for home.

This hasty sending off of the suspended students was the cause of serious trouble that threw the two largest classes of the college into a state of open rebellion, and nearly led to more bloodshed. It is the custom of the college to have afternoon chapel at 5 o'clock, and every student is required to attend unless he has a valid excuse. The Freshman class, however, were determined to see their suspended brothers to the depot in safety, and they unanimously refused to attend chapel. The Sophomore class also desired to see the suspended Freshmen out of town, but with motives of a different nature.

The Sophomores intended to "rush" the five suspended ones, and for this reason they too refused to attend chapel. This helped to swell a crowd about the depot that numbered several hundred. The five Freshmen, awed by the threats of the Sophomores, concluded to make an early start and walk to Princeton Junction, two and a half miles away, and thus to avoid their enemies. But the college authorities did not consider them altogether safe, even with this precaution, and Matthew Goldie, Proctor of the college, was sent to protect them. Goldie is almost a giant, and the college men look up to him as an athlete Jupiter. The Freshmen's friends were at the depot to see them off.

The usual cheers and tigers were given, and the five young men with their powerful protector started for the junction. Each man carried a heavy walking-stick, and, as subsequent events proved, nearly every one had a revolver in a handy pocket. The Sophomores had been watching for the departure. They went in a body to the depot to the number of more than eighty, and, as soon as they learned the Freshmen had started to walk, they abandoned the railroad and struck out across the fields in hot pursuit. As they marched along they sang the well-known Princeton song, and brandished the canes which nearly all carried. As they reached the long bridge, however, about half-way between the town and the junction, they saw the train on the Little Branch road approaching. They ran to the track, made the engineer stop the train, and all hustled on board. Meanwhile Goldie and the five students had reached the junction. When the Princeton train came in the eighty Sophomores made a rush for the Pennsylvania railroad depot with a cheer and a tiger, some of them threatening to make short work of the weaker Freshmen. The latter were greatly alarmed at the impending danger, and asked Goldie what they should do. "Go in there!" said the Proctor, pointing to the door of the ladies' waiting room; "go in there, and I will protect you." The Freshmen went into the waiting-room, and Goldie, taking one of the clubs, planted himself in the doorway. The eighty Sophomores came down upon him with a rush. "Stand back, gentlemen," shouted Goldie, as he lifted his club. "The first man that tries to enter this door will drop."

This unexpected repulse brought the Sophomores to a stop. They deliberated about capturing the whole party, but none of them cared to be in the front ranks. In a few minutes they returned to the door, chatted pleasantly with Goldie, trying jestingly to induce him to let them "get a chance at the Freshmen." The Proctor was firm and stood his ground till the 6 o'clock train for Philadelphia stopped in front of the junction depot. The crowd in front was almost impenetrable. Goldie, however, opened the door and said, "Come on, gentlemen," and, plunging into the midst of the crowd, hustled the eighty Sophomores right and left, clearing a passageway from the train. Not a hand was raised in opposition. The appearance of the Freshmen was the signal for a storm of hisses and jeers from the Sophomores. Some of the Sophomores in the rear ventured to throw a few stones and pieces of coal from the railroad track, and one of the latter hit Goldie on the back of the head, but he paid no attention to it, and devoted his attention to keeping back the crowd and getting the Freshmen into the cars. Each of the latter, as he came out of the door, had his club firmly grasped in his hand, and held his left hand in his overcoat pocket in a way that betokened the presence of revolvers ready for an emergency. The train started off amid the jeerings and hootings of the crowd.

Poe Reciting "The Raven."

Once, in discussing "The Raven," Poe observed that he had never heard it correctly delivered by even the best readers—that is, not as he desired that it should be read. That evening, a number of visitors being present, he was requested to recite the poem, and complied. His impressive delivery held the company spell-bound, but in the midst of it, I, happening to glance toward the open window above the level roof of the green-house, beheld a group of sable faces, the whites of whose eyes shone in strong relief against the surrounding darkness. These were a number of our family servants, who, having heard much talk about "Mr. Poe, the poet," and having but an imperfect idea of what a poet was, had requested permission of my brother to witness the recital. As the speaker became more impassioned and excited, more conspicuous grew the circle of white eyes, until when at length he turned suddenly toward the window, and, extending his arm, cried, with awful vehemence:

Get thee back into the tempest, and the night's Plutonian shore!

there was a sudden disappearance of the sable visages, a scutting of feet, and the gallery audience was gone. Ludicrous as was the incident, the final touch was given when at that moment Miss Poe, who was an extraordinary character in her way, sleepily entered the room, and with a dull and drowsy deliberation seated herself on her brother's knee. He had subsided from his excitement into a gloomy despair, and now, fixing his eyes upon his sister, he concluded:

And the raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting,
On the pallid bust of Pallas, just above my chamber door;
And its eyes have all the seeming of a demon that is dreaming——

The effect was irresistible; and as the final "nevermore" was solemnly uttered the half-suppressed titter of two very young persons in a corner was responded to by a general laugh. Poe remarked quietly that on his next delivery of a public lecture he would "take Rose along, to act the part of the raven, in which she seemed born to excel."—Mrs. Susan Archer Weiss, in Scribner for March.

Bills Pending in the House.

The following important bills and resolutions are now pending in the lower house of Congress:

Appropriating money for the erection of new military posts along the Texas border.

To make appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service.

To authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river.

Making appropriation for detecting trespass on public lands.

To make appropriation for the construction and repair of harbor defenses and coast fortifications.

To fix the pay of letter-carriers.

To regulate the compensation of Postmasters and prevent the illegal sale of postage stamps.

To pay mail contractors in 1861 who went into the rebellion without settling their accounts with the United States.

Banning's (Ohio) resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate the practicability of reducing, consolidating and otherwise changing the present organization of the army.

The Bland Silver bill, as amended by the Senate.

Golden Hair at the Chancel.

A friend living in Philadelphia has a sweet, golden-haired little daughter, aged 3 years, who is devoted to her father, and endeavors, after her baby fashion, to govern her actions by his own. This habit causes much amusement in the family, though the little one seems quite unconscious that she is the cause of it all.

Not long ago the child attended divine service for the first time with her father, and sat quietly and gravely in the pew until the close of the sermon. It chanced to be communion Sunday, and, Mr. ——, being a communicant, went with others toward the chancel, unconscious that his little daughter was following him. As he knelt and bowed his head, the baby of 3 years beside him also knelt, and bowed her sweet face upon her tiny hands. Those who saw the touching sight were affected almost to tears, and nobody attempted to remove the small communicant. Not until my friend rose to return to his seat did he discover the child, who also rose, and, slipping her little hand into his, walked gravely toward the pew. The clergyman, speaking of it afterward, said it was in his opinion the most beautiful sight he had ever seen.—Harper's Magazine for March.

ACCORDING to invariable custom, since the detection of the gunpowder plot in 1605, a detachment of the Beef-Eaters, who guard the Tower of London, marched at 10 o'clock in the morning previous to the late opening of Parliament, through the cellars of the two houses, in order to ascertain if any gunpowder might be concealed there. The Beef-Eaters are selected from among the non-commissioned officers of the British army who have merited notice through services or good conduct, and wear the uniform selected for them by Henry VIII.

THE NE

Silver at Marl them w labor

—Seventy millions of people starving in Northern China, and Hayes vetoing the silver bill, are two of the greatest extreams we ever heard of.

—The Returning Board having sown the wind is now reaping the whirlwind. Anderson has been sentenced to two years in the penitentiary.

The Silver Bill a Law.

Last Thursday Hayes took it into his head to veto the Silver Bill. He sent it to the House with a message in which he intimated that two thirds of the people's representatives intended to commit a fraud. Thereupon the bill was taken up and in two hours it was passed over the veto in both Houses, and is now a law. Silver is now a legal tender, and the dollar of our daddies, is in disgrace no longer.

—This thing of one or two "influential persons" at Fort Wayne, inflating themselves over the victory of Mr. Fleming, and laying the flattering unction to their souls that they did it, lacks opaqueness. While we believe Mr. Fleming does not share in this arrogance, we will take occasion to say that an exhibition of a spirit of this kind, by his friends there will not be prolific of much good. Blowing for one's self is considered brassy, but there are those who do it, or hire it done for them.

—Peterson Brothers, Publishers of Philadelphia, have sent us a notice and a counterfeit detector, asking us to read an article on finance and insert the notice. It is evident this detector is in the interest of the golditcs, for now that the people want, and are going to have their own, it calls it swindling, forgetting that when the contract was broken by the demonetization of silver, the people were swindled. The probabilities are that this detector is a fraud, given that name, to disseminate the peculiar views of the golditcs. The west is not in need of such miscellany, and if the Peterson Brothers want to be successful, they will abandon these sectional schemes, especially against the people.

—Hayes feels bad over the rapidity with which the silver bill passed over his veto. He has had several interviews lately, one of them with a Senator who has voted for the silver bill at every stage. The Silver Senator was inclined to indulge in just a little pleasantry about the rapidity with which the veto was dealt with, but he found Hayes in no joking mood, and growing extremely dignified. Hayes said that he considered that the action of the chambers in dealing with a veto message of such importance after a single reading, and that reading by the Clerk, showed high disrespect to the Executive. Somewhat ruffled by this turn to his joke the silver Senator curtly told Hayes that he considered any veto message which charged two-thirds of both chambers with intent to commit fraud was highly disrespectful to the legislative branch of the Government, and he took his leave.

—Gen Tom Brown, who ran for Governor in this State but a short time ago, now says: So far as Indiana is involved the democracy will elect their State ticket by an overwhelming majority, and will have a majority in each branch of the legislature, securing the return of Dan Voorhees to the United States Senate. We republicans may elect three members of Congress but, in all probability, will not secure even two. In the next national house of representatives the democracy will have a larger majority than they had two years ago, and, with a democratic Senate, which is already secured, in 1879, they will have complete control of the legislative department of the government. About that time President Hayes will wish he had never been born. Success in 1878 insures the party success in 1880, when they will control the government in all branches but the judiciary."

There can be no doubt that Gen. Browne speaks the truth. Everything points to a grand democratic victory in this State next fall, and to a triumph of the same party in the national contest in 1880.

—EDITOR COURIER—Noticing an article in the COURIER, the other week headed, "Charity all over," we beg leave to say that it was not a charity but a social gathering. The occasion was brought about by arrival of Mrs. Nicewanders, of Wooster, Ohio, who was visiting her sister and many friends in the county. The ladies thought to give her a surprise, and for that purpose congregated at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Spinger, each lady taking a quilt block with them for Mrs. N., and a basket of "good things" as "Snide" calls them. After the ladies presented the quilt, we had a splendid dinner, and a good time, everyone enjoying the occasionand repast to the greatest extent. Has "Charity all over," forgot the little swindle he performed shortly after his wife left because he was starving her? Now, you had better hand over that Dancer money you pocketed or you may hear from us again.

Signed.

St Joe Gleanings.

—Editor COURIER in town Saturday.

—Mrs. W. Tustison is reported dangerously ill.

—John Widney, wife and son are all down with Lung fever.

—Our place is quite lively every day with Court going people.

—Mrs. John Platter living ner Orangville, died last Thursday of consumption.

—When Newville chaps imbibe too much of Auburn whisky, they must not squeal if charged 35c for supper.

—Thad Crocker of Newville-tp. paid us a visit on wednesday, while on his way to Court. Come again, Thad.

—Grangers and all are feeling good over the passage of the Silver Bill by both Houses, over the President's veto.

—Mrs. Mary Barr, who has been suffering for some years with consumption is lying at the point of death. No hopes of her recovery.

—The wife of W. Tustison died Tuesday morning. Mr. Tustison resides near this place, and is one of the earliest settlers of the county.

—Our town was visited on Saturday by Jim Baker, living near Concord. A good deal of fun was had, over the stories told by Baker, who is chuck full of fun from top to bottom.

—Jim reports that Cecil, of Concord, jumped off the local freight at Boyles' crossing Friday evening, landing upside down. What became of the whisky, Jim don't say, but he is sure there must have been a bottle, as the pieces were still to be seen.

—Through Bill Fales, of Spencerville, we learn that one of our citizens victimized some of the merchants of that place, in this wise. Having to raise some funds to raise employ an attorney at Court, he lacked a little, which was collected by Barney & Son, and some other names unknown, but which were never paid over. We think it advisable for that chap to proceed to Spencerville and straighten the affair up, or names will be given.

—Some tramps, four in number, visited George Simontons the night of March 2nd, and wished to stay all night. Georgy not liking that kind of customers turned them away. We are sure sure if George would have kept them, he would have entertained angels unawares, good sized angels, but never-the less angels all the same.

—Three young ladies from below St. Joe went to Auburn last Saturday to attend the examination. On their return, and after they had arrived at St. Joe, their team gave out and they were forced to walk. After walking about five miles, the rain and darkness came on, and they applied at a farm house where they were known and asked for shelter and it was refused. It was a case of unaccountable human depravity and we are sorry to say the party resides within a mile and a half of this place.

PINTE.

—Prof. Tice and the groundhog have it nip and tuck this month. An exchange suggests that it wouldn't be a bad idea, however, for these two distinguished gents to allow themselves to be used as a target in the spring.

Garrett Items.

—The De Kalb House is again opened

—U. S. Eyer and family left last week for Kansas.

—Quite a number of our citizens have the Nebraska fever.

—Mr. Pierce, who is engaged in the lumber business here, went home to Michigan last week. He will will return in April.

—Our Methodist friends gave a very social and pleasant festival last Friday and Saturday evenings, for the benefit of their much esteemed pastor, Rev. Sawyer.

—I understand that Charles Cook, an engineer on the B. & O., is going into the dairy business. No doubt Charley will succeed as he has had considerable experience in that line.

—We are sorry to think that any of our citizens would indulge in writing such scurrilous articles about each other, as appeared in the last two copies of the COURIER. It is an indication of a poor state of society, and it would be much better for those who have been thus engaged to devote their time and attention on some subject of a more moral and elevating nature, and for the next young man will get the sack to keep quiet about it.

—There was a wreck on the B. & O. R. R. last Friday about 1 o'clock a. m. at Deshler, Ohio. While the first section of No. 11 was taking coal it was run into by engine No 246, which was following with the 2nd section. The engine was brought back slightly damaged, but was repaired so that it was sent out again Saturday evening. The caboose No. 28, which was run into was brought back with seven box cars Saturday night, all badly wrecked. Fortunately there was no persons injured.

—The Herald of last week says, "some sore-head writing to the Auburn paper says: There has been considerable of dissatisfaction with the schools here this winter. We say the above is untrue. Our schools are well managed and pupils are learning very rapidly." I repeat the item of last week, that there has been dissatisfaction with the school and the attention of the county superintendent was called, and he decided in favor of those who were dissatisfied, which can be proved. I can name eight or ten interested persons who have been dissatisfied with the school, "old swell head."

St. Johns and New Era Items.

—Jake is tickled.

—The road master along Monday.

—Ketcham has got a fiddle on which he makes some delightful sweet music.

—Joe. Shryock last week borrowed Post's axe and brought it back without the handle. Sue for damages Post, and put a stop to borrowing.

—John Spangler, we are sorry to say, is going to Ohio with Mr. Irons. We suppose he is going to seek his fortune in the person of some young girl. We wish you good luck John, and no more.

—Our school closed last Saturday, but not without visitors, in the persons of several young men and ladies. Byron Grube was very generous to give everybody a piece of pasteboard.

—Some fellow that has no girl remarked, that he would not be in Dave's place last Sunday for $50. We did not ask the reason, but suppose it was on account of the night and the mud he had to go through.

—Dr. C. E. Spangler, the handsome and affable young doctor of this place, has gone to Ohio. We, as well as the countless number he as cured, deeply mourn his departure. He is famous for curing bellyaches by a medicine called "Seven Barks." We fondly hope he will call again.

—Doctor Rother was seen to get on the cars last week, to carry his wife's satchell, and as the train began to move off, he appeared on the platform and jumped off. The next seen of him he was investigating one square inch of soft mud, and got up with the old perplexed grin of one who finds himself mistaken.

SORIAMAUX.

Tidings From La Otto.

—School closed last Friday.

—Taylor is moving into his new store room.

—Sowers & Co. will soon occupy the room now occupied by Taylor.

—A nice little social hop to be given at the Grand Rapid House on Thursday evening. None but those invited can participate.

—"Ten nights in a bar room" was well acted out at Swan last Saturday night. Home talent is "solid" when brought out properly.

—Young's house was burglarized to the tune of six dollars and his wedding breeches last Friday evening. Loss $15 and any amount of faith in man's honesty.

—The exhibition at this place was a "fair to middling" entertainment.—Spencer Smith was the only one really entertained. He thought the out-side performance "hoss."

—The turkey war between Hilkert and Bricker & Co. is becoming monotonous. Ten turkeys have already cost $350,00 and the end not yet.

—There will be services at the English Lutheran church each evening during next week, beginning on Monday evening. Rev F. Biddle, of Zanesville, Ind., is expected to assist the pastor, Mr. Rice.

Those who contemplate building this season, will find it to their advantage to call on us for Nails, Glass, Sash, Doors, Locks, Hinges, Paints, Oils & Varnish, all of which has been bought recently at a large reduction in prices, and will save buyers from 15 to 25 per cent. by buying of —It is now hinted that the recent arrests for revenue law violations, in this county, were a put up job between the U. S. officer and the attorney who defended the prisoners.

MR. EDITOR.—The above appeared in the Waterloo Press of Feb. 21st, 1878, and I desire you to insert the following:

L. J. BLAIR.

FORT WAYNE, Feb. 23, 1878.

In the issue of the Waterloo Press of Feb. 21st, the editor hints at a job being put up between myself and Gen. L. J Blair, on the parties recently arrested for violation of the revenue laws. This I denounce as a base lie and a slander. The first arrest was Mr. Jacob McEnterfer, July 18, 1877, and not until he was in the custody of a deputy U. S. marshal, did I have any conversation with Gen. Blair on the subject. Why I saw him at all Mr. McEnterfer well knows; it was to prevent the marshal from taking him to Fort Wayne forthwith, which he would have done had I not interceded on account of his age. The arrest of Peter H. Gromling was but a sequence of the first, for from McEnterfer I found out where the party who manufactured the cigars went. The chain then was complete, but not until after two visits to Summit myself, and one by the deputy marshal, was I fully able to identify the party. Gen. Blair never gave me any information in these cases, nor in any other cases in DeKalb or any other county, but on the other hand, when I visited Waterloo, during your fair, on Gen. Blair finding the object of my visit he asked me if he could not warn those selling on the grounds, as he knew "they would not violate the law knowingly." Suffice it to say, I now stamp this insinuation as a base lie.

Yours Respe'y.

OBITUARY.

TERRY DRAGOO was born October 28, 1874. He died March 2, 1878, at 6:30 a. m., aged three years, four months and three days.

Terry's life was like that of a flower—it was brief and it was beautiful, bright and pure. His life was of the sunshine; warm, happy and joyous; and he was conscious, serene and smiling until he closed his eyes in the sleep of death. During his brief and mortal illness, he seemed to realize and spoke with a judgment beyond his year, of the causes that led to his illness.

The idol of his parents, the light of their home, the staff and hope of their declining years, Terry has gone. And yet:

"I can not make him dead!
When passing by the bed,
So long watched over with parental care;
My spirit and my eye
Seek him enquiringly
Before the thought comes that he is dead.

Not there! where then is he?
He lives! in all the past,
He lives; nor to the past
Of seeing him again will I despair;
In dreams I see him now;
And on his angel brow,
I see it written, thou shalt see me there."

Local and Miscellaneous.

It is All By Jerks.

In dry weather, when rain is most needed, "we have no rain;" in wet weather we have plenty of it, and so of heat and cold. We have to keep fires in winter and ice in summer. Again, poor people who most need money have little or none; while rich people, who don't need it, have more than they can use. Chandeliers and lamps at cost. Set of French China dinner ware for $65.00; 106 pieces Tea and Dinner $10. We warrant every bit of our solid silver ware and silver plated ware to be of the double and tripple plate, and all stamped with the named of Meriden Britanna Co., the best and largest plating company in the world. Tea set, $25 to 100; water set, $13 to 60; castors, $4 to 50. Card and Cake stands, pickle castors, knives, spoons, ladles, sugar shells, fruit knives, the best stock of plated at Ward's Cheap Crockery Store, No. 9 Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

—What is meant by the "Latin Union" in financial discussion, consists of the governments of France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland and Greece, who are bound by a treaty until 1880 to receive each other's gold and silver coins at a relation of value between the metals of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold. In the United States, before the demonetization of silver, the relation was 16 to 1.

—Ho! ho! farmers, if you want a good set of harness, stop at the shop opposite the Court House in the old post office building, where you can get the best of work, and stock, as good as can be found anywhere. Mr. Rodenbaugh warrents all his work, uses best Oak tan, and warranted as represented. Prices to suit the times. Call and examine before purchasing elsewhere.

—Mr. I. N. Davis, of Frankfort, Grand Worthy Chief Templar, of Indiana, will deliver a lecture at the M. E. church, Saturday evening. Of course the subject will be that of temperance, and we have noticed that Mr. Davis has been highly spoken of in the press of the State, not only as to his fine ability as a lecturer, but his power of organizing, and his unwavering temperance principles entitles him to the respect and consideration of all good citizens.

—MARRIAGE LICENSES—The following marriage licenses were issued by the County Clerk, during the month of February:

Thomas Kelham and Emma L. Lobdell, Perry Shivey and Elmetine Kline, Alvin J. St. Clair and Mary Strole, Anthony Foust and Jane Johnson, H. T. Clark and Ida E. Cadey, F. J. Shank and Mary Bush, Joseph E. Miller and F. A. Stout, Daniel A Freeburn and May A. Edson.

—We would like to say to the boys who compose the string band at Waterloo, that it wasn't on account of any religious sentiment that they were not invited to attend Tilton's lecture, but because music is seldom, if ever introduced at a lecture of that kind. The people of Auburn will be glad to hear this superb little band, and will appreciate their sweet, rich music when they do, and are waiting for an occasion when they can properly appear. Be patient boys, you shall not be forgotten.

—Weamer wants to take a rest, after the arduous duties he has performed within the last three years, and has therefore sold out to Dr. Calvin P. Houser, his interest in the paper. Col. W. H. McIntosh, of this city, will be the editor. Geo. Weamer will still retain an interest as his knowledge of the business is indispensable. We trust that nothing will occur to blight the hopes of the new firm, and if they can keep the thing from growing into an elephant they will do well.

—We regret to learn of a severe accident at Garrett, in which our friend John Robbins, the manager of the Hardware store, was badly wounded. A customer called and wanted some cartridges for his revolver. In order to show the right size John placed one in the revolver and handed it to the customer. It is not known which cocked it, but it was soon after discharged, inflicting a painful wound in the thigh. The bullet struck the bone and glanced, and has not been extracted.

GARRETT, IND., March 5, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER.—It appears that my letter in the COURIER last week, operated on O. J. Powell and there was a flow of bile, and it had such an influence on him that he could not get his paper out till late in the week, and he says I "vomited" and made an "ass" of myself. What a beautiful phrase to come from the pen of a college-bred man. Well, it is a good thing that some one in Garrett made an "ass" of themselves, as the old wandering Jew will have a companion. Eh-haw, eh-haw.

ALICE.

—Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup is a standard remedy, and will cure a cough or cold in half the time required by any ordinary remedy. Call on your druggist and try a bottle, only 25 cts. Sold in every drug store.

—Wood scarce again.

—At M. E. church Saturday evening.

—The marshal is after the loose porkers.

—Coon hunting is largely indulged in at present.

—Judge Zollars, of Fort Wayne, gave us a call last Monday.

—Pensions were received by our crippled soldiers this week.

—Mr Davis, the lecturer at the M. E. church, Saturday evening.

—Mr. Baker is making improvements on his Main street property.

—The terms of peace between Russia and Turkey have been signed.

—Milt Roth has traded his late dray team for a heavier and better one.

—Miss Stodard, of New York, is visiting her cousin, Mrs. Jas V. Hazzard.

—The sun seems to be disinclined to go to roost as early as he did last month.

—Go and hear the fine temperance lecture at the M. E. church Saturday evening.

—Mr. Seiner of the Toledo Democrat was in town yesterday. He is still on the war path.

—New spring styles of Gents furnishing goods, just received by Schaab, Beugnot & Co.

—The members of the DeKalb County Bar, indulged in a banquet at the Swineford, Tuesday evening.

—It is said there is something noble in poverty. If such is the case, we are the noblest Roman of them all.

—A fine line of new spring hats just arrived at Schaab, Beugnot & Co. All the late styles at the lowest prices.

—In the criminal cases, young Potter, a tramp, plead guilty to petit larceny, and was sentenced to jail for six weeks.

—Remember the lecture by Mr. Davis the Grand Chief Templar of this state, at the M. E. church, Saturday evening.

—MARRIED—Mr John B. Grube, to Miss Mattie A. Essig, by Rev. G. A. Harter, of Avilla, both of De Kalb Co. Indiana.

—"The spring time has come, gentle Ann." And so Bliven thinks now's the time for getting good photographs, at Gordon's Gallery.

—Charles Hayward, at Bourbon, Ind., last week, shot his wife three times and then killed himself, on account of his mother-in law.

—Sam Segner takes the place of Mr. Carter in the Lock Billiard Hall. Sam is a prompt, pleasant fellow, and will keep things in splendid order.

—There will be a debate on the greenback question at Moore's school house, Mooresville, to-morrow, Friday evening. All are invited to be present.

—"If I had to walk from here to Baltimore for it, I would not be without Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in my family," is what we heard a lady say yesterday.

—Casper Beck, a boy sixteen years old, living at Fort Wayne, was killed last Saturday by the accidental discharge of a shot gun, while out hunting.

—A strike of the printers in the office of the Indianapolis Sentinel, considerably reduced that paper in size for several days last week, but it is now all right.

—A young man living down the Eel River railroad shot himself Monday, who was connected with Peter Brandon's family. We could not learn the name.

—Hon. B. F Wade of Ohio, died last Saturday, aged 78. He and Giddings made the Western Reserve famous in their advocacy of the abolition of slavery.

We are pleased to notice in these taxpaying times, that some of our friends remember us, and call and pay their subscription. It would please us if all would do it.

—The rumor last week that our Catholic friends intended buying the Somers farm for school purposes, proved unfounded. No such enterprise is in contemplation.

—The reduction on sugars is still going down. They have reached a figure lower than that before or since the war. Coffee A 9c., coffee C 8c., at the Fruit House, Fort Wayne.

—MARRIED.—Frank Schenk and Mary Bush, at the Catholic church, March 4th, 1878, by Rev. A. Young. The parties were both from Waterloo. High mass was celebrated.

—Mr. Grover has established a large broom factory on Eleventh street, and is making a splendid broom, as cheap as the market affords, and this being the case, all ought to patronize him.

—The case of John Stacy still holds fire. The jury returned a verdict of $100 fine, but his council objected and on an irregularity the case is to be tried again. In the mean time some body's bungling is costing a good deal.

Tilton in Angola.

We are glad to announce that Theo. Tilton will lecture at Angola on Thursday evening, March 14th, 1878. Subject "The Master Motives." The trains run now so as to favor or citizens, and we hope there will be a large attendance. The subject will be a new one, and his fine lecture here will induce many to attend. The admission will be 50 cents, and 75 for reserved seats, and this should draw of itself.

—We took the trouble on Tuesday last to go to Auburn to hear Thodore Tilton lecture on "The Problem of Life," and to see our neighboring county seat (never visiting Auburn before) and to get better acquainted with her genial good-hearted, intelligent citizens. In Theodore Tilton we were, in some respects, agreeably disappointed. From current newspapers, reporters and criticisms, we had been led to infer that he was a vain and egotistical individual, and that these characteristics cropped out in all his utterances. While the lecturer, like most mortals, is not devoid of certain peculiarities, or eccentricities if you will, yet we never before heard a lecture or discourse of any kind in which there was less egotism displayed, either in the speaker's manner upon the rostrum, or in the language used. In personal appearance, Theodore Tilton is tall and commanding, with a full face, and a forehead slightly retreating. His hair, which is whitened while yet a comparatively young man, is worn long and falls about his neck in great profusion. Whatever may be thought of the private character of the man, he is an eloquent speaker, a deep thinker, and to outward appearance, a good man. "The Problem of Life," delivered by him, was well worth going to Auburn to hear. He had a good audience, the M. E. church being crowded to its utmost capacity. Of course we called upon Bro. Mays, the genial and jovial editor of the Courier, and by him was shown the "attractions of the town and was introduced to some of her citizens. In the Courier office we also met Bro Shaffer, of the Angola Herald. We had not time to call at the Republican office but had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Weamer upon the streets. Among the number of De Kalb county's citizens whom we met on this occasion were Gen. Blair, C. A. O. McClellan, Joe. Morlan, James E. Rose, Prof. Barns, superintendent of schools, and others, whose names we cannot now recall. By the way, the Albionites who were in attendance at the lecture, are confident that Mays prepetrated a huge joke upon the audience just before Theodore Tilton entered the room. Rise up, T. C., and explain.

We take the above from the Albion New Era.—We rise and with profound bow explain. We were entirely innocent of any attempt at a joke, but Tilton being a handsome fellow, some of the audience, not being personally acquainted with us, of course——Well, Prickett you know what we would say if modesty did not deter us.

—Everybody seemed to enjoy the dance last Tuesday evening. It was a splendid affair, and eminently respectable. We like to see pleasant occasions like these, and there cannot be harm where so much social enjoyment and innocent commingling of our best citizens are the leading features. Let those who have their prejudices as to dancing, enjoy their privilege, but we shall always look upon it as a delightful, harmless amusement when conducted as on this occasion. All adjourned about twelve o'clock.

—The pleasant weather of the last few days, makes us feel like laying aside heavy winter clothes, and donning something more comfortable. We are glad to say that a new lot of fine spring styles of clothing were received to-day by Schaab, Beugnot & Co., and now is your chance to make a good selection. They have the newest patterns and can sell them cheaper than any other place in town.

—Our greenback friends are instituting clubs in the different parts of the county. One was organized in Butler on Monday evening. We have always been in favor of a greenback currency, one that will meet the demands of trade. Our State platform meets this question about as fairly and liberally as we could desire.

—Our friend Tom Mays, of the Auburn COURIER, we learn, will be a candidate for nomination for the clerkship of De Kalb county at the coming convention. He is qualified for the position and for years has faithfully labored to build up his party in that county. We think the Democracy could make no better selection, and thus recognize his labors.—Albion New Era.

Maggie Blair, Lib Boyles, Elias J. Born, Sylvenees Clark, Louisa Manor, Daniel Olerbeltzer, Isaac Edward Pearson, Clary Salsberry, Joseph B. Smith, G. H. Williams.

JOSEPH RAINIER, P. M.

—Bryants have taken posession of the De Kalb House and have been moving in this week, and will be ready for boarding in a short time. We bespeak for them a good share of the public patronage, and feel confident that Mrs. Bryant will make a very good landlady, and that the hotel will be one of the best in this part of the State.—Garrett Herald.

—A curious candle used in Alaska is a fish eight inches long, almost transparent, and very fat, the fat being pure white and very sweet. The Indians dry this fish, then light it at the tail, and it burns with a clear, sparkling flame, which the wind will not extinguish.

—Those who attempt to use postage stamps a second time, after being canceled, should know that the penalty is fifty dollars fine. Some one will have to pay this, as these attempts are growing frequent here.

Junction Items.

—We miss you Dick.

—School closed on Friday.

—P. Ditmar is making sugar.

—Mud, mud, the beautiful mud.

—Joe Walters, can you spell bragg?

—Does Carper's bigness make him great.

—The fair maid from Auburn, Miss E., tips the scales at just 109.

—We were favored with a call from Mr. Backus, of Detroit, Friday.

—The B. & O. have issued a manifold sheet for train orders. Good enough.

—What does Fred need with gum boots, when he has such a good plank walk.

—Ada and Lena, of Spencerville, have our best wishes, and hope they will call again.

—John Reed left on Wednesday for Iowa to engage in business. We wish him success.

—New time card on the B. & O. took effect Sunday last. Some few changes have been made.

—Gole, what commission do you get for weighing all the fair maidens who visit the Junction?

—Several young men left the Junction Tuesday en route for Kansas. May they meet with success.

—Mr. Van Hyde has our thanks for the good word spoken in our behalf. We had a good time, Van.

—The two Miss Whetsels, of New Era, and Miss Rowe, of Garrett, are visiting friends at this place.

—Mr. Whittington spent several days last week in Garrett. He stopped at the hotel depoy, and had a good time, no doubt.

—The young lady from Auburn, who met the cow-boos coming from singing, will do well to send her name to the Junction cor'sp. She shall have a leather medal.

—Mr. T. J. Frazier, Civel Engineer on B. & O., was at the Junction Thursday looking after the interest of the company.

—Goe. Goetschius deserves much credit for his spelling at the Junction Wednesday night. He brought them all down.

—Our genial friend, Frank P. C., day operator for the B. & O., attended the literary on Saturday evening, and we should judge enjoyed it. Beware of that white feather and those facinating eyes, Frank. We overheard her ask for an introduction.

—Our friend, David McNabb, is doing a good business in his heading factory with the addition of his new machinery. He is able to turn out 2400 complete oil barrel heads per day. The machinery is driven by a 35 horse power engine and is steaming night and day The surpus steam is used in drying the heading. His work is pronounced No. 1 and we wish David success.

—Fonda says he lost a valuable sleeve button Wednesday night, on his return from the social at Auburn. We would advise the young man to bring that firey steed from Albion and go horse back next time; then he would not fall through cattle-guards and peal his shins. Undoubtedly his mind was on the beautiful maids he met at the social which caused him to make this miss step.

PERKIN'S.

Waterloo Items.

—The night traveler, on the Saginaw road, takes refuge in the target house, these lonely nights.

—Gust Lease went to Connecticut last week, with the finest car-load of horses ever shipped from this county.

—The Concert at the Presbyterian church last Saturday evening, was well patronized, and the music was good.

—Dr. Winslow represented the Greenback element of this county in the Toledo National Convention. He was not admitted as a delegate, however.

—Capt. John Butt, of Butt's Hotel, has reduced the price to $1.50 per day, but no corresponding reduction will be found at the table.

—Those expecting to hear Mr. Stoll last Monday evening before the Greenback club, were disappointed. There was some misunderstanding among the members. If one or two of the damphools could be ejected, the club would have better prospects of success.

—A little family quarrel between two of our business men, has been on the tapis for some time. They propose to sacrifice friends and all that they may win. Its all well enough to show nerv[illegible] but innocent parties should not be made a party to a little spite work.

—There is an impression prevailing here that the communication [illegible] Press relative to the H. C. [illegible] S. party, and Auburn, lacks delicac[illegible] [illegible] brassy in the extreme [illegible] it would [illegible] any community who th[illegible] dictate to their place. We doubt whether the occasion was one which required or could utilize music.

UNO.

—Mr. Gordon, not having sufficient health to attend to demands upon his Gallery, has engaged Mr. Bliven, of Ravenna, Ohio, a splendid artist, and orders now for good pictures will be supplied promptly, and on reasonable terms.

—Workingmen look to your interest and save doctor bills by using Marshalls Lung Syrup, for coughs, colds, etc. Rrice 25 cts., in every drug store.

Butler Items.

—The majority of our citizens foot it.

—Quite an enthusiastic "Greenback" meeting Monday night.

—Our temperance folks are still engaged with unabated zeal.

—Mrs. WyKoff, and Mrs. Creager, east of town are suffering from neuralgia.

—Mr. Johns, our harness man, is on the sicklist, from his old enemy neuralgia.

—Dr. Fosdic will soon arrive from An Arbor, to spend his vacation and recuperate.

—It is reported that Rev. W. O. Butler will begin a series of meetings in the Methodist church, on Monday, March 25th.

—If we were disposed to boast we could do so, over the fact that we still have more roads to the mile than they have in some other places.

—Mrs Jacob Imhoff died suddenly on Monday evening, at an advanced age. She was taken with a spasm, which took her away within fifteen minutes.

—The meeting at the Big Run chappel, conducted by Rev. Butler, closed last Monday eve, Twenty conversions and a general reformation in the neighborhood, was the visible result.

—The hens have a longer time this year than usual, to prepare for Easter. Though they seem to be taking time by the forelock, and are forwarding the commodity in great numbers. We have always looked upon the hen as a model bird, to say nothing of spring chickens.

—Dr. Madden, one of our oldest practitioners, states that his business has been very pressing for the past four weeks. The Doctor is well versed on the diseases of this locality. Though we do think he ought to build a sidewalk down to the railroad. Ha, Doc?

—Wm. Broughton met with a serious accident, resulting in considerably mangling his person, on last Saturday. He was in the usual position for filing a large circular saw, when by accident the tightner was thrown on to the belt which started the machinery, by an almost superhuman effort he prevented his death. Dr. Fanning has hopes of his entire recovery.

—To the discredit of our townsmen we must note a lack of enterprise in the matter of providing ice for the heated term. Now all through the month of January, the time when that article should have been secured, a general apathy prevaded. Of course, should you speak to them on the subject, they would advance an excuse for justification.

Spencerville Items.

—The freshet in the St. Joe has subsided.

—John Provines has been on the sick list. for several days past.

—A runner now and then reaches town, notwithstand the mud blockade.

—This is one of the best trading points in the county, and Barney and Bishop are favored with a good average business.

—There are two undertaking establishments in this place, and the probabity is they have a funeral within themselves shortly.

—Byron's lines, "There is a pleas[illegible] in the pathless woods, A rapt[illegible] ore on lonely shore," is now verifie[illegible] by [illegible] the walk to St Joe and back.

—One of our citizens hav[illegible] ng been deserted by his wife for a g[illegible] d reason, is running a circus among t[illegible] he pots and kettles. He is equal to [illegible] rench cook, and gets up good digestib[illegible] le meals.

—Several of our citi[illegible] ens went to Auburn last week, to [illegible] estify before the Grand Jury. Efforts were being made to develope a case of forgery, but it is said they waited [illegible] o long.

—In small tow[illegible] ns like this the rising generation, Young America and Smart Alexs, must have amusement, and sometimes th[illegible] ey get up "a corner," and provide for themselves when the regular routine of events fail to supply. A case of this [illegible] ind occurred here last week. We hav[illegible] a barber by the name of Smith, that glorious name, so romantically associated with the history of our cou[illegible] ntry. In his absence one evening, an[illegible] while the boys were "spiling" for some fun, they arranged to get up a [illegible] ham racket in said barber shop. There was a gathering of the clans, for the fracas. The ladies of the establishment were the only spectators, and as the riot ran high, two of them became alarmed, while a third stood by her post, and gained one or two of the combatants to her side. After a most desperate encounter, in which destructi[illegible] ve weapons were used, and the most complimentary epithets passed, the [illegible] vanquished hauled off their forces, not, how ever, until one of the ladies was carried away in a fainting spell, and anot[illegible] her reduced to a hysterical condition. It was very naughty in the boys to annoy and frighten the ladies, and something more than fun may be the result, although we do not think they were viciously inclined.

NERO.

—A great many remedie[illegible] s are advertised to bring them before the public, but the latter decides whether the article is good or bad. The [illegible] good reputation which Dr. Bull's [illegible] aby Syrup enjoys is a standing guara[illegible] ntee of its merits. Price 25 cents a b[illegible] ottle, at Davenport's.

MARCH MADRIGALS.

Culled from the March Magazines.

BLINDFOLDED.

Two little white hands put over the eyes,
  And tresses of hair brushing over the cheek;
A sweet, merry voice in my ear laughing cries:
  "Who is it holds you, sir? answer me quick!"
Do I not know them, the bonny red lips,
  That little waist in the calico gown,
Eyes with long lashes where tremulous slips
  The love-light half bashfully, tenderly down?
Do I not know them? Ah! love, I was blind
  Ere the dainty ringed hands came over my eyes;
And [illegible] white arms ne'er closer can bind
  Than the love which once kindled to life never dies.
—Will Wallace Harney, in Appletons'.

THE BROKEN OAR.

Once upon Iceland's solitary strand
  A poet wandered with his book and pen,
  Seeking some final word, some sweet Amen,
Wherewith to close the volume in his hand.
The billows rolled and plunged upon the sand,
  The circling sea-gulls swept beyond his ken,
  And from the parting cloud-rack now and then
  Flashed the red sunset over sea and land.
Then by the billows at his feet was tossed
  A broken oar; and carved thereon he read,
  "Oft was I weary, when I toiled at thee!"
And like a man who findeth what was lost,
  He wrote the words, then lifted up his head,
  And flung his useless pen into the sea.
—Henry W. Longfellow, in Atlantic Monthly.

THE LILY.

I saw the lily pale and perfect grow
Amid its silent sisters in the mead.
Methought within its chilly depth to read
A maidenly severity, as though
A cool young life lay slumbering in the snow
Of its frail substance. In that chalice white
Whose fairy texture shone against the light
An unwakened pulse beat faint and slow.
And I remembered, love, thy coy disdain,
When thou my love for thee hadst first divined;
Thy proud, shy tenderness—too proud to feign
That willful blindness which is yet not blind.
Then toward the sun thy lily-life I turned—
With sudden splendor flushed its chalice burned.
—H. H. Boyesen, in Scribner.

ST. VALENTINE.

The sleet was blowing; where was any sign
Of greening valley, call of mating bird?
Yet, close beside my ear, a voice I heard—
A whisper—"Sweet, choose now your valentine!"
"Nay, wait till skies are softer, airs more fine."
But still, impetuous, fell that whispered word,
"Choose, choose your valentine!"
                    What was it stirred,
Like breath of June, this yielding heart of mine?
Sudden, the bleak earth blossomed into bowers
Of bridal beauty—for its wreathing snows,
Wide banks of creamy jessamine and rose—
While, on the pane, bloomed out great passion-flowers;
  And I—so subtle-sweet Love's whispers are!—
Be sure for choice I did not wander far.
—Caroline A. Mason, in Scribner.

TOO WIDE!

Oh, mighty Earth, thou art too wide, too wide!
  Too vast thy continents, too broad thy seas,
  Too far thy prairies reaching fair as these
How reddening in the sunset's crimson tide!
Sundered by thee how have thy children cried
  Each to some other, until every breeze
  Has borne a burden of fond messages
That all unheard in thy lone wastes have died!
Draw closer, oh, dear Earth, thy hills that soar
  Up to blue skies such countless leagues apart!
    Bid thou thine awful spaces smaller grow!
Compass thy billows with a narrower shore,
  That yearning lips may meet, heart beat to heart,
    And parted souls forget their lonely woe!
—Julia C. R. Dorr, in Sunday Afternoon.

WINTER.

The circling hills with snow are white
  The dark woods on their sides
Stand leafless in the low gray light,
  The brown cloud o'er them glides.

The low sun chills, the cold moon stares
  From out the icy east;
The young folk go, in muffled pairs,
  To dancing and to feast;
And rising from the snowy roof
  Into a passing fold,
The dun smoke weaves its clouded woof
  Within the warp of cold.

The eaves snap and the whole house shakes;
  In woodlands, shadow-crossed,
The heavy timber, groaning, quakes
  Beneath the tides of frost.

The moon to western forest deeps
  Sinks down, and black airs fall
Upon the land, until there creeps
  A glimmering cold through all;
In frosty barns with vapors dim
  The cocks alternate crow,
As lifts the sun a glowless rim
  To frozen hills of snow.

MY DREAMLAND.

The way to Dreamland—do I know?
                    Years ago
  Every path for thy roaming feet
  Led the way to Dreamland, sweet!

Have I forgotten? Maybe, dear;
                    Far or near
  Matters little, and less I care.
  So I do not lose you there.

Do I abjure it? Sweet one, nay;
                    Look this way;
  Dreamland now for thy joyance lies
  In the blue haze of your eyes!

CHANSON D'AMOUR.

Free as the dew to rose's lips,
Free as the wind to ocean ships,
Free as the fount to pilgrim's thirst,
And Eden's fruit to Eve at first,
Free as the clover to the bee—
Has all thy sweetness been to me!

Naught is more pure than morning dew,
Or breath of winds on the billows blue,
Or lymph that gushes from the rock,
Or Eden's bloom before its shock,
Or hoarded store of laden bee—
And pure as these thy love to me!

If the free dew should flout the rose,
If ships lie still though free wind blows,
If founts to thirsty lips were stayed,
If Hope should fail the sin-betrayed,
And the bee suck the flower in vain—
Each missing joy were mighty pain.

And like the rose with dewless leaves,
Or ship the strong wind only heaves,
Or thirsty lips at fountain's brim,
Or Eden's bloom to eyes grown dim,
Or like the bee the clover's cheat,
Am I—thine eyes grown cold to meet!

The rose loves not the dew-dry air,
The ship th' unspeeding gale could spare,
The pilgrim hate the empty spring,
And Eden barred despair would bring,
The bee when honey fails would die—
And in thy cold glance perish I!

WISHES.

I wish that grasses would learn to sprout,
That the lilac and rose-bush would both leaf out;
That the crocus would put on her gay green frill,
And robins begin to whistle and trill!

I wish that the wind-flower would grope its way
Out of the darkness into the day;
That the rain would fall and the sun would shine,
And the rainbow hang in the sky for a sign.

I wish that the silent brooks would shout,
And the apple-blossoms begin to pout;
And if I wish long enough, no doubt,
The fairy Spring will bring it about!

WIDOW COBB.

The fire crackled cheerfully on the broad hearth of the old farm-house kitchen, a cat and three kittens basked in the warmth, and a decrepit yellow dog, lying full in the reflection of the blaze, wrinkled his black nose approvingly as he turned his hind feet where his fore feet had been.

Over the chimney hung several fine hams and pieces of dried beef. Apples were festooned along the ceiling, and crooked-necked squashes vied with red peppers and slips of dried pumpkins in garnishing each window-frame. There were plants, too, on the window-ledges—horseshoe geraniums and dew-plants, and a monthly rose just budding, to say nothing of pots of violets that perfumed the whole place whenever they took it into their purple heads to bloom.

The floor was carefully swept—the chairs had not a speck of dust upon leg or round; the long settee near the fireplace shone as if it had just been varnished, and the eight-day clock in the corner had had its white face newly washed, and seemed determined to tick the louder for it. Two arm-chairs were drawn up at a cozy distance from the hearth and each other; a candle, a newspaper, a pair of spectacles, a dish of red-cheeked apples, and a pitcher of cider, filled a little table between them.

In one of these chairs sat a comfortable-looking woman of about 45, with cheeks as red as the apples, and eyes as dark and bright as they had ever been, resting her elbow on the table, and looking very thoughtfully into the fire. This was Widow Cobb—"relict" of Deacon Levi Cobb, who had been moldering into dust in the Bytown churchyard for more than seven years. She was thinking of her dead husband, possibly because—all her work being done, and the servants gone to bed—the sight of his empty chair at the other side of the table, and the silence of the room, made her a little lonely.

"Seven years," so the widow's reverie ran. "It seems as if it were more than fifty—and yet I don't look so very old either. Perhaps it's not having any children to bother my life out, as other people have. They may say what they like—children are more plague than profit—that's my opinion. Look at my sister Jerusha, with her six boys. She's worn to a shadow, and I am sure they have done it, though she will never own it."

The widow took an apple from the dish and began to peel it.

"How dreadful fond Mr. Cobb used to be of these grafts. He will never eat any more of them, poor fellow, for I don't suppose they have apples where he has gone to. Heigho! I remember very well how I used to throw apple-parings over my head when I was a girl, to see who I was going to marry."

Mrs. Cobb stopped short and blushed. For in those days she did not know Mr. Cobb, and was always looking eagerly to see if the peel had formed a capital "S." Her meditations took a new turn.

"How handsome Sam Payson was, and how much I used to care about him! I wonder what has become of him? Jerusha says he went away from our village just after I did, and no one has ever heard of him since. And what a silly thing that quarrel was! If it had not been for that—"

Here came a long pause, during which the widow looked very steadfastly at the empty arm-chair of Levi Cobb, deceased. Her fingers played carelessly with the apple-paring; she drew it slowly toward her, and looked around the room.

"Upon my word, it is very ridiculous, and I don't know what the neighbors would say if they saw me."

Still the plump fingers drew the red peel nearer.

"But then they can't see me, that's a comfort, and the cat and old Bowse will never know what it means. Of course I don't believe anything about it."

The paring hung very gracefully from her hand.

"But still I should like to try it; it would seem like old times, and—"

Over her head it went and curled up very quietly on the floor at a little distance. Old Bowse, who always slept with one eye open, saw it fall, and marched deliberately up to smell of it.

"Bowse—Bowse—don't touch it," cried his mistress, and, bending over it with a beating heart, she turned as red as fire. There was as handsome a capital "S" as anyone could wish to see.

A great knock came suddenly at the door. Bowse growled, and the widow screamed and snatched up the apple-paring.

"It's Mr. Cobb—it's his spirit come back because I tried that silly trick," she thought fearfully to herself.

Another knock, louder than the first, and a man's voice exclaimed:

"Hillo, the house!"

"Who is it?" asked the widow, somewhat relieved to find that the departed Levi was still safe in his grave upon the hillside.

"A stranger," said the voice.

"What do you want?"

"To get lodging for the night."

The widow deliberated.

"Can't you go on—there's a house half a mile further, if you keep to the right hand side of the road and turn to the left after you get by—"

"It's raining cats and dogs, and I'm very delicate," said the stranger, coughing. "I'm wet to the skin—don't you think you can accommodate me—I don't mind sleeping on the floor."

"Raining, is it? I didn't know that;" and the kind-hearted little woman unbarred the door very quickly. "Come in, whoever you may be. I only asked you to go on because I am a lone woman with only one servant in the house."

The stranger entered, shaking himself like a Newfoundland dog upon the step, and scattering a little shower of drops over his hostess and her nicely-swept floor.

"Oh, that looks comfortable after a man has been out for hours in a storm," he said, as he caught sight of the fire, and, striding along toward the hearth, followed by Bowse, who sniffed suspiciously at his heels, he stationed himself in the arm-chair—Mr. Cobb's arm-chair, which had been kept sacred to his memory for seven years. The widow was horrified, but her guest looked so weary and worn out that she could not ask him to move, but busied herself in stirring up the blaze that he might the sooner dry his dripping clothes. A new thought struck her; Mr. Cobb had worn a comfortable dressing-gown during his illness, which still hung in the closet at the right. She could not let this poor man catch his death by sitting in that wet coat. If he was in Mr. Cobb's chair, why should he not be in Mr. Cobb's wrapper? She went nimbly to the closet, took it down, fished out a pair of slippers from a boot-rack below, and brought them to him.

"I think you had better take off your coat and boots; you will have the rheumatic fever, or something like it, if you don't. Here are some things for you to wear while they are drying. And you must be hungry, too; I will go into the pantry and get you something to eat."

She bustled away "on hospitable thoughts intent," and the stranger made the exchange. He was a tall, well-formed man, with a bold but handsome face, sunburned and heavily bearded, and looking anything but "delicate," though his blue eyes glanced out from under a forehead as white as snow. He looked around the kitchen and stretched out his feet before him, decorated with the deacon's slippers. Then he leaned forward and stroked the cat and her brood, and patted old Bowse upon the head. The widow, bringing in sundry good things, looked pleased at his attentions to her dumb friends.

"It's a wonder Bowse does not growl; he generally does if strangers touch him. Dear me, how stupid!"

The last remark was neither addressed to the stranger nor the dog, but to herself. She had forgotten that the little stand was not empty, and there was no room on it for the things she held.

"O, I'll manage it," said the guest, gathering up paper, candle, apples and spectacles—(it was not without a little pang that she saw them in his hand, for they had been the deacon's, and were placed each night, like the arm-chair, beside her)—and deposited them on the settee.

"Give me the table-cloth, ma'am; I can spread it as well as any woman. I've learned that along with scores of other things in my wanderings. Now let me relieve you of those dishes; they are far too heavy for those little hands;" (the widow blushed;) "now please sit down with me, or I cannot eat a morsel."

"I had supper long ago, but really I think I can take something more," said Mrs. Cobb, gently drawing her chair nearer to the little table.

"Of course you can, my dear lady—in this cold autumn weather, people ought to eat twice as much as they do in warm. Let me give you a piece of this ham—your own curing, I dare say?"

"Yes; my poor husband was very fond of it. He used to say that no one understood curing ham and drying beef better than I."

"He was a most sensible man, I am sure. I drink your health, madam, in this cider."

He took a long draught, and set down his glass.

"It is like nectar."

The widow was feeding Bowse and the cat (who thought they were entitled to a share of every meal eaten in the house), and did not quite hear what he said. I fancy she would hardly have known what "nectar" was—so it was quite as well.

"Fine dog, ma'am—and a very pretty cat."

"They were my husband's favorites," and a sigh followed the answer.

"Ah—your husband must have been a very happy man."

The blue eyes looked at her so long that she grew flurried.

"Is there anything more I can get for you, sir?" she asked at last.

"Nothing more, thank you kindly; I have finished."

She rose to clear the things away. He assisted her, and somehow their hands had a queer knack of touching as they carried the dishes to the pantry-shelves. Coming back to the kitchen, she put the apples and cider in their old places, and brought out a clean pipe and a box of tobacco from an arched recess near the chimney.

"My husband always said he could not sleep after eating supper late, unless he smoked," she said. "Perhaps you would like to try it, sir?"

"Not if it is to drive you away," he answered, for she had her candle in her hand.

"O, no—I do not object to smoke at all." She put the candle down—some faint suggestion about "propriety" troubled her, but she glanced at the clock and felt assured. It was only half-past nine.

The stranger pushed the stand back after the pipe was lit, and drew her easy-chair a little nearer the fire—and his own.

"Come, sit down," he said, pleadingly. "It's not too late; and when a man has been knocking about in California, and all sorts of places, for a berth like this; and to have a good-natured, pretty woman to speak to once again—"

"California! Have you been in California!" she exclaimed, dropping into the chair at once.

Unconsciously, she had long cherished the idea that Sam Payson—the lover of her youth—with whom she had so foolishly quarreled, had pitched his tent, after many wanderings, in that far-off land. Her heart warmed to one who, with something of Sam's looks and ways about him, had been sojourning in that country—and who very possibly had met him—perhaps had known him intimately! At that thought her heart beat quick, and she looked very graciously at the bearded stranger, who, wrapped in Mr. Cobb's dressing-gown, wearing Mr. Cobb's slippers, and, sitting in Mr. Cobb's chair beside Mr. Cobb's wife, smoked Mr. Cobb's pipe, with such an air of feeling most thoroughly and comfortably at home!

"Yes, ma'am; I've been in California for the last six years. And before that I went quite round the world in a whaling ship."

"Good gracious!"

The stranger sent a puff of smoke curling gracefully over his head.

"It's very strange, my dear lady, how often you see one thing as you go wandering about the world after that fashion?"

"And what is that?"

"Men, without house or home above their heads, roving here and there, and turning up in all sorts of odd places, caring very little for life as a general thing, and making fortunes just to fling them away again—and all for one reason. You don't ask me what that is! No doubt you know already very well."

"I think not, sir."

"Because a woman has jilted them!"

Here was a long pause, and Mr. Cobb's pipe emitted short puffs with surprising rapidity. A guilty conscience needs no accuser, and the widow's cheek was dyed with blushes as she thought of the absent Sam.

"I wonder how women manage when they get served in the same way," said the stranger, musingly. "You never meet them roaming up and down in that style."

"No," said Mrs. Cobb, with some spirit; "if a woman is in trouble, she must stay at home and bear it in the best way she can. And there's more women bearing such things than we know of, I dare say."

"Like enough. We never know whose hands get pinched in a trap unless they scream. And women are too shy, or too sensible, whichever you choose, or that."

"Did you ever, in all your wanderings, meet any one by the name of Samuel Payson?" asked the widow, unconcernedly.

The stranger looked toward her—she was rummaging her drawer for the knitting-work, and did not notice him. When it was found and the needles in motion, he answered her:

"Payson? Sam Payson? What! He was my most intimate friend! Do you know him?"

"A little—that is, I used to when I was a girl. Where did you meet him?"

"He went with me on the whaling voyage I told you of, and afterward to California. We had a tent together, and some other fellows with us, and we dug in the same claim for more than six months."

"I suppose he was quite well?"

"Strong as an ox, my dear lady."

"And—and happy?" said the widow, bending close over her knitting.

"Hum—the less said about that the better—perhaps. But he seemed to enjoy life after a fashion of his own. And he got rich out there, or rather, I will say, very well off."

Mrs. Cobb did not pay much attention to that part of the story. Evidently she had not finished asking questions. But she was puzzled about her next one. At last she brought it out beautifully:

"Was his wife with him in California?"

The stranger looked at her with a twinkling eye.

"His wife, ma'am? Why, bless you, he hasn't got one!"

"O, I thought—I mean heard"—here the little widow remembered the fate of Ananias and Sapphira, and stopped before she told a tremendous fib.

"Whatever you heard of his marrying was all nonsense, I can assure you. I know him well, and he had no thought of the kind about him. Some of the boys used to tease him about it—but he very soon made them stop."

"How?"

"He just told them frankly that the only woman he had ever loved had jilted him years before, and married another man. After that no one ever mentioned the subject to him again except me."

Mrs. Cobb laid her knitting aside and looked thoughtfully into the fire.

"He was another specimen of the class of men I was speaking of. I have seen him face death a score of times as quietly as I face the fire. 'It matters very little what takes me off,' he used to say; 'I've nothing to live for, and there's no one to shed a tear for me when I am gone.' It's a sad thought for a man to have, isn't it?"

Mrs. Cobb sighed as she said she thought it was.

"But did he ever tell you the name of the lady who jilted him?"

"I know her first name."

"What was it?"

"Maria."

The plump little widow almost started out of her chair, the name was spoken so exactly as Sam would have said it.

"Did you know her?" he said, looking keenly at her.

"Yes."

"Intimately?"

"Yes."

"And where is she now? Still happy with her husband, I suppose, and never giving a thought to the poor fellow she drove out into the world?"

"No," said Mrs. Cobb, shading her face with her hand, and speaking unsteadily. "No; her husband is dead."

"Ah! But still she never thinks of Sam."

There was a dead silence.

"Does she?"

"How can I tell?"

"Are you still friends?"

"Yes."

"Then you ought to know. Tell me."

"I am sure I don't know why I should. But, if I do, you must promise me, on your honor, never to tell him if you ever meet with him again."

"Madam, what you say to me never shall be repeated to any mortal man, upon my honor."

"Well, then, she does remember him."

"But how?"

"As kindly, I think, as he could wish."

"I am glad to hear it, for his sake. You and I are the friends of both parties; we can rejoice with each other."

He drew his chair nearer hers, and took her hand. One moment she resisted, but it was a magic touch; the rosy palm lay very quietly in his, and the dark beard bent so low that it nearly touched her shoulder. It did not matter much. Was he not Samuel Payson's dear friend? If he was not the rose, had he not dwelt very near it for a long, long time?

"It was a very foolish quarrel that parted them," said the stranger, softly.

"Did he tell you about it?"

"Yes, on board the whaler."

"Did he blame her much?"

"Not so much as himself. He said that his jealousy and ill-temper drove her to break off the match; but he thought sometimes if he had only gone back and spoken kindly to her, she would have married him after all."

"I am sure she would," said the widow, piteously. "She has owned it to me more than a thousand times."

"She was not happy, then, with another?"

"Mr. ——, that is to say, her husband, was very good and kind," said the little woman, thinking of the lonely grave on the hillside rather penitently, "and they lived very pleasantly together. There never was a harsh word between them."

"Still—might she not have been happier with Sam? Be honest, and say just what you think."

"Yes."

"Bravo! That is what I wanted to come at. And now I have a secret to tell you, and you must break it to her."

Mrs. Cobb looked rather scared.

"What is it?"

"I want you to go and see her, wherever she may be, and say to her 'Maria'—what makes you stare so?"

"Nothing—only you speak so like some one I used to know."

"Do I?—well, take the rest of the message. Tell her that Sam loved her through the whole; that when he heard she was free, he began to work hard at making a fortune; he has got it, and is coming to share it with her, if she will let him. Will you tell her this?"

The widow did not answer. She had freed her hand from his, and covered her face with it. By-and-by she looked up again. He was waiting patiently.

"Well?"

"I will tell her."

He rose from his seat, and walked up and down the room. Then he came back, and, leaning on the mantel-piece, stroked the yellow hide of Bowse with his slipper.

"Make her quite understand that he wants her for his wife. She may live where she likes and how she likes, only it must be with him."

"I will tell her."

"Say he has grown old, but not cold; that he loves her now, perhaps, better than he did twenty years ago; that he has been faithful to her all his life, and that he will be faithful till he dies—"

The Californian broke off suddenly. The widow answered still:

"I will tell her."

"And what do you think she will say?" he asked, in an altered tone.

"What can she say but—come?"

"Hurrah!"

The stranger caught her out of her chair as if she had been a child, and kissed her.

"Don't—O, don't!" she cried out. "I am Sam's Maria."

"Well—I am Maria's Sam!"

Off went the dark wig and the black whiskers—there smiled the dear face she had never forgotten. I leave you to imagine the tableau. Even the cat got up to look, and Bowse sat on his stump of a tail and wondered whether he was on his heels or his head. The little widow gave one scream, and then said—

But stop! Quiet people like you and me, dear reader, who have got over all these follies, and can do nothing but turn up our noses at them, have no business here. I will only add that two hearts were very happy; that Bowse concluded after a while that all was right, and so lay down to sleep again—and that not a great while afterward there was a wedding at the house that made the neighboring farmers stare. Widow Cobb had married her first love!

Supreme Court Decisions.

The following decisions have been rendered by the United States Supreme Court:

No. 1,106. Cromwell vs. the County of Sac. Error to the Circuit Court for Iowa. In this cause the court held that where a person purchased a municipal bond that had several years to run, to which an overdue and unpaid coupon for interest was attached, the fact did not render the bond and subsequently-maturing coupons dishonored paper, so as to subject them in the hands of the purchaser for value to defenses good against the original holder. That a purchaser in the market of a negotiable security, unless personally chargeable with fraud, can recover the full amount of the security against the maker, though he may have paid less than its par value, whatever infirmities may have attended its origin, and a subsequent purchaser, even with notice, takes the paper with like immunity; that a bona fide purchaser of a public security for value before maturity, takes it freed from all infirmities of origin, the only exceptions being where the securities were absolutely void for want of power to issue them, or where the circulation was prohibited by the law for illegality of consideration, such as being founded upon gambling or usurious transactions. Municipal bonds in Iowa, it is said, drawing 10 per cent. interest before maturity under the law of that State, draw the same interest after maturity, and the coupons attached to such bonds draw 6 per cent. a year after maturity, as also the judgments entered upon them. Reversed.

No. 202. The Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Company vs. McCarthy. Error to the Circuit Court for the District of Missouri. In this case the court held that the railroad company having contracted to forward cattle from East St. Louis to Philadelphia, it is responsible for the transportation over the whole route, as well on the tracks of other companies as upon its own; that railroad companies, unless forbidden to do so by their charters, have power to contract for shipments the entire distance freight is to be carried over connecting lines. Affirmed.

Huxley as a Handicraftsman.

"Technical education," in the sense in which the term is ordinarily used, and in which I am now employing it, means that sort of education which is specially adapted to the needs of men whose business in life it is to pursue some kind of handicraft; it is, in fact, a fine Greco-Latin equivalent for what in good vernacular English would be called "the teaching of handicrafts." And, probably, at this stage of our progress, it may occur to many of you to think of the story of the cobbler and his last, and to say to yourselves, though you will be too polite to put the question openly to me: "What does the speaker know practically about this matter? What is his handicraft?" I think the question is a very proper one, and, unless I were prepared to answer it, I hope satisfactorily, I should have chosen some other theme.

The fact is, I am, and have been any time these thirty years, a man who works with his hands—a handicraftsman. I do not say this in the broadly metaphorical sense in which fine gentlemen, with all the delicacy of Agag about them, trip to the hustings about election time, and protest that they, too, are workingmen. I really mean my words to be taken in their direct, literal and straightforward sense. In fact, if the most nimble-fingered watchmaker among you will come to my workshop, he may set me to put a watch together, and I will set him to dissect, say, a black-beetle's nerves. I do not wish to vaunt, but I am inclined to think that I shall manage my job to his satisfaction sooner than he will do his piece of work to mine.—Prof. Huxley, in Popular Science Monthly for March.

Representative Baker, of Massachusetts, said, in a speech in the House the other day, that some of his brother members probably wanted to go to Congress. "The gentleman must address the Chair," interposed Speaker Long. "It was the Chair I had specially in mind," retorted Mr. Baker. [Loud laughter.]

SPARTACUS TO THE GLADIATORS AT CAPUA.

ADAPTED FROM THE PROSE OF E. KELLOGG BY MRS. MOLLIE MITCHELL.

There had been rejoicing in the gay Capuan town;
Her heroes had returned with victorious renown;
Her festive halls re-echoed the exultant shout again
Till the echoes hovered o'er the bright Italian plain.

But the arena was hushed, the wild revelry o'er,
And Numidia's fierce lion had silenced his roar;
As the gay city slept in the moon's soft light
Not a whisper broke the calm stillness of night.

Near the silent arena, where rose on that day
The cry of approval and laugh of the gay,
Was gathered a band of those aliens from Greece—
Rome's captives of war, their bondmen in peace.

And their leader then spake to the downtrodden band:
"I was not always a slave in this barbarous land—
The murderous vassal of patrician Rome—
No, Thracia's vine-robed hills were once my quiet home.

"[illegible] with all my power,
For who hath known Spartacus ever to cower?
My forefathers came from old Sparta's rude plains,
And the blood of her heroes still course through my veins.

"My childhood ran calm as the brooklet which strayed
Through the valleys where I in sweet innocence played,
And a musical flute charmed the hours away
When my labors were o'er at the closing of day.

"One eve 'neath the myrtle that shadowed our cot
My grandsire told how the Spartans once fought,
And my young blood thrilled at the terrible story
Which Greece deems the height of her martial glory.

"Ah! little did I in my shepherd cot know
How relentless could be an implacable foe!
E'en the mother who fondly caressed me that night
Was a victim ere morn of Rome's cruel might.

"Yes, the war-horse trampled that warm mother's breast
To which I was so oft in my infancy prest,
While I saw in dismay the bruised form of my sire
Consigned with our home to the merciless fire.

"And this day, as I stood where applause rang high,
I saw a loved friend of my boyhood die.
Yes, died, and by me was this young Thracian slain;
He knew me and smiled in the midst of his pain.

"The same smile he wore as we scaled the proud peak
In our childhood the bright fruits of summer to seek;
Too well I remembered that dear face again
Though writhing in death and distorted by pain.

"I pleaded, aye besought, as I knelt in the dust,
That the Prætor to me might this comrade intrust,
As he'd been my companion, true-hearted and brave,
But he drew back in scorn from the approach of a slave.

"And this answer he gave me, in tones of derision:
'None are noble save men of the Roman nation;'
While matrons and vestals thought it merry, forsooth,
That Rome's chief gladiator should tremble at death.

"Ah, Rome, thou hast taught the mild shepherd to wield
With a dextrous hand the grim falchion and shield;
He'll reward thee again till the Tiber runs red
With the blood that shall flow from thy noblest dead.

"And ye, fellow-bondmen, has the Grecian pride fled
That once fired the hearts of our Spartan dead?
But list to yon lion's menacing roar,
He may feast on your strength ere the morrow is o'er.

"Then let's flee to the mountains where liberty reigns,
Spurning despotic power or slavery's chains,
And show these vile tyrants how a Thracian can die
When our band shall their helmeted legions defy.

"And should Lentulus' minions o'erpower us strife
'Twill be triumph compared to this hireling life,
For remember, oh countrymen! friends of my home,
That death is a boon to the bond-slave of Rome."

TWO YOUNG MEN MURDERED.

A Southern Marriage that was Followed by a Terrible Tragedy.

[Selma (Ala.) Cor. New York Sun.]

John Hunter Smith, son of Robert White Smith, formerly a Wall street broker, and grandson of the late Judge John Hunter, invited ten or twelve young men to join him in a deer hunt. After a social dinner, a message was brought to the effect that a friend and cousin, young Murphy, with his intended wife, were waiting at Choctaw Bluff—young Smith's private plantation landing—about 200 yards off, contemplating a runaway marriage. The party went down and witnessed the ceremony, and, after it was over, young Smith picked up his guitar, entered his store room on the bluff, sat down, and commenced playing and singing. Hearing an unusual noise outside the warehouse, he went to the door, and saw that a Mr. Johnson, a powerful-built man, in truth a Southern giant, who had been Murphy's rival in the affections of the bride, had knocked Murphy down, and was about to stab him. Smith hurried to Murphy's assistance, knocked Johnson down, and got away the knife. Johnson sprang up, raised his pistol, fired at Smith, and wounded him in the side. The young man clasped his hand to the wound, leaned upon a tree, and said: "I have my death shot."

Johnson then sprang at Smith, knife in hand, to stab him, whereupon, in self-defense, Smith fired at Johnson, but, missing his aim, struck and seriously wounded young Murphy. Again Johnson fired at Smith, this time striking the tree against which he leaned, and once more Smith fired, this time, too, missing Johnson, and again hitting and mortally wounding his friend and cousin, Murphy.

This was all the work of a moment, and while the young men were taking the wounded ones to the house, Johnson disappeared. Smith was assisted into the house. He closed his eyes, and pressed his hands to his wounds. At that instant, while all were striving to do something for him, the coward Johnson sprang into the window, and, before anyone could prevent, reached Smith's side, placed his pistol to the young man's closed eye, fired, and killed him instantly. At latest advices from Choctaw Bluff the people seemed to be paralyzed, and no steps had been taken for the arrest and punishment of Johnson. Young Smith's friends say that Johnson shall not escape.

Hell No Longer a Power.

Yet the doctrine of hell is now growing obsolete. Originating in ages of savagery and low barbarism, and developed in periods of fierce intolerance, sanguinary persecutions, cruel civil codes and vindictive punishments, it harmonized with the severities and violence of society, and undoubtedly had use as a means of the harsh discipline of men when they were moved only by the lowest motives. But, with the advance of knowledge and the cultivation of the humaner sentiments, the doctrine has become anomalous and out of harmony with the advance of human nature. Hence, though still a cardinal tenet of orthodoxy, it is now generally maintained in a vague and loose way, and with reservations and protests that virtually destroy it. Only revival preachers of the Moody type still affirm the literal "lake of fire and brimstone," and it is certain that the doctrine in any shape recurs much less prominently in current preaching than it did a generation or two ago. Sober-minded clergymen have got in the way of neglecting it, except now and then when rehearsing the creed, or, as at present, under the spur of controversy, or when rallied about the decay of the old theology. The hell of Jonathan Edwards is gone. That sturdy theologian wrote: "The world will probably be converted into a great lake, or liquid globe of fire—a vast ocean of fire in which the wicked shall be overwhelmed, which will always be in tempest, in which they shall be tossed to and fro, having no rest day or night, vast waves or billows of fire continually rolling over their heads, of which they shall forever be full of a quick sense within and without; their heads, their eyes, their tongues, their feet, their loins and their vitals shall forever be full of a glowing, melting fire, fierce enough to melt the very rocks and elements; and also they shall eternally be full of the most quick and lively sense to feel the torments; not for one minute, nor for one day, nor for one age, nor for two ages, nor for a hundred ages, nor for ten thousands of millions of ages, one after another, but for ever and ever without any end at all, and never, never be delivered."—Prof. Youmans, in Popular Science Monthly for March.

Evenings at the White House.

The President and family receive formally in the evening, sometimes in the red-room and sometimes in the library. These visits, however, are only made by intimate personal friends, or by those warranted through their acquaintance to call in a social manner. The evenings in the library are very charming. Brilliant and cultivated men and women gather in little knots in different parts of the spacious and cheerful apartment, and wit sparkles and anecdote enlivens conversation. The President frequently disappears; he has a private library, where he retires when any gentleman present wishes to speak with him on matters of policy or politics; but he soon returns, to all appearances as unruffled as if the great sea of public opinion had settled into a perfect calm. Mrs. Hayes entertains her visitors in an easy, courteous, cordial manner, moving among them with stately grace, and scattering pleasant words. Great gentleness and sweetness pervade the whole domestic life of the President's family. Little Fannie, the only daughter, a bright child of 9 years, the pet and favorite of all who know her, is never visible at dinner or to evening visitors. "I am obliged to compromise with my little lady," remarked Mrs. Hayes, with a smile, "as I found her growing old too fast for her years; we serve her dinner in her room, which she esteems a high compliment." The private dining-room of the President's family is the only one of their private apartments which is on the great main floor of the White House. The meals are breakfast, lunch and dinner, instead of breakfast, dinner and tea, as in the time of Madison. No unusual forms and ceremonies are observed in the service further than those at any gentlewoman's table. The hospitalities of either lunch or dinner are frankly tendered to any familiar guest who may chance to be calling at the specified hour, and not infrequently accepted.—Martha J. Lamb, in Harper's Magazine for March.

Fooling with a Quaker.

He was a peaceable-looking man, with a quiet-looking horse attached to an unattractive sleigh, with unostentatious bells. He wore a wide-rimmed hat and a shad-bellied coat, as he drove easily down the South Easton hill, journeying from Bucks county to the land of Northampton. He was observed by a fellow of the species rough, whom much loafing had made impudent, and who lifted up his yawp:

"Sa-a-a-y! hat, where are you going with that man?"

"Verily, I journey beyond the river, friend," mildly responded the Quaker, "and thither goeth my hat also."

"Hold up and take a fellow along, can't you?" called out the man of wrath.

"Nay, friend, my business and inclinations forbid it."

"I'll soon fix that," and the fool ran forward and jumped on the runner.

"Verily, friend, if thee insists upon getting into my vehicle I will even help thee," and the man of peace reached out a right hand as resistless as an oyster dredge. It caught the youth around the throat worse than a fourteen-year-old diphtheria, jerked him into the sleigh, and slammed him down among the straw, where he got tramped on by a pair of No. 43 cowhides until he thought he had got caught in a shower of pile drivers. Finally he got a kick that lifted him clear over the side of the sleigh and ran his head into the bank by the roadside, where he dwindled down in a heap like a gum shoe discouraged by a street-car, and murmured as he rubbed his ensanguined nose in the snow:

"Who'n blazes'd a ever thought the cast-iron man'd gone around with steam up an' disguised as a blamed old Quaker."—Easton Free Press.

Quick on the Trigger.

"You will please observe," said old Mr. Lambwell, as he led us through his school the other day, "that the boys are required to display the utmost attention to quietness and discipline, and in a short time become even divested of that most annoying disposition to tease each other; in short, they soon settle down into all the gravity of mature years, under the wholesome system I have introduced."

We at this moment arrived in front of several boys who were standing around a bucket of water, and one had just charged his mouth with the contents of a tin cup, while the old gentleman was stooping to recover his pen from the floor, when another, passing behind, snapped his finger quickly beneath the drinker's ear, and caused him by a sudden start to eject the contents of his mouth over the pedagogue's bald pate. Starting upright, with his hair and face dripping, the master shouted:

"Who did that?"

The party unanimously cried out, "Jim Gun, sir."

"Jim Gun, you rascal, what did you do that for?"

Jim, appalled at the mischief he had done, muttered out that it was not his fault, but that Tom Owens had snapped him.

This changed the direction of old Lambwell's wrath, and shaking his cane portentously over Owens' head, he asked:

"Did you snap Gun?"

The culprit, trembling with fear, murmured:

"Yes, sir; I snapped Gun, but I didn't know he was loaded."

The Affectionate Gorilla.

Col. Thomas Scott sat in the Grand Central Depot at Timbuctoo, arguing with a venerable gorilla on the necessity of extending the Cairo and Timbuctoo railway through South Africa at public expense. "It will only cost one hundred and fifty millions," said Tom, and, really, Mr. Gorilla, you and your people are too much out of the world."

The venerable African listened with the deepest respect to the utterance of the railway magnate, and answered him thus:

"We don't need the railroad, and can't afford to pay one hundred and fifty millions for it; and, besides, we gorillas travel on our muscle, not by rail."

"What do you suppose I'm here for?" replied Col. Scott. "The railroad shall be built, if it takes the last ounce of gold-dust and the last gallon of palm-oil in the country to pay for it. That's the sort of toothpick I am."

"Is that so?" softly murmured the venerable gorilla, who thereupon him, the said Scott, in his arms did enfold, and to his heart passionately did press till the last breath had left Tom's body, which was carefully laid in a convenient palace-car, with the parting words, "Good-by, Tom. That's the sort of gorilla I am."

Degenerate Rabbits.

In the year 1419 a few rabbits were born on a Spanish ship and put on the island of Porto Santo. There were no beasts of prey there, and these little animals increased so enormously as to become a pest to the country, and compelled a colony to remove from it. They are still there, but in the course of 450 years they have become a "species;" they have a peculiar color, a rat-like shape, are small in size, live a nocturnal life, and are of extreme wildness. And now they refuse even to pair with the European form from which they arose.—London Quarterly Review.

BEN BUTLER took his little $2 fee the other day as a witness before a House committee, put it in his vest pocket, and then pulled down his vest as jauntily as if he'd just bagged a retainer of $5,000.

LEO XIII.

Sketch of the New Pope.

Pecci is tall, with fine head, high forehead, narrow at the temples; long face, and straight features. He has a large mouth, prominent chins, cheerful, open countenance, and small, well-shaped ears. His face reminds one of Consalvi, the renowned Minister of Pius VII. He has a fine, sonorous voice; great dignity, even austerity, of manners in public life, but privately is affectionate, unassuming, sociable and witty. As Camerlengo, he has been at the head of that party which, without formally renouncing the right of the Holy See, acknowledges the wisdom of submitting to the decrees of Providence, accepting what seems to be irrevocably, accomplished facts.

At Perugia he followed the same policy recommended by the late Cardinal Riario Sforza. At Naples he advised good Catholics to fulfill their duties as citizens at the municipal and provincial elections, even when the clerical press, proposing to interpret the wish of the Vatican, enjoined the policy of abstention.

Cardinal Pecci spoke with great affect against the proposal for the removal of the conclave from Rome and other measures advocated by the reactionary party. He enjoys the confidence and support of the Liberals.

Cardinal Pecci's private life, at all periods, is beyond reproach. He has considerable literary talent, and has written poetry. He never has had intercourse with functionaries of the present Italian Government, but is esteemed by them all, and those with whom the necessity of his duty brings him into contact are perfectly charmed with him.

"THE crown's all knocked out of your hat," yelled some newsboys to a human temperance sermon wabbling along the streets of Chicago the other day. "Was I care?" said the "example," as he turned on his tormentors a moment; "ain't I cit'zen of a great republic? an' was I care for crowns?"—Chicago Journal.

The Crisis.

What think you would be the result if the earth should stop spinning around the sun? Were you ever near a large and intricate machine when one of its wheels became clogged or broken—near enough to hear the grating, jarring clash, the sudden, deafening crash? Astronomers assure us that precisely similar effects, only on an inconceivably grander scale, would be produced if our earth—one of the wheels in the universe-machine—should suddenly cease its revolutions. In other words, there would be a general clash and crash of satellites, planets and systems. What we term financial crises are due to similar causes. One of the wheels in the finance-machine becomes clogged, perhaps shattered. The terrible Wall street "crash" which follows is communicated to every part of the financial mechanism of the country. But analogies do not stop here. There is that other mechanism, the most intricate of all—sometimes called an organism because it generates its own forces—the human machine. When one of its members fails to perform its office the whole system is thrown into disorder. Members before considered unassailable break down under the unnatural pressure. The shock comes, and utter prostration is the result. Reparation can only be effected by the restoration of the impaired parts and the readjustment of its levers—the physical forces. There is one part of the machine more liable to disorder than any other—the liver—the great balance-wheel of the machine.

The liver being the great depurator or blood-cleansing organ of the system, set it at work and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood, and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, used daily, and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, taken in very small doses, are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents.

Breathing Miasma Without Injury.

There is no exaggeration in the statement that thousands of persons residing from one year's end to another in fever and ague regions on this continent and elsewhere breathe air more or less impregnated with miasma without incurring the disease, simply and only because they are in the habit of using Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a preventive. It has frequently happened, and the fact has been amply attested by the parties themselves, that persons surrounded on all sides by neighbors suffering the tortures of this shivering and burning plague, have enjoyed absolute immunity from it, thanks to the protection afforded by the Bitters. Nor is that standard anti-febrile cordial less efficacious in remedying than in preventing chills and fever, bilious remittents, and disorders of a kindred type. Taken between the paroxysms, it speedily mitigates their violence, and eventually prevents their recurrence. These facts, convincingly established by evidence, appeal with peculiar force to travelers and sojourners in malarious districts.

PHYSICIANS have long prescribed Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a relief and cure of Heart Disease, for the simple reason that they have seen its favorable workings in all the many forms of disease the Heart is liable to, and it can truly be recommended as a scientific remedy for that dreaded of all diseases, whose subtle workings are not usually seen until the patient is beyond ordinary help. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. We can pronounce Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR a certain remedy, and advise you to use it. Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing list of testimonials of cures, etc.

The Cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World!

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heartburn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of MERCURY, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases caused by Derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

THE SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; Sour Stomach; Loss of Appetite; Bowels alternately costive and lax; Headache; Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; Debility, Low Spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption.

Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not Regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

I can recommend, as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons' Liver Regulator.—LEWIS G. WUNDER, 1,625 MASTER STREET, ASSISTANT POSTMASTER, PHILADELPHIA.

"We have tested its virtues, personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons' Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved, but cured us."—ED. VEGETINE
FOR DROPSY.

CENTRAL FALLS, R. I., Oct. 19, 1877.

DR. H. R. STEVENS:
It is a pleasure to give my testimony for your valuable medicine. I was sick for a long time with Dropsy, under the doctor's care. He said it was Water between the Heart and Liver. I received no benefit until I commenced taking the VEGETINE—in fact, I was growing worse. I have tried many remedies; they did not help me. VEGETINE is the medicine for Dropsy. I began to feel better after taking a few bottles. I have taken thirty bottles in all. I am perfectly well—never felt better. No one can feel more thankful than I do.
I am, dear sir, gratefully yours,
A. D. WHEELER.

VEGETINE. When the blood becomes lifeless and stagnant, either from change of weather or of climate want of exercise, irregular diet, or from any other cause the VEGETINE will renew the blood, carry off the putrid humors, cleanse the stomach, regulate the bowels, and impart a tone of vigor to the whole body.

VEGETINE
For Kidney Complaint and Nervous Debility.

ISLESBORO, Me., Dec. 28, 1877.

MR. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—I had had a Cough for eighteen years, when I commenced taking the VEGETINE. I was very low, my system was debilitated by disease. I had the Kidney Complaint, and was very nervous—Cough bad, and Lungs sore. When I had taken one bottle I found it was helping me; it has helped my cough, and it strengthens me. I am now able to do my work. Never have found anything like the VEGETINE. I know it is everything it is recommended to be.
MRS. A. J. PENDLETON.

VEGETINE is nourishing and strengthening; purifies the blood; regulates the bowels; quiets the nervous system; acts directly upon the secretions, and arouses the whole system to action.

VEGETINE
FOR SICK HEADACHE.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 1, 1878.

MR. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—I have used your VEGETINE for Sick Headache, and been greatly benefited thereby. I have every reason to believe it to be a good medicine.
Yours, very respectfully,
MRS. JAMES CONNOR, 411 Third Street.

HEADACHE. VEGETINE can be said to be a sure remedy for the many kinds of headache, as it acts directly upon the various causes of this complaint—Nervousness, Indigestion, Costiveness, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Biliousness, etc. Try the VEGETINE. You will never regret it.

VEGETINE.
DOCTOR'S REPORT.

DR. CHARLES M. DUDDENHAUSEN, Apothecary, Evansville, Ind.

The Doctor writes:
I have a large number of good customers who take VEGETINE. They all speak well of it. I know it is a good medicine for the complaints for which it is recommended.
Dec. 27, 1878.

VEGETINE is a great panacea for our aged fathers and mothers, for it gives them strength, quiets their nerves, and gives them Nature's sweet sleep.

VEGETINE.
DOCTOR'S REPORT.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:
Dear Sir—We have been selling your valuable VEGETINE for three years, and we find that it gives perfect satisfaction. We believe it to be the best Blood Purifier now sold. Very respectfully,
DR. J. E. BROWN & CO., Druggists, Uniontown, Ky.

VEGETINE has never failed to effect a cure, giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease.

The late democratic state convention took the bull by the horns in more ways than one. The currency question was the most important, but the interest question is not less important. The convention declared for a lower rate of interest—a return to the old rate of 6 per cent. Why? The reason is obvious. The present rate of ten per cent. is aiding the monied interest to bankrupt the whole country. It was argued when the rate was 6 per cent. in this state that the surplus capital of the east was passing over and around us to other western states and teritories where the rate of interest was higher—where in some quarters in fact usury was not limited. This, it was argued, left our state without the means of improvement and development. Such was the constant clamor of monied men that our legislature was finally induced to raise the legal rate of interest from 6 to 10 per cent. on all contracts for money, and but little has been loaned or ever will be loaned except on contract. Well, the increased rate of interest sure enough tured the flow of eastern capital towards our own state for investment and the consequence is, in this time of general contraction of the currency and shrinkage of all values, the people find this additional burden too heavy to bear and cry out for a lower rate of interest or a return to the old usury law. The high rate of interest is eating them out of house and home, destroying their business and consigning their property to the auction block. Nearly everybody is in debt more or less and most of the property in the state under mortgage, and all subjected to the present ruinous high rate of interest. It has been practically demonstrated that no business can be successfully run on borrowed capital at 10 per cent. interest while it is equally manifest that a great portion of the improvements in our towns and cities made on borrowed capital at the rate of interest cannot be sold for the amount for which we are mortgaged.

We are glad that the democratic state convention declared for a return to the old rate of interest under which our people so long prospered. Let our people return to the good old ways of the fathers. Let government give them plenty of greenbacks based on gold and silver, interchangable at all times, and a low rate of interest with an honest, economical administration and the prosperity of the country is once more assured. Rally around the democratic flag, boys.

Talk to the money-lender and he will tell you government has no right to fix the price of interest on money by law any more than it has to fix the price of the products of the farm or shop; that the price of money like any other merchantable commodity should be left to the laws of supply and demand and that the price ought to regulate itself. This is a superficial view to take of the question. In fact, it is entirely erroneous. Government makes money and fixes the value thereof. Government does not make the products of the farm or workshop and consequently cannot fix the value of either. Their market price must depend entirely upon the laws of trade supply and demand. If government makes money and fixes its value, it follows that its sovereign over the conditions of its circulation as an evidence of exchange of products of the farm and shop. This is all that money is credited for. As it is the laws of government which gives the circulating medium of the country its value, so its laws must regulate its value in all commercial dealings. Usury laws then have time immemorial followed the creation of money and must follow it to the end of time. Lawful interest on money is sanctioned by God and man. The main principles of governments are to protect the weak against the strong—the poor against the rich—and therefore the great class of mankind being weak and poor, a low rate of interest is their best protection in all governments. We believe it would harmonize with our democratic institutions and the welfare of our people if the general government would assume the prerogative of fixing the rate of interest on money, instead of the states, and fix it at as low as 8 per cent. under such penalties for an evasion or violation of the law as would protect the people against higher rates of interest.

Somebody wrote to an editor of a country paper to ask how he would "break an ox?" The editor answered as follows: "If only one ox, a good way would be to hoist him, by means of a long chain attached to his tail, to the top of a pole forty feet from the ground. Then hoist him, by a rope tied to his horns, to another pole. Then decend on his back a five ton pile driver and, if that don't break him, let him start in a country newspaper and trust people for subscription. One or the two ways will do it sure."

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

The Democracy of the State of Indiana assembled in delegate convention declare:

The National bank notes shall be retired, and in lieu thereof there shall be issued by the government an equal amount of Treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except such obligations only as are by the terms of the original contract under which they were issued, expressly payable in coin.

That the right to issue paper money as well as coin is the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound busines interests of the country may, from time to time, require.

We are in favor of such legislation by Congress as will authorize the taxation by the states of United States notes in common with all other money.

That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to enact any further legislation for the funding of the national debt abroad, through the means of home syndicates, or other methods; and we believe the true policy of the government and the best interests of the people would be subserved by legislation so as to distribute said debts among our people at home—affording them the most favorable and practical opportunities for the investment of their savings in the funded debt of the United States.

That we are in favor of such legislation which shall fix the legal rate of interest at not exceeding six per centum per annum.

We demand the restoration of the silver dollar, of 412½ grains, to the coin in the country, and with full legal tender quality in the payment of all debts, both public and private; and that the coinage thereof shallbe unlimited, and upon the same termsand conditions as may be provided for the coinage of gold.

That we are in favor of the immediate and unconditional repeal of the resumption act.

We are in favor of the most rigid economy in public expenditures, and we declare that the fees and salaries of all public officers should be reduced.

That we are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt act.

That we sincerely deplore the recent violent colision between labor and capital, and to prevent the recurrence thereof and to protect the future public order and security we believe that the wages of employees of corporations engaged in the busines of mining, manufacturing and transportation should be a first lien upon the property, receipts and earnings of said corporations, and that said lien should be declared, defined and enforced by appropriate legislation

That we favor the passage of a law for the ventilation of coal mines—one that would be just to the miner and the owner.

The Democratic party is a friend of the common schoool system, and will in every legitimate way labor for its success, and will oppose any attempt to divert any portion of the common school fund to any sectarian purpose.

That the last appointment of the State for legislative purposes was grossly unjust and dishonerable, and we demand that the next Legislature, in apportioning the State for Legislative purposes, as will be their imperative duty, shall have regard for population alone and contiguity of territory.

That the jurisdiction claimed and exercised by the Circuit Courts of the United States over questions of corporate and individual rights arising under the laws of the States, tend to oppress and burden litigants to such an extent as to amount to a practical denial of justice in many cases; and we consider the legislation which has conferred such jurisdiction as unwise and hurtful to the true intests of the people. And we demand such legislation as will restrict and limit the jurisdiction of such courts to such matters as are clearly contemplated by the Constitution, and expressed in the Judiciary Act of 1789.

We are opposed to class legislation, and protest against the grant of subsidies by the Federal Government, either in lands, bonds, money or by pledge of public credit.

That we abhor and hold up to public detestation the leaders in the Republican party who secretly connived, and with barefaced effrontery carried out the scheme by and through venal returning boards, whereby Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the people's choice for President and Vice President were wrongfully kept out of the position to which a free people had called them. We hold it up as the monster crime of the age, a crime against free government, a crime against the elective franchise, and a crime that can only be condoned when the malefactors who seated a fraud in the Presidential chair are driven from power and consigned to everlasting infamy by the people whom they have outraged. And we denounce the act of the President of the United States in appointing to high and lucrative positions the corrupt members of the returning boards, and condemn the acts of Federal officers in attempting to interefere with the rights and powers of the State courts in the prosecution of these criminals.

That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be and are hereby requested to secure the passage of a law giving to soldiers of the Mexican war a pension similar to that now given to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

Sarah's Brother Bill.

Sarah's brother Bill was on Lafayette Avenue yesterday watching the flyers. He looked a bit lonesome and a boy friend added more burden to his feeling by asking:

"Say, Bill, why don't the family go riding and take you along?"

"Dad hain't go no time.'

"And your mother?"

"She hain't got no nice clothes.'

"Well, there's Sarah.'

"Yes, she's skeered to go riding—fraid she'll be tipped out.

"Spose the cutter is upset—never hurts anybody?' persisted the boy.

"Yes, but when a gal is walking along,' slowly replied Sarah's brother, "her beau can't tell whether she wears No. 8 or No. 7 shoes, kase her dress hides 'em; but when she goes out in a sleigh on a curve, you—you understand.'

There was a long and solemn pause. The first boy at length timidly ventured to say:

"What does she wear?'

"Sevens fit her snug!' rejoined Bill; "and 'tween you and me, her head is level on this business. This is the fourth time she's been engaged, and she can't afford to take any chances.

An Intelligent Compositor's [illegible]tion.

[Trojan Observer.]

Scene in a south side oyster house. —A certain printer (whom we will designate as Footstick) slightly intoxicated, is seated at a table, perusing the bill of fare.

Footstick—"I say (hic) waiter."

Waiter (approaching)—"Yes, sir!"

Footstick—"Gimme some oysters. Stewed oysters (hic); and don't be all night about it.'

Walter departs. In prepairing the stew a few clams accidentally got mixed with the oysters, and without waiting to remove them the waiter, thinking him too drunk to observe the mistake, returns and deposits the dish before him. A few mouthfuls are consumed, when the man of types cautiously begins reeling about the soupe with his spoon, and presently brings forth a clam.

Footstick (wildly)—"waiter"

Waiter (returning)—"Yes, sir!"

Footstick—"What did I order?"

Waiter—"Oyster stew, sir.'

Footstick—"Oyster stew! That's so. Jes' ye gaze at that (holding up a clam). My friend, here's a wrong font oyster, or (hic) the proof lies.'

At the recent dedication of a Baptist church, the ceremony of immersion was performed by a well-known Baptist minister. When he had entered the water, and while waiting for the candidate, the minister suggested that somebody should sing an appropriate hymn. One of the deacons who stood near by heard the suggestion, and without thinking struck up the fimiliar hymn, "Pull for the Shore." The hymn prov to be so suggestive, it is stated that neither the minister nor the congregation could refrain from an audible smile for some time, and the ceremony had to be postponed until the preacher could recover his gravity.

Wit in Court.

Keen and cutting words, or even trifling incivilities, indulged in at the expense of counsel, have some times met with swift retribution. Plunket was once engaged in a case, when toward the end of the afternoon it became a question whether the Court should proceed or adjourn till the next day. Plunket expressed his willingness to go on if the jury would 'set."

"Sit, sir, sit,' said the presiding Judge, "not 'set;' hens set.'

"I thank you, my lord,' said Plunket.

The case proceeded, and presently the Judge had occasion to observe that if that were the case he feared the action would not "lay."

"Lie, my lord, lie,' exclaimed the barrister, "not lay; hens lay.'

"If you don't stop your coughing, sir,' said a hasty and irritable Judge, "I'll fine you a hundred pounds." "I'll give your lordship two hundred if you can stop it for me,' was the ready reply.

Curran was once addressing a jury, when the Judge, who was thought to be antagonistic to his client, intimated his dissent from the argument advanced by a shake of the head. "I see, gentlemen,' said Curran, "I see the motion of his lordship's head. Persons unacquainted with his lordship would be apt to think this implied a difference of opinion, but be assured, gentleman, this is not the case. When you know his lordship as well as I do, it will be unnecessary to tell you that when he shakes his head there really is nothing in it."

On another occasion Curran was pleading before Fitzgibbon, the Irish Chancellor, with whom he was on terms of anything but friendship. The Chancellor, with the distinct purpose, as it would seem, of insulting the advocate, brought with him on the bench a large Newfoundland dog, to which he devoted a great deal of his attention while Curran was addressing a very elaborate argument to him. At a very material point in the speech the Judge turned quite away, and seemed to be wholly engrossed with his dog. Curran ceased to speak. "Go on, go on, Mr. Curran," said the Chancellor. "Oh, I beg a thousand pardons," said the witty barrister, "I really was under the impression that your lordships were in consultation.

But, perhaps, the most crushing rejoinder ever flung back in return for an insult from the bench was that which this same advocate hurled at Judge Robinson.

Judge Robinson is described as a man of sour and cynical disposition, who had been raised to the bench—so, at least, it was commonly believed—simply because he had written in favor of the government of his day a number of pamplets remarkable for nothing but their servile and rancorous scurrility. At the time when Curran was only just raising into notice, and while he was yet a poor and struggling man, this Judge ventured upon a sneering joke which, small though it was, but for Curran's ready wit and searching eloquence, might have done him irreparable injury:

Speaking of some opinion of counsel on the opposite side, Curran said he had consulted all his books and could not find a single case in which the principle in dispute was thus established.

"This may be, Mr. Curran," sneered the Judge: "but I suspect your law library is rather limited."

Curran eyed the heartless toady for a moment, and then broke forth with this noble retaliation:

"It is very true, my lord, that I am poor, and this circumstance has certainly rather curtailed my libary. My books are not numerous, but they are select, and I hope have been perused with proper dispositions. I have prepared myself for this high profession rather by the study of a few good book than by composition of a great many bad ones. I am not ashamed of my poverty but I should be ashamed of my wealth if I should stoop to acquire it by servility and corruption. If I rise not to rank, I shall at least be honest; and should I ever ceas to be so, many an example shows me that an ill-acquired elevation, by making me the more conspicuous, would only make me the more universally and notoriously contemptible."—Ex.

TRANSLATIONS FROM HEINE.

"Still ist die Nacht, es ruh'n die Gassen."

Still is the night, and the streets are lone;
My darling dwelt in this house of yore;
'Tis years since she from the city has flown,
Yet the house stands there as it did before.

There, too, stands a man, and aloft stares he,
And for stress of anguish he wrings his hands.
My blood runs cold when his face I see;
'Tis my own very self in the moonlight stands.

Thou double! Thou fetch, with the livid face!
Why dost thou mimic my love-lorn mold,
That was racked and rent in this very place
So many a night in the times of old?
—Theodore Martin, in Blackwood's Magazine.

BEFORE THE SNOW.

Winter is on us, but not yet the snow!
The hills are etched on the horizon, bare,
The skies are iron-gray, a bitter air,
With meager clouds that shudder as they go;
One yellow leaf the listless wind doth blow,
Like some new butterfly, unclassed and rare;
Your footsteps ring in frozen alleys, where
The black trees seem to shiver as you go.

Beyond lie church and steeple, and their old
And rusty vanes that rattle as they veer—
A sharper gust would shock them from their hold!
Yet up that path, in Maytime of the year,
And past that dreary, ruined tower we strolled
To pluck wild strawberries with summer cheer.
—After Albert Glatigny, in Macmillan's Magazine.

LOVE'S LAST SUIT.

"Love, forget me when I'm gone,
When the tree is overthrown
Let its place be digged and sown
O'er with grass; when that is grown,
The very place shall be unknown.
So court I oblivion!
So, I charge thee by our love,
Love, forget me, when I'm gone!
Love of him that lies in clay
Only maketh life forlorn—
Clouding o'er the new-born day
With regrets of yestermorn.

And what is love to him that's low,
Or sunshine on his grave that floats?
Love nor sunshine reacheth now
Deeper than the daisy roots.
So, when he that nigh me hovers—
Death, that spares not happy lovers—
Comes to claim his little due,
Love, as thou art good and true,
Proudly give the churl his own,
And forget me when I'm gone!"

MOTHER AND CHILD. (DANAE AND PERSEUS.)

Closed in the fine-wrought chest,
She felt the rising wind the waters move,
Then, by new fear possessed,
With action wild
And cheeks bedewed, she stretched her arms of love
Toward Perseus: "O my child,
What a woe wrings my breast!
While thou art sunk so deep
In infancy's calm sleep;
Ensconced in this joyless ark,
Bronze-fastened, glimmering dark,
Yet, pillowed on thy tangled hair,
Thou slumber'st, nor dost care
For billows past thee bounding
Nor breezes shrilly sounding,
Laid in thy mantle red, sweet face, how fair!
Ah! but if fear
Had aught of fear for thee,
Thou even to me
Wouldst turn thy tender ear.
But now I bid thee rest, my babe; sleep still!
Rest, O thou sea! Rest, rest, unbounded ill!
Zeus, Father, some relief, some change from Thee!
Am I too bold? [illegible], pardon me!

FRIENDSHIP AND FLATTERY.

I.

When Friendship first came down to earth,
With heart of generous mold,
And soul of truth and heavenly worth,
'Twas in the age of gold.
She taught the love that came from God
For all humanity;
Sweet Pity in her footsteps trod,
With Faith and Charity.

II.

But Flattery, as the world grew old,
Stole Friendship's honest face;
When Truth's stern accents grew less bold,
And Falsehood taught grimace.
Th' indignant martyr did not wreak
Her vengeance upon men,
Nor soar on refluent wing to seek
Her home in heaven again.

III.

She left her rival to reign o'er
The sunny paths of life,
And loved the dark ones to explore
With sad misfortune rife.
Both to their own their aid extend,
Each in her way a mother;
Success still finds the one a friend,
Adversity the other.

A PICTURE.

Two little souls, a boy and girl,
Wandering on to the foot of the hill;
Bushes of green and blossoms of pearl
Laughed at themselves in the roadside rill.
Crossing the lane, a gorgeous jay,
Bathed in the light of a flattering ray,
Jauntily chatters, "Some day, some day!"

Two sweet souls, a man and a maid,
(Beechen branches twisted above,)
Picking the daisies which sprinkle a glade,
And trying their luck at a game of love;
"This year!" "Next year!" What do they say?
And out of the beeches the curious jay
Peeps and chuckles, "Some day, some day!"

Two old souls, and the end of the day
Follows them home to the foot of the hill;
One late gleam which has wandered astray
Breaks from a copse and dimples the rill.
Autumn leaves are strewing the way,
And hoarse from the larch the hungry jay
Shouts out to the night, "Some day, some day!"

Two poor souls at the dead of the night,
Side by side, lie stiffened and still;
And the winter's moon just softens her light,
As it solemnly rests at the foot of the hill,
Remembering the bees and the buds and the May,
The summer gold and the autumn gray,
And the warm green lane where the beetles play.
In the crisp, cold night the shivering jay
Croaks out of his dream, "Some day, some day!"

SNOWED UP.

"I believe I am the most unlucky fellow in the world," said Bertie Tyrrel half aloud, as he tied his white tie.

"Why so, my dear fellow?" inquired a cheery voice at the door.

Bertie turned, still holding his chef d'œuvre at his throat, and said, "Oh, Charley, is that you? Come in; I shall be ready in five minutes." Having arranged his tie to his satisfaction, he repeated, "Yes; I believe I am the most unlucky fellow in London, at any rate."

"What's the matter?" inquired his friend.

"Well, you see," replied Bertie, "I've just had a letter from my sister saying that Miss Patterson is about to leave Marchmont and proceed to the South of France. (Mother's not well, I believe.) You know I intended to go down this week and put myself out of my pain. Charley, I love that girl, and, Charley, I must marry her!"

"Well!"

"But it is not 'well.' Charles Fletcher, you are a fish, a cold-blooded animal. How can you talk like that when I am really, truly and madly in love?"

"My dear Bertie, I should wait till the lady and party come to London, and then see her and ascertain your chance."

"They do not come to London, I believe; at least, not to stay; so I am completely upset."

"It will all come right, old fellow. Are you ready?"

"Yes; it is time to be off. I do not feel at all inclined to go, though," said Bertie, mournfully.

A dinner-party was given by Mrs. Arteman, in whose husband's office Bertie Tyrrel was, or flattered himself he was, a shining light. Mr. Arteman and Bertie's family had been friendly for years, and the young man was rapidly making his way to a junior partnership. He had the credit of being very trustworthy and quick at business—qualities which he took care to cultivate.

Many people came in the evening, also, and, just before the carriages were announced, Mr. Arteman entered the room and gazed anxiously round. For some minutes he was unable to descry the object of his quest, but at last found him out, and, touching young Tyrrel on the arm as he sat in a corner of the room, beckoned him aside.

Hastily apologizing to his fair companion, Bertie rejoined Mr. Arteman in the empty dining-room.

"Is there anything the matter, sir?" he asked.

"Yes, Bertie, I am afraid there is. Read that."

Mr. Arteman put a telegram into his junior's hands as he spoke.

"This looks serious," said Bertie, as he returned the paper. "What do you intend to do, sir? How can we restore confidence in the Manchester office?"

"By sending you down," replied his chief, quietly.

"But to-morrow will be too late," said Bertie.

"Therefore you must go to-night, my lad."

"To-night—go to Manchester to-night!" exclaimed Tyrrel. "The thing's impossible!"

"Oh! dear, no," replied Mr. Arteman, coolly, "I have had your bag packed already. I took the liberty to send Collins to your lodgings for your morning dress. I have a cab at the door. Here are £10 in gold. Run up stairs and change—take a bit of supper first, though. The Pullman train from St. Pancras starts at midnight."

"And it is now 11," said Bertie, looking at his watch. "What sort of a night is it, Collins?"

"Snows fast, sir," replied the man.

"Snows, does it?" exclaimed Bertie. "Better fill up the flask then, and put a half-dozen cigars in my coat-pocket—and, I say, Collins!"

"Yes, sir."

"Cut me a couple of ham sandwiches while I dress."

In fifteen minutes Bertie had received his last instructions from Mr. Arteman, and was bowling along the Euston road to the Midland station.

That immense terminus looked warm and comfortable in comparison with the wet and chilly night outside. The Pullman train was at the platform, ready to start. There were very few passengers. Bertie took a sleeping-car ticket, and, without loss of time, tucked himself up comfortably in his berth. The train soon started after this, and Bertie Tyrrel was rapidly whirled into the land of dreams.

But his dreams were pleasant dreams, and, if he had not been conscious of the penetrating cold, he would have enjoyed a good night's rest. He shivered and awoke. The lamp was burning dimly. The steady "whirr" of the fast-flying wheels told him that the train was rushing still on through the stormy night. Something fell on the lamp—there it was again. It came in through the lattice over his bed. It was snow!

"Pleasant night!" thought our traveler. "I'll have another nap."

Easier said than done. No efforts of his could induce Somnus to pay him a second visit. The chill feeling he had before experienced compelled him to put on all his wraps. Then he got up, took a sip of brandy, and went out upon the platform of the carriage to smoke.

As the train flew along the track, little snow storms came up from all the wheels in clouds of powdered dust. Bertie was fascinated. Past sleeping towns and villages, past black chimneys rising into the murky sky from white, unsullied roofs; past close-shut windows, 'neath whose sashes the yielding but resistless snow wormed itself like herring-bones, and hung outside in slow-dissolving flakes for King Frost to weld closer; past a huddling heap of humanity, beneath the shelter of the embankment, on which the merciless, though tender, falling winding-sheet was surely wrapped. Past all these, and many more sights, did the Pullman carriage rush and scream, and yet no stopping for the train.

But ten miles farther on the trap was laid. In a deep cutting the northern wind and drifting cloud conspired to do battle with the boasted power of man. Lie closer still, O drift! blow fiercer still, O wind! Ye wait the daring monster who boasts he can outstrip the wind, and rattle wildly o'er the snow-clad fields.

A roar through a tunnel—Bertie had once again turned in—the train emerged; it slackened speed; a long deep whistle. The engine stopped dead short, and pushed up a six-foot mound of snow, melting it for one brief half-minute; the water dashed at its enemy, fire, and hissed its vengeance in its burning ears. The fiery foe collapsed; the mighty monster lay imbedded in the drift, harmless as a fettered giant, but still noisy in its protests.

Clouds of steam anxious to be free from that fatal cutting rushed upwards and disappeared, or, unable to escape, fell in warm teardrops on the virgin snow-white carpet. The engineer let the boiler run empty, and sent his firemen back to the last station for assistance. Man was powerless against the snow.

The soft, the gentle snow!

The passengers awoke, and shivering came one by one out at the end platform of the train, asking questions and not waiting for replies. No need to ask what was the matter a second time. The helpless, lighted train glowed like a long lighthouse beneath the snow-clad embankment. A bank in front, a tunnel behind yawning darkly like an immense hole cut in white paper, a biting wind and driving snow told the tale all too clearly.

Snowed up! Not a doubt of it. When could assistance arrive? Were there any ladies in the train? No ladies; only twenty-two travelers, and all men.

But Bertie was due at his Manchester office at 9 o'clock that morning. It was now about a quarter to 4. He must get on, and he expressed his determination aloud to his fellow passengers.

"I will accompany you. Where are we, guard?"

"Atween Ambergate and Matlock—but don't know where though, gentlemen, exactly. Ask Ben."

"Ben," the engine driver, informed them that they were about an hour and a quarter's run from Manchester, and added a word of caution. But Bertie was determined to push on, and, accompanied by two other passengers, he started on his venturous expedition.

Once out of the cutting they trusted to be free. Surely the stoppage of the line would be telegraphed by this time and, perhaps, a train in waiting to take them on. So they stepped manfully out, sinking deeply at every step, but still making progress.

The snow had ceased; the sky was clearing fast, and frosty-looking stars peeped out to view the desolation. The wind was bitterly cold. Every now and then the snow would be dashed in their faces, as by handfuls caught up by spirit fingers to obstruct their progress.

For awhile they kept side by side. Struggling against the blast they pressed on till, unknowingly, they mounted the side of the cutting and wandered far away across a level field, and over the distant hedge, covered up with newly-fallen snow.

The sudden ease with which they stepped now had the opposite effect to what might reasonably have been expected. They knew they had strayed. Where was the railroad? They must regain it at any risk. But the two older travelers determined to remain where they were sheltered comparatively behind the hedge, in only a foot of snow, till daybreak. Bertie rashly made up his mind to return in his tracks, which were plainly discernible, and, against the advice of his comrades, he acted upon this resolution.

His one idea was to reach Manchester. If he did not succeed in averting the impending crash there, all his prospects would be ruined. His hopes of ever winning his lady love would be completely shattered, and what was life without love? He must succeed, though he perished in the attempt; he would do his duty, whatever happened.

So he manfully struggled on—at times up to his knees in snow; once completely buried in the drift; he fell down, down, until nothing but a small star was visible overhead! The snow kept closing in. He breathed hard upward toward the hole. (His hands were fastened to his sides by pressure of the drift.) By breathing hard at the tiny hole it became larger and larger. The snow melted, and he got a hand free. At length he got his head out, and after a severe struggle he fell forward, half insensible from cold and nervous exhaustion. He rolled over the harder snow for a space; down, down—it seemed as if he would never stop—a hard substance received him—a crash of glass, or ice, a moment afterward fell upon his half-unconscious ears, and he lay insensible on the ground. A light was burning steadily over his head.

The spirit remained in the body, but the clay tenement refused to acknowledge the presence of the master. Sense lay wrapped within the brain and behind the sullenly closed lids. Speech was there, but somehow it could not force its way through the stubborn lips. The ears were open to catch the slightest sound, and eagerly they drank it in; but the shaken nerves refused to listen, or at best only grudgingly as yet.

And thus Bertie lay in a trance—dead, and yet alive; ready to speak, dying to utter his thought, and yet dying because his speech was locked; the pressure on the brain was not yet unloosed, and Bertie lay there almost as he fell, it seemed to him.

But yet things were curiously mixed up around him. He could move his hands, and could feel he was lying upon soft cushions. Dull to his ears arose the sound of those horrible whirring carriage wheels. It seemed to him as if he were back again in the railway carriage, en route to Manchester.

Still people were about him. Feminine fingers ministered to him—that gentle touch just now was very different from the other finger-tips of some good Samaritan, probably a doctor.

The subtle odor of a lady's presence clung sweetly around Bertie as he lay sensible to what passed, but unable to form a word, or look his thanks, or even recognize the gentle care.

Once he essayed to open his eyes, and, oh! how the vision of that one fair face he loved hung over his half-conscious brows, and was for a second photographed upon his brain! No—it was gone—a moment more and the dull whirr of the revolving wheels, the even motion of the Pullman car, all seemed to hold him in thrall as he lay supine on the soft cushions.

But this could not last. By slow degrees the brain resumed its sway. He opened his eyes. Things were very dim to him, and the cold, chill hand of Death apparently was on him. He could not move his head, but as he gazed with dull, half-open eyes, the vision of his love rose up to bid him welcome. Oh, lovely! it came nearer and nearer—it would touch him! yes, it bent down, and, breathing a soft petition for his recovery, then vanished.

Whirr—whirr—whirr!

Did he dream still? No; voices distinctly fell upon his ears. Where was he? A shrill whistle broke the monotonous sound; the undulating movement of the car he had felt, or fancied, seemed to cease.

"Hush!" some one spoke. Bertie opened his eyes. He was dreaming still. * * * He lay upon a cushioned berth in a Pullman palace car. The lamp burned very dimly overhead. Daylight penetrated the curtains around him. He felt very weak and very cold, but he was not dreaming. How had he got there?—what had happened?—where was the snow?

He called out. A gentleman entered softly. "Where am I?" inquired Bertie, faintly.

"Hush, hush! quite safe; do not agitate yourself," replied the doctor, as Bertie fancied the new-comer to be. "We have got you round nicely."

"But where am I?" persisted Bertie.

"You are at Ambergate Junction."

"I must go to Manchester at once. Help me up, please."

"My dear sir, it is quite impossible to move you. You have had a very severe fall, and must be kept quite quiet. We have telegraphed particulars to Mr. Arteman. You cannot be moved."

This was decisive, and the doctor left the berth. Yet, as soon as his back was turned, Bertie made an effort to rise. With difficulty he repressed a scream, the pain was acute. He at once perceived that movement, even in bed, was out of the question at present, so wisely he determined to await events. His thoughts naturally dwelt upon the happy vision he had seen, and he foolishly accepted this as an omen favorable to his ultimate happiness. At length he fell asleep.

He awoke very hungry and saw the doctor at his side. He put out his hand, which Bertie took and clasped warmly in his own. The kind doctor made a careful examination of his patient and then said:

"You are much better this evening, I am glad to tell you, and as soon as the stiffness wears off you will be all right again. I may tell you now that we have had a telegram from Mr. Arteman. He is at Manchester, so your natural anxiety may be allayed."

"Oh! thank you, thank you," exclaimed Bertie with fervor. "You have indeed put my mind at ease."

"I was enabled to tell him there was no danger, so he went on this afternoon. He saw you while you were asleep." Bertie stared, as well he might. "Yes," continued the doctor, "you have slept for thirteen hours."

"Indeed!" was the patient's only reply. "But I say," he added, "how did I get here? I remember being in the snow, and I think I fell—"

"I should think you did," replied the doctor. "You came plump into this car—rolling in snow."

"I am afraid I am still confused, doctor, for I do not understand you now."

"You rolled down the embankment into the windows. We were snowed up in the great cutting on the up-line. Another train, yours probably, was at the other end. You in your excursion tumbled into our windows. It was very fortunate for you that you didn't roll over the parapet into the river, my lad."

"And very lucky," said Bertie, graciously, "that you happened to be in the train, doctor."

"You have not to thank me so much as Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, sir; and they telegraphed to Mr. Arteman."

"Mr. and Mrs. who?" exclaimed Bertie, sitting up quite regardless of his bruises. "Patterson, did you say?"

"Yes; do you know them? They did not appear to recognize you."

"Yes—no—I know a Miss Patterson—I——"

"Whew!" was all the doctor's answer.

"What! Is there a Miss Patterson? Is she here? Is she—was she in the train? Alice is her name."

"That is the lady; she nursed you until I came. Her mother is an invalid rather. They were caught in the drift last night like yourself."

"Where is she, doctor? Did she leave a message?"

The doctor's eyes twinkled. "Well, not exactly, but she gave me special directions to let her papa know how you were. This is the address."

He took an envelope from his pocket-book and handed it to Bertie, who read, "Harvey Patterson, Esq., at —— Hotel, London, till Friday afternoon."

"What's to-day?" inquired Bertie, hastily.

"This is Thursday. It is 7 o'clock p. m."

"Doctor," exclaimed Bertie, as he recalled the vision of the day before, while he lay half insensible, "I shall go to London to-morrow."

The doctor smiled. "What, and leave Manchester business! But, seriously, I think you scarcely fit to travel. Well, well; we shall see," he continued, as Bertie moved his head impatiently. "We shall see. Keep quiet now, and I dare say you will be well enough to go to London. Good night!"

"Good-night." And then Bertie resigned himself to blissful thoughts and happy anticipations for the morrow.

Two o'clock was striking at Westminster when Mr. Bertie Tyrrel's card was taken into a private sitting-room at the —— Hotel. There was only one occupant of the spacious room—a young lady whose good, sensible, and bright face lighted up with a softer expression as she read the name of her visitor.

"Show him in, please," she said calmly, yet the palpitation beneath the well-fitting traveling-dress to a woman's eye would have betrayed a secret.

The waiter ushered Bertie in and quickly retired. The young man waited till the door was closed, and as Miss Patterson stood up with outstretched hand, he clasped it warmly. No word of greeting did he speak. He only gazed for one moment into those eyes of liquid blue—the eyes grew tender, and then the shading lashes trembled, but only for a second. But Bertie could read.

Without a word he clasped Miss Patterson in his arms. "My darling!" was all he said.

She struggled to free herself, strongly at first; but, as he whispered something in the crimson, shell-like ear close to his trembling lips, the pretty head sank upon his shoulder, and the silence that gives such sweet consent told all the rest.

When Mr. Patterson came half an hour afterward, he found a prospective son-in-law seated on the sofa holding his daughter's hand.

Explanation ensued; the upshot of it being that Bertie's health required a change to the South of France. He was married in the ensuing summer; and he always considers that he owes his present happiness to having been snowed up.

A schoolboy being requested to write a composition upon the subject of pins produced the following: "Pins are very useful. They have saved the lives of a great many men, women, and children—in fact, whole families." "How so!" asked the puzzled teacher. The boy replied: "Why, by not swallowing them."

The Gold and Silver Mines in the Andes.

There is but little silver coin in Peru at present, although much plate, comprising common bedroom utensils, is still owned by families in the interior and in the large towns. During the past ten years $36,000,000 worth of silver has passed through the Lima mint for coinage or assay, the amount coined being $17,000,000. Gold coin pays 3 per cent. export duty. The exportation of national silver coin is prohibited, but silver bars may be exported on payment of 8 per cent., and coin is accordingly melted into bars to evade the prohibition. There is but a slight production of gold, but silver is largely produced and exported either as metal or ores. Coinage is unlimited and gratis, the mint receiving bullion and returning its value in coin. Silver is found in all the western range of the Andes from latitude 8 degrees to 22 degrees south. The district of Cerro del Pasco produced between 1630 and 1849 $475,000,000. A tunnel on the plan of the famous Sutro tunnel is projected at Cerro del Pasco, 150 feet below the present workings, and is calculated to open up 100,000 square yards of surface and $500,000,000 worth of fresh ore. This is but one of the many mining districts, as others of equal value with better railroad facilities exist in the province of Puno. Before the modern system of railways the difficulties to be encountered in the way of smelting silver were incredible, the ores being transported great distances on mules' backs over rugged mountain paths, where often animals with their loads were lost through a misstep, yet, notwithstanding this, immense quantities were smelted at the Government works.—Scientific American.

Why Popes Change Their Names.

It is a fact generally known, says the Boston Journal, that monks and nuns on assuming their vows, and on ascending the Pontifical throne, usually change their names. The reason of this change, in the case of the Popes, is a superstitious belief that unless this is done the new Pontiff will not live long. The custom has prevailed since it was inaugurated in 956 by Octavian Conti, who assumed the name and title of John XII. Julius Medici would have made a breach had he been permitted, but his friends prevailed upon him to take the name of Clement, he being the seventh Pope to bear that name. Thirty-two years later, in 1075, Marcellus Servius was elected, and insisted upon retaining his own name. As Marcellus II., therefore, he ascended the throne on the 9th of April. He was a young man and in robust health, and yet he lived but twenty-one days after his elevation. Since that time no Pope has ventured to offend against the tradition. It is a little singular that while the name of John has been a favorite one, no less than twenty-one Popes having chosen it, none have chosen it since the death of John XXII., in 1416. The first Pope bearing the name of Pius was chosen 142, and the name did not reappear after his death till 1458.

A Skunk-Tamer.

A few days ago a young feline of the pole-cat species took possession of a small cellar adjoining Joseph Griggs' cabin, near the Troy Mine, North Virginia District. Griggs speculated for some time in what way he could get rid of the varmint without having his winter's supply of ham, bacon and potatoes permeated with the pungent aroma peculiar to the animal. Accordingly he determined to make friends with the intruder, and, by way of conciliation, he passed up to the skunk, who was perched on one of the upper shelves, a savory morsel of raw meat, which was eagerly devoured. After feeding the animal in this manner for two or three days, he became so tame that he would eat out of his hand without fear. Recently Griggs carried a board into the cellar, with which he made a bridge from the shelf to his shoulder. Mr. Skunk, tempted by a choice morsel of boiled beef, walked on to the board, eating all the while out of his entertainer's hand. Griggs backed slowly out of the cellar, carrying along with him the board with its precious burden, and drew a long breath of relief as he landed the skunk safely on the ground outside the cabin. His young dog, coming along just at that moment, proceeded to interview the little animal, and, when last seen, was making for the foot-hills, and plowing up the snow with his nose.—*Virginia (Nev.) The Department of Agriculture at Washington recently dispatched a sack of a new variety of wheat, which it requested might be distributed among farmers for trial. It was found to consist of wild buckwheat, mustard, black oats, white oats, rye, pigeon grass, barley, cockle, wild peas, and Indian wheat; and now the recipient wants to know who will give the sample a trial.

RUBBER BALLS.

The Curious Process of Making These Playthings.

The process of making the hollow rubber balls used by children as playthings is quite curious, and may be interesting to those not familiar with it. A Holyoke writer thus describes it:

"The upper room of the building is prepared to push this branch of the business for a few months, and it will probably turn out some 50,000 dozen of these balls between January and June. These balls have a solid surface, are made by a different process from that of making the soft rubber balls which are perforated by an opening, and, of course, are much more firm, durable and elastic. The sheets of rubber prepared for the balls are cut into strips of double convex shape. The edges of the strips are moistened with a preparation of rubber and naphtha, by which they are joined firmly together, three of the strips being used for one ball.

"This part of the work is done by girls, and a skillful girl can earn about $1.50 per day. When the strips are joined together, the ball is very near the shape of a Brazil nut. Before the last opening is closed a small quantity of carbonate of ammonia is put inside, which, when subjected to strong heat, will make the rubber expand and fill out the ball mold. The opening is then closed with the adhesive mixture, and it is placed in an iron mold of the size and shape of the ball desired. The molds are packed into frames, in which they are subjected to the heat of the vulcanizer.

"They are kept in place in the frame by iron rods along the side, and when the frame is full iron plates at the end are screwed down tightly upon the molds to hold them in place. These iron plates are about three-fourths of an inch thick, and so strong is the expansive force of the rubber in the molds that they have bent this thick iron into a curve. If one of the molds should work out of place while vulcanization is in process, the molds will fly out with a noise like the report of a dozen pistols, and the work is spoiled. The action of the heat does the rest. When the molds are opened they contain the perfect round balls, with no mark of the places where the pieces were placed. The slight ridge made by the mold is ground off by a stone used for the purpose, and the ball is done. This is but one process of rubber work. Besides the hollow balls are made solid balls of rubber, etc."

The Speaker of the House of Commons, the Rt. Hon. H. B. W. Brand, M. P., receives $25,000 a year; the Deputy Speaker and Permanent Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Henry Cecil Raikes, M. P., $12,500; the Clerk, Sir T. Erskine May, K. C. B., $10,000; his Clerk Assistant, $7,500; the Second Assistant, $5,000; the Principal Clerk of the Public-Bill Office, $5,000; the Principal Clerks of the Committees, $5,000. seven senior clerks, from $3,500 to $4,000 each; thirteen assistant clerks, from $3,000 to $1,500 each: the Sergeant-at-Arms, $6,000, and two Deputies, one at $4,000, and the other $2,500; Counsel to the Speaker, $9 000; Librarian, $5,000, and his Assistant, $2,800; the Referees of Private Bills, each $5,000. There are also many others, including a Chaplain of $2,000, Secretary to the Speaker, a short-hand writer, doorkeepers ad libitum, and servants on excellent salaries.—Col. Forney's London Letter in the Philadelphia Press.

The Nerves and Brain.

Dr. Brown-Sequard, the eminent neurologist, in the course of a lecture delivered in Chicago the other day, denied the common theory that one part of the brain ruled the movements of the other part of the body, and vice versa of the other part of the brain. A series of facts, many of them collected by himself, he asserted, corrected this view. He proceeded to adduce some of these, with considerable freedom from technical language, and concluded that there exists no such thing as clusters of motor muscles in the brain, but, on the contrary, that the cells that are employed in moving the different limbs are scattered all over the brain. The mechanism for voluntary action was entirely different from what it was generally imagined to be. The germ of the future therapeutics of brain disease lay in the fact that paralysis does not consist in the destruction of its parts, but depends on the influence exerted by disease upon parts at a distance. The supposed motor centers could be destroyed without any paralysis at all. On the other hand, paralysis might occur in arm or leg when it was the most anterior or posterior part of the brain—the part furthest removed from the supposed center of motion—that had degenerated. Paralysis was quite independent of the destruction of tissue. It might result from the puncture of the smallest needle.

Death of a Noted Character.

A late letter from London says: "Capt. Schenley died a few days ago. He was, with the exception of Trelawney, who is still living, the last survivor of the party of friends, including Lord Byron and Leigh Hunt, who burned the body of Shelley on a funeral pile after the ancient fashion, and he was present when the poet's ashes were deposited in the Protestant burial-ground at Rome, near the grave of poor Keats." Capt. Schenley was at Waterloo, and nearly forty years ago caused great excitement in this vicinity by his elopement with Miss Croghan, a noted heiress, of Pittsburgh, Pa., then at school on Staten island. He leaves an estate valued at from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000, and a large family of daughters.

BOBBY.

"Do you know why they've put us in that back room,
Up in the attic, close against the sky,
And made believe our nursery's a cloak-room?
Do you know why?"

JOHNNY.

"No more I don't, nor why that Sammy's mother
What ma thinks horrid, 'cause he bunged my eye,
Eats an ice cream, down there like any other—
No more don't I!"

BOBBY.

"Do you know why Nurse says it isn't manners
For you and me to ask folks twice for pie,
And no one hits that man with two bananas?
Do you know why?"

JOHNNY.

"No more I don't, nor why that girl, whose dress is Off of her shoulders, don't catch cold and die,
When you and me gets croup when we undresses!
No more don't I!"

BOBBY.

"Perhaps she ain't as good as you and I is,
And God don't want her up there in the sky,
And let's her live—to come in just when pie is—
Perhaps that's why!"

JOHNNY.

"Do you know why that man that's got a cropped head
Rubbed it just now as if he felt a fly?
Could it be, Bobby, something that I drop-ded?
And is that why?"

BOBBY.

"Good boys behaves, and so they don't get scold Nor drop hot milk on folks as they pass by."

JOHNNY (piously).

"Marbles would bounce on Mr. Jones' bald head—
But I shan't try!"

BOBBY.

"Do you know why Aunt Jane is always snarling
At you and me because we tells a lie,
And she don't slap that man that called her darling?
Do you know why?"

JOHNNY.

"No more I don't, nor why that man with mamma
Just kissed her hand."

BOBBY.

"She hurt it—and that's why.
He made it well, the very way that mamma
Does do to I."

JOHNNY.

"I feel so sleepy. * * * Was that papa kissed us?
What made him sigh, and look up to the sky?"

BOBBY.

"We wer'nt down stairs, and he and God had missed us,
And that was why!"

CRUMBS FROM THE BREAKFAST TABLE.

One of the hardest things for a woman to do is to maintain economical notions while looking into a milliner's window.

A Hard Man to Kill.

Ex-Gov. Clarke, of Mississippi, who has just died at the age of 68, has had a remarkable career. In the Mexican war he served as a volunteer. In the rebellion he led a Confederate brigade at Shiloh. As he parted with Col. McArdle, a veteran Mississippi journalist, he said, "I think you will have a good chance of publishing that obituary which you promised me thirteen years ago. I have outlived all the doctors, but I am not so confident that I shall escape the Yankee balls and shells which I shall be compelled to face to-day." After the first day's battle Gen. Clarke was borne to the rear, wrapped in a blanket saturated with blood. "You can publish that obituary now; he has met with a soldier's death," was the remark of one of those who bore him, and the obituary was shortly afterward published in the New Orleans papers. Soon after the battle of Baton Rouge, however, Gen. Clarke was seen again at New Orleans. He had been shot through the body at Shiloh and left on the field to be taken prisoner, to recover, and to be exchanged, and at Baton Rouge a minie-ball broke his thigh near the socket. Dr. Stone was the surgeon who now brought around the man he had condemned to a speedy death in 1848; and though his leg was shortened several inches, Gen. Clarke lived to be Governor of Mississippi, and to die fifteen years later quietly in his bed, having buried several generations of doctors, gone through two wars with only one lung, been twice left for dead on the field of battle, and seen his obituary published.

The Man and the Vine.

In one of the early years after the creation of the world, man began to plant a vine, and Satan saw it and drew near. "What plantest thou, son of the earth?" said the prince of demons.

"A vine," replied the man.

"What are the properties of this tree?"

"Oh, its fruits are pleasant to look at, and delicious to taste. From it is produced a precious liquid which fills the heart with joy."

"Well, since wine makes glad the heart of man, I will help to plant this tree."

So saying, the demon brought a lamb and slew it, then a lion, then an ape, and last of all a pig, killing each in succession, and moistening the roots of the vine with their blood.

Thence it has happened, ever since, that, when a man drinks a small portion of wine, he becomes gentle and caressing as a lamb; after a little more, strong and bold as a lion; when he drinks still more, he resembles an ape in his folly and absurd and mischievous actions, but when he has swallowed the liquid to excess, he is like a pig wallowing in the mire.

Do Hens Reason?

A hen made a nest in a box in the baggage car, and in the course of time had fifteen eggs, and stuck to them through thick and thin, night and day, except to step off the train occasionally to get food and water, and hatched thirteen chickens, notwithstanding the rumbling, rolling process the eggs passed through. The baggage-master says that, after the setting process began, she would frequently, when off the nest in search of food and water, get left by the train at Shelbyville and sometimes at Wartrace, and on such occasions she would quietly wait for the train to return and fly into the baggage car and get on the nest immediately. When the train stopped for wood she would sometimes fly out to get something to eat, and when the bell rang she would fly back immediately. She would sometimes manifest her joy at the appearance of the train by cackling at a high rate. Mother and chickens are all doing well.

Ages of Actresses.

It may not be within the rules of propriety to inquire into the age of any lady, but, ladies on the stage being more or less favorites of the public, it is always a matter of interest to know something of them. Inquiry as to the age of an actress is of frequent occurrence. The ages of several of our most prominent ladies in the theatrical profession are given below:

An Ancient City Unearthed.

About 140 miles northwest of Brindisi, in the neighborhood of Manfredonia, on the Adriatic coast of Italy, the ancient city of Sipuntum has been discovered. It was not buried under showers of volcanic ashes, but it gradually sunk into the earth through some subterranean disturbance. Its preservation is remarkable. Some of the buildings are now about twenty feet below the level of the surrounding country, and part of the present town of Manfredonia is built over a part of Sipuntum. Exploration has already brought to light a temple of Diana, and a colonnade sixty-five feet long and an underground necropolis. Many minor objects of interest have been deposited in the National Museum at Naples. Systematic research is in progress under the new rules of the Italian Government relating to archæological discoveries.

A Four-Handed Duel in Texas.

A terribly fatal shooting affray and four-handed duel recently occurred at Bryan, Middle Texas. Four men met in the street armed with six-shooters and guns. Their names were Hodges, Rush, Irwin and another party. The cause of the difficulty is supposed to have been an old feud. All four began shooting simultaneously, and persons near the scene fled. Spectators say it looked like a small skirmish. Two men were left on the field, one mortally wounded, the other dead. Fifteen shots were fired. Rush was struck in the hip by a pistol-ball, and fell early in the action dangerously wounded. A man named Morrison, a citizen who drove up in a buggy at the commencement of the row, and who was merely a spectator, was shot and, it is supposed, was mortally wounded. Irwin was killed. The affair created intense excitement in and around Bryan.

Hog-Killing in Chicago.

The enormous number of 2,470,000 hogs were cut up in Chicago during the four months ending Feb. 28, which embrace what is usually called the packing season. This exceeds by about 500,000 head the total number cut in Cincinnati, St. Louis, Louisville, Indianapolis, and Milwaukee. Our aggregate for the past twelve months is 3,940,000, against 2,933,486 for the twelve months preceding.—Chicago Tribune.

Abandoned at Sea.

At all times ships of one kind or another are floating about at sea, abandoned by officers and crew, in what seems a hopeless condition. Some are dismantled and mere hulks, some are swimming keel upward, some are water-logged, but being laden with timber will not sink, but are driven hither and thither as the wind and waves may direct. So people afflicted with catarrh, bronchitis and consumption are abandoned by physicians and friends as incurable, yet thousands of such are annually restored to perfect health by the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The Catarrh Remedy is unequaled as a soothing and healing local application, while the Discovery purifies and enriches the blood and imparts tone and vigor to the whole system.

VIDOLIA, La., April 17, 1877.

DR. PIERCE:

Dear Sir—I suffered for twelve years with that most offensive and loathsome of all diseases—catarrh. My taste and smell were completely destroyed. I procured a supply of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and your Golden Medical Discovery, which I used according to directions, and a complete and permanent cure was speedily effected. I take pleasure in recommending them to all afflicted.

Ever thankfully yours

CLARA E. HUNT.

WADING RIVER, Burlington Co., N. J., Feb. 28, 1877.

DR. PIERCE:

Dear Sir—Your Golden Medical Discovery is the best medicine for coughs, colds and consumption I ever knew. It has saved my life.

Respectfully yours,

HELEN B. McANNEY.

Renovation, not Prostration.

Did any enfeebled human being ever become strong under the operation of powerful cathartics or salivants? It is sometimes necessary to regulate the bowels, but that cannot be done by active purgation, which exhausts the vital forces and serves no good purpose whatever. The only true way to promote health and vigor, which are essential to regularity of the organic functions, is to invigorate, discipline and purify the system at the same time. The extraordinary efficacy of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters in cases of debility or irregularity of the organs of digestion, assimilation, secretion and discharge, is universally admitted. Appetite, good digestion, a regular habit of body, active circulation of the blood and purity of all the animal fluids are induced by this superb tonic and corrective. It has no equals, moreover, as a preventive of chills and fever, and other types of malarial disease. To emigrants and travelers it is particularly serviceable as a medicinal safeguard.

Practical Generosity.

Dr. I. S. Johnson & Co., of Bangor, Maine, will send by mail, postage paid, a one-quarter (¼) pound sample-package of Sheridan's horse and cattle powders, on receipt of twenty (20) cents. These powders are worth their weight in gold to make hens lay, and will prevent all manner of diseases common to hens, hogs and horses, including hog-cholera.

The Extended Popularity

Of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER is the best evidence of its worth. Whenever you want a light, white, sweet biscuit, delicious pot-pie, elegant cake, or a choice pudding, DOOLEY'S BAKING POWDER should be used. Perfect purity and absolute full weight are the watchwords of the manufacturers.

A Startling Fact.

Thousands of children have died of diphtheria this winter who might have been saved by a single bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, which costs 35 cents. It is a sure preventive of diphtheria, and will cure nine out of ten. No family should be without it a day.

DR. GRAVES' HEART REGULATOR has sold largely and been universally recommended by druggists as a cure for Heart Disease, and has given satisfaction, as can be seen by reference to a letter received from F. W. Kinsman, druggist, Augusta, Maine.

"Having sold at retail more than a gross of your HEART REGULATOR, I take pleasure in saying that it has given great satisfaction in every case I have heard from. Almost every day I receive testimonials similar to the one inclosed. F. W. KINSMAN."

Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a pamphlet containing a list of testimonials of cures, etc.

The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

MORE TESTIMONY IN FAVOR OF White Russian Spring Wheat

WISNER, CUMMING CO., NEB., Nov. 4, 1877.

W. C. STITT—Dear Sir: I sowed two bushels of the Russian Wheat last spring on one acre of land, and harvested 40 bushels of No. 1 wheat. Our other wheat yielded about 25 bushels per acre; variety, "Lost Nation."

Yours truly, F. G. WADSWORTH.

From Miller & Hough, Grain Dealers, Newton, Iowa—Dear Sir: The party for whom we ordered one-half bushel of the Russian Wheat last spring raised 16 bushels from it, and we think the satisfaction it has given will create a demand for the seed here in the spring.

From Wm. Noble, La Verne, Minn.—The White Russian Wheat I received of you last spring fully met my most sanguine expectations. I raised 30 bushels from the one bushel of seed, while my Fife wheat, in the same soil, produced only 22½ bushels per acre. One of my neighbors who raised some of the Russian Wheat refused $3 per bushel for his crop.

Among the papers which recommend the Russian Wheat may be mentioned the Western Rural, of Chicago, and the American Agriculturist, of New York; the latter, which is the most discriminating paper published, excludes everything of a doubtful nature from its columns, and the fact that our advertisement appears in their paper is a sufficient guarantee to farmers that our wheat is an improvement of genuine merit. —Garfield, Kelly and Foster have een telling tales on each other in the ouse, and the result is a rich expose f the way they run their campaigns.

—Gold down to 101, only 1 per cent. remium, and the silver bill a law. ow let us have greenbacks, all we can ee, and as long as their monetary value emains as now, there will be less bankuptcy, and business will revive again.

—A circular from New York asks us whether we are in favor of the Independence of Ireland, or not. We answer most emphatically we are. We have a warm sympathy for the down trodden millions of the Green Isle, and hope to see the day when she will stand forth free and Independent.

LaOtto Items.

—The roads are slowly improving.

—The prospect for an immense wheat harvest is good.

—Dr. Bowker is erecting a stable on his lot on Main-st.

—LaOtto boasts the largest and handsomest Stove Room in Northern Indiana.

—H. C. Kinsie is keeping bachlor's hall, while his wife is visiting near the parental roof "way down in Ohio still."

—The "boss" barker of this burg has left us, "gone like a woodbine" with the Sheriff in hot pursuit. Signing the wrong name to just a little piece of paper, only that and nothing more.

—Bill Zeras is of so little importance that he could go to the devil and not be missed—only at meal time. Alas, such is unrecognized talent.

—The dance at Young's Hall the 15th is now the reason why so many young "fellahs," have so much business out in the country you know, ah.

—"Swampie," alias George Marsh, will take up his abode with Dave Smith west of Huntertown, this summer, and by the sweat of his brow earn his daily "hash." He'll be missed.

—The Republican caucus of Swan Center got away with LaOtto. Let the greenback element now arise "and shake off their guilty fear" and come to the help of the Lord. Friends, let the rotten party lie in its filth, wash your hands and go with honest hearts and vote for honest principles. Ye gods, are ye slaves that ye dare not do that which is right in the eyes of Justice and humanity? Arise, be men once again and God, with the blessings of suffering millions, will reward you for it.

Junction Items.

—Frogs are plentiful at the Junction.

—Three more nights of singing school

—We had a pleasant call from Dick.

—John Tilford visited his friends at Jackson, Mich., on Saturday.

—Another victim to the cattle guards and Plumsted was his name.

—The school meeting at this place Saturday evening was very amusing.

—There is talk of a revival at the Junction. Surely there is need of one.

—The young man loaded with Jersey lightning, Tuesday evening, would do well to remain at home or entertain the parties where he got his "rot-gut."

—Parties from New York State visited the Junction Saturday looking for a location to erect a large cooper shop. We fear they meet with little encour; ment.

—On Saturday last Fonus visited Albion, looking after the welfare of his firey steed. Bring him to Auburn Junction old boy, and stop throwing kisses.

—Did the young ladies who attended the dance at Garrett on Tuesday evening have a pleasant walk? Three miles on a dark night is nothing, providing the company is good, but it looks bad.

—The B. & O. operator at this place deserves credit for the condition in which he has his instruments, etc.—Would it not be well for the south side of the office to follow suit.

—School closed in district No. 6 Friday afternoon. Joe. Walters has been acting as teacher for the past four months, and has given entire satisfaction. Joe is considered a good teacher, and a more jovial and kind hearted man is hard to be found.

—The yard engine from Garrett is now carrying a coach to and from Auburn and Garrett, for the accommodation of those wishing to visit either point, leaving Garrett at 8 o'clock a. m and the Junction, returning, 9 o'clock a. m. The agent at this place has been supplied with round trip tickets, and has also been supplied with a large number of second-class tickets for all principle towns in the west.

PERKINS.

—Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup has eminently proved to be a safe, reliable and cheap remedy for Coughs, colds, &c. Try it. Price only 25 cents a bottle. For sale in every drug store.

Garrett Items.

—We have a new harness shop, just opened, on Randolph street, by D. Moody. We wish him good success. Give him a call.

—The railroad company has opened Randolph street, at the crossing, the full width and put in a good sewer of large tile which will greatly facilitate the crossing at that point.

—Mr. H. S. Morse has greatly added to the appearance of his property, by planting a variety of fruit and shade trees in and about his lots. It would be well for others to do likewise.

—W. J. Frederick has moved his building, which was formerly occupied by the post office. It now fronts on Keyser street which is an improvement. It is to be occupied as a dwelling.

—O. C. Clark is making some alterations on his building on corner King and Randolph streets, which is soon to be stocked with hardware, by Messrs. Hall & Hull, of Napoleon, Ohio.

—E. N. Woodford, whose house was destroyed by fire two weeks ago last Saturday night, has not received any satisfactory information from the Insurance company. He was insured in the Continental, of New York.

—John Robbins, who was accidentally shot, last week, by Wm. Moses, a young man of about 19, is recovering remarkably fast. He is able to be around again with the assistance of crutches. A certain arrogant, clerical divine called on John one day last week while he was confined to his bed from the effects of the wound, and a few remarks were made on the careless handling of firearms, whereupon the self-assumed teacher of morality drew from his meek and humble breast a good sized man-killer and flourished it around with as much grace as a "Modoc," demonstrating to the wounded man how careless some people handled revolvers, and then exhibited how they should be handled. The poor wounded man lay in bed trembling with fear of receiving another piece of lead, not knowing but his guest was in search of a subject for a funeral sermon. People who carry concealed deadly weapons are violating our state and civil laws, and those who violate the civil law are also transgressors of the laws of God. Revolvers are generally carried by law breakers, fugitives from justice and murderers, whose breasts are pregnated with malice, hatred and revenge toward their fellow beings. But when a man comes into a peaceful town, representing himself as a disciple of Christ, exhorting and praying on the house-top, with a concealed instrument in his bosom, which is intended to take the life of his brother, can we not set him down as a "wolf in sheeps clothing." Such men should be arrested and arraigned at the bar of justice to answer the charge of violating the peace and dignity of our commonwealth, (the same as any other ruffian.

Spencerville Items.

—Frank is progressing finely with his first reader.

—The Murray Bros. have added a large corn sheller to their mill.

—"Man is made to mourn," as George said, when his girl said he could go.

—Mr. James Johnson, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, is visiting his parents at this place.

—For too great familiarity with John Garmans face, H. Emanuel contributed, by request of 'Squire Fales, $2,75 to the school fund.

—MARRIED—On Thursday, March 7, by Rev. E. W. Erick, Mr. William Bishop to Miss Ada Shaffer, both of Spencerville.

—Mr. Levi Shutt and family will leave this place in a few days for Michigan, where he intends making his future home. We can recommend Mr. Shutt to his new friends as a good citizen and one whom we shall miss from our midst.

—MARRIED—On Sunday, March 10th, by Rev. F. Lancaster, Mr. George Hull to Miss S. Monroe. Geo. has had several unsuccessful attempts to secure his prize, but at last succeeded in securing a sufficient amount of stamps.

—A hidden grave often deters men from acts of vengence, while it serves to ventilate the character of others. The safest plan for young men is to maintain good characters and to shun the haunts of vice and immorality.—Then neither shame or prosecution will overtake them.

—In entering upon the duties of a reporter of news from Spencerville, we desire to say to the patrons of the COURIER in Concord, that we expect to faithfully report such items as shall appear of general interest and to restrain from any attacks of a personal character, at least such as shall reflect detrimentially upon any individual; yet if we can by fair means, turn events to a good advantage, we will try to get the laugh when it will cause the greatest amount of merriment.

PATSEY.

—When your baby is restless while teething, get Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup, a dose of it will relieve the little sufferer at once. Only 25 cents a bottle at Davenport's.

—It is always very annoying to a congregation to have a person hacking and coughing during services. One dose of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup relieves the worse cases. Sold in every drug store.

St. Joe Items.

—A. Strong, of Vewago, Mich., is visiting friends near town.

—E. Hursh, living near Hursh Mills, died very suddenly Friday last, of lung fever.

—Take it cool, Cecil, Jim. says it's all true and he won't take it back.

—We learn that the money collected at Spencerville has been refunded. Not very funny, is it John?

—Frank Cedar was in town Saturday and Sunday evenings. Nan says its wonderful how Frank can glide out the front door without being heard.

—Real estate seems to be on the rise in this vicinity. W. Tustison offering 2½ acres of his farm for $400.00. Too high.

—Auburn whisky has a bad effect judging from the appearance of a good many court going people.

—Frank, having sold his walnut logs, feels good and would feel better were it not for that $150, that went for naught.

—Greeback meeting at Coburn's Corners Saturday night. A club was organized with E. Dermott as president.

—Miss Anna Green, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Van Hyde of this place, started for home last Monday. "Brace up," Cedar, we understand Anna contemplates another visit this summer.

—The steam shovel having been removed from the gravel bed at this place, Newville has again become convinced that the B. & O. company will straighten the Railroad so as to take in their little burg. No doubt the road will be changed as soon as that graveled road is done.

—Two of the sporting men of King's Corners, C. H. and J. B., met in mortal combat a few days ago. After a few rounds C. H. concluded J. B. was a little too much for him and squealed. $5 for lawyer fee for Chester, and $6.50 for Jerome or go to jail. After a little persuasion the $6.50 came forth.

A true copy of the original certificate.

J. C. St. CLAIR,
Sheriff of DeKalb County.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the Steuben Circuit Court in a cause wherein Samuel Haverstock is plaintiff and Wm Richmond and Mariah Richmond are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of twelve thousand, nine hundred and twenty-three dollars and forty-four cents [$12,923.44] with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on

SATURDAY, 30th day of MARCH 1878

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House, in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate to-wit:

The north-west quarter of section thirty-three [33], and the north-east quarter of section thirty two [32] except twenty-five [25] acres off the west side of said quarter section, and the south-east fractional quarter of section twenty-nine [29], all in the township number thirty-four [34] north of range fifteen [15]. Also the north half of the south-east quarter of section twenty-four [24], in township thirty-three [33], north of range fourteen (14), east.

I will first expose to sale the north half of the south-east quarter of section twenty-four (24), township thirty-three (33), north of range fourteen [14], east, and in case it does not sell for enough to pay what is now due with interest, costs and accrued costs, then I will expose to sale the east half of the north-west quarter of section thirty-three [33], in township thirty four [34], north of range fifteen [15], east, and in case these two pieces fail to sell for enough to pay what is now due, with interest and all costs, then I will expose to sale the west half of the north-west quarter of said section thirty three [33], and in case these three pieces fail to sell for enough to pay the amount now due, with interest and all costs, I will then expose to sale the balance of the above described lands together.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interests and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs in the same order.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

It Is All By Jerks.

In dry weather, when rain is most needed, "we have no rain;" in wet weather we have plenty of it, and so of heat and cold. We have to keep fires in winter and ice in summer. Again, poor people who most need money have littler or none; while rich people, who don't need it, have more than they can use. Chandeliers and lamps at cost. Set of French China dinner ware for $65.00; 106 pieces Tea and Dinner $16. We warrant every bit of our solid silver ware and silver plated ware to be of the double and tripple plate, and all stamped with the named of Meriden Britanna Co., the best and largest plating company in the world. Tea set, $25 to 100. water set, $18 to 60; castors, $4 to 80. Card and Cake stands, pickle castors, knives, spoons, ladles, sugar shells, fruit knives, the best stock of plated at Ward's Cheap Crockery Store, No. 9 Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

—There has been a small rebellion at Waterloo lately. Part of the corporation wanted to secede, and build up an aristocracy of its own, but the larger part stood for the principle that in union there is strength. The brave little band of the first part, gathering their forces together stood in solid phalanx as the Spartans of old, ready for battle, while the other party flung their banner to the breeze on which was painted, "No Southern Confederacy," no "Compromise with Traitors," and the union it must and shall be preserved The court was called in as arbitrator and for two days the hostile forces have jostled together around the statue of justice, which is not visable to the naked eye, watching their varying fortunes, as the scales turned one way or the other. At last the result was announced and up went the lighter party. That grand old sentiment of unity has been maintained and the vanquished go back as residents of the same corporation, to silently submit until time and intermarriage shal lobliterate and efface from memory an event that might have devastated a whole town.

The Schools

The winter term of the Auburn Public Schools will close to-morrow. After a vacation of two weeks the spring term will open, April 1st, and continue eight weeks. The attendance of foreign pupils in all the departments is freely invited. Rates of tuition as follows:

High School	$4.00
Intermediate Department	2.50
Primary "	1 00

The work to be done in the High School will be of such character as to offer an excellent opportunity to persons desiring to make a thorough review of the common school branches, as well as to those who, being qualified to do so, may desire to begin work in some of the higher subjects of study.

Classes will be sustained during the term in the following subjects: Analytical Reading. English Grammar and Composition, Physiology, Arithmetic, Algebra, (elementary and higher,) Geometry, (beginning,) Latin, (two classes—one in grammar, the other in Caesar,) Physical Geography and Natural Philosophy. Spelling exercises twice a week. Book-keeping, being optional with pupils, will be taught if a sufficient number desire to study it to form a class.

New pupils desiring to enter the schools are requested to present themselves for examination on the first day.

M. Seiler, Supt.

—Editor Courier—I read in the Courier of this week that Dr. Winslow represented the greenback element, of this county, at the Toledo convention, but was not admitted. Very true; the greenback element was not represented by their proper delegates in the convention, when it was possible by any means to exclude them. Colarado was represented by their chosen delegate, M. M. Pomeroy, who was excluded as such delegate, for the reason that he would have the government create enough new legal tender paper money to pay its entire bond debt. But the man who had stolen the money which Peter Cooper had placed in his hands, that poor people in New York City might be supplied with votes and conveyances to enable them to get to the polls, was admitted. The convention was largely made up of paid hirelings of the money-bags and office hunting adventurers, The word "Greenback," was purposly left out of the platform, and that their be no question of their interest to maintain the existence of the bonds until the latest moment, it is declared that the same shall be taxed even though—by wise legislation—they should, for the third time, be converted into 400 year bonds. And if ever the period of redemption should arrive, then they have wisely provided that the gold or its equivalent shall be obtained from such of the people as are not exempt from paying taxes. From such a convention, it is an honor to be excluded

Wit! Humor! Fun!

"RISE AND FALL OF THE MOUSTACHE."

R. J. BURDETTE, "The Burlington Hawkeye Man."

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 25th, at the Court House, Auburn.

READ WHAT THE PRESS SAYS.

[From the Muscatine (Iowa) Gazette.]

As a literary effort, it was one of the finest, richest, raciest lectures ever heard from the Muscatine stage. It bubbles with fun, sparkles with wit, bristles with sharp points, and is replete with tender sentiments and beautiful thoughts. And how wonderful the transition from "the sublime to the rediculous!" While still in convulsion of laughter, the audience transported by a burst of eloquence or moved to tears by a touch of exquisite pathos.

From the Iowa City Republican.

The lecture of Mr. Burdette, last evening, on the "Rise and Fall of the Moustache," was one of the best received of the course offered this winter by the Lecture Association. Mr. Burdette, small in stature, delicate in mould, from the moment of his introduction prepossessed his audience by an unaffected manner, and held them convused with laughter as he heaped one droll description upon another for an hour and a half. He is no retailer of second-hand anecdotes, but draws his pictures direct from actual life, which is the secret of his popularity as a speaker and writer; and although humor was the predominant feature of his effort, it was not altogether devoid of pathos, showing his capability for a higher style of discourse.

Admission 50 cents, children under 15 years, 25 cents. Tickets for sale at Willis' book store. Doors open at 7 o'clock, lecture at 8. Secure reserved seats, no extra charge.

—While at Auburn last week, T. C. Mays, of the Courier, took special pains to show us the sights of that thriving county seat and introduced us to some of its clever citizens Tom is a genial, wholesouled gentleman and takes special pains to entertain visitors. We also met brother Weamer, of the Republican, and had a friendly shake. We formed the acquaintance of Prof. Van Auken, Superintendent of the Waterloo schools, Jas E. Rose, Esq., and others. Court was in session and the legal fraternity of the county seemed to be well represented. Quite a large delegation, representing the intelligence and refinement of Albion were there also to attend the Tilton lecture. This was the first time we had the pleasure of meeting brother Prickett, of the Albion New Era, and were quite favorably impressed with his sociability and gentlemanly bearing. The Era is one of the best papers in our exchange list. —Angola Herald.

—The celebrated Townsed Dramatic Troupe, opened here Tuesday evening in "Lost in London," to a fair house, and their fine rendition of the play pleased everybody. Last night the audience was increased, and their "Orphan of Geneva," was admirably given. It is delightful to witness the true acting of a troup like this, and they deserve to be liberally patronized. To-night they will present Shakespear's splendid tragedy, "Richard III," Mr. Townsend appearing in the principal role. Admission 25 cents; reserved seats 35.

—Geo. M. Crane, Esq., is the new postmaster of Sedan, this county. Mr. C. has been agent for the Lake Shore road, a position which he still retains, for a long time, and has always discharged his duties promptly and creditably to himself, and to the great satisfaction of the Company. We have known him personally for years, and have always found him a live, enterprising honorable gentleman, and hope to hear of his promotion by the Company to a position where salary will be a better compensation for his valuable services.

—We regret that we cannot be in attendance at the thirtieth anniversary of the connection of Gen. Reub. Williams, of the Northern Indianian, with the publishing business, the celebration of which takes place at Warsaw to-night. In our absence, however, we can but wish the General that his future may be as brilliant and as prosperous as his past, and that on the downward slope of life, he may reap the fruits of a useful, well spent life, friends gathering around him as numerous as in the days of his prime manhood.

—We trust our local correspondents will write nothing to offend their neighbors. We do not mean that the columns of the Courier shall be used to carry out the petty spite of any one. A good joke is always relished, and a little fun can hurt no one, but when it merges into abuse it ceases to be attractive. We, therefore, hope that none of our local contributors will thus indulge themselves, but use zeal in gathering in all such items as will prove interesting to the reader and of benefit to the locality in which they may occur.

—Melvin Bowers only son of Mr. and Mrs. Lew Bowers of this place, died Tuesday morning at 4 o'clock, after a long and painful illness, of consumption. A year ago Mel was a stout, robust young man, full of life and promising much for the future. No one ever dreamed such a fate awaited him, and his death cast a gloom over his many friends here. He was buried yesterday.

Spring has Come.

The balmy air, the genial sun, the sweet notes of robbins and the wild twittering of the blue birds proclaim it; the flowers, and the trees, and all sorts of vegetation begin to feel its gentle influence, and are slowly awakening from their long months of slumber. Spring has come. Glorious youth, the golden time of life, springs forward with elastic step, and has no thought but that all things will endure for ever. Even old age on crutches is reinvigorated, and pains and aches are only a memory of the past. Spring has come. The season of moonlight strolls, and shady walks, and lovers' vows, and plighted troth, of flowers and soda water, and rheubarb pie, and bock beer and spring fever, and young onions. Spring has come.

—Mr McQuiston's store was burglarized Tuesday morning last, the entrance being effected through the glass in the front door. About $100 worth of clothing, jewelry, &c. was taken. It is just a bit curious that half a dozen burglaries of this kind have taken place here in a short time, and no trace or clue to the parties has as yet been found. Somebody is very successful as a burglar, else we are very stupid as detectives. An organized effort ought to be made to catch the parties.

—Mr. I. N. Davis, Grand Worthy Chief Templar of Indiana, gave our citizens an interesting lecture at the M. E. church on last Saturday evening. He handled the subject of temperance in a masterly manner, and did credit to himself and the cause. Immediately after the meeting a Good Templar organization was effected, and the cause is once more revived in our midst. Mr Davis also organized a lodge at Garrett and Avilla.

Beecher at Fort Wayne.

On next Tuesday evening, March 19, Henry Ward Beecher will lecturn at the Rink, at Fort Wayne, on "The Waste and Burdens of Society." The admission will be 50 cents, reserved seats 75 cents. Arrangements have been made with the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad to reture the same night, at excursion rates. We hope a goodly number will attend.

—Mr. Editor—Whereas the laboring man has been oppressed, we have resolved that at the coming election in October, we will vote for a laboring man to represent us in the next legislature regardless of party lines. Tricksters and wire workers cannot rule. As we are patrons of your paper, we ask publication in it for two weeks without comment. Yours now, and hereafter

Many Voters.

—Grand Jurors chosen for the next year: First District; John Parnell, James Dirlam. Second District; Joseph Shryock, John Cool. Third District; Geo. W. Draggoo, S. S. Sprott. Last six months: First District, Joseph L. Haines, J. D. Beard. Second District, John Coy, John Grube. Third District, C. P. Coleman, D. H. Murray.

—Dr. Yarnell's next regular visit to Auburn, occurs Thursday, March 21st at the Central House, and Waterloo, Long's Hotel, Tuesday, March 26th. The doctor is a physician of high standing and undoubted responsibility, and is effecting many remarkable cures in cases which have long baffled the highest skill of the general practitioner.

—While Jno. McClellan was moving his threshing machine to one of his neighbors, this week, the wheels went into a chuck-hole and tipped it over. Mr. McClellan's youngest son was driving and would probably have been killed but for the great presence of mind in jumping the opposite direction from which the machine fell.

—Just think of it, white coffee sugar 9½c.; choice extra C. 8½c.; nice rich yellow, 8c.; brown, 7½c. Coffees all down 2 cents per pound. Good green coffee 18c.; No. 1 prime, 20c. and best in market 23c. per pound. Farmers it will pay you to buy your goods at my store, corner Cowan and King streets, Garrett, Ind.

J. J. Hoffman.

—The social connected with the M. E. church, will be held at the lecture room of said church, on next Tuesday evening. A part of the evening will be spent in spelling, for which the two best spellers will each receive a handsome prize. Come one and all, and have a good time.

Mrs. A. Robbins, Sec'y.

—We call attention to the advertisement in another column of James Anderson, who announces that he can sell you a buggy very low, and warrant good work. Jim is a good workman, and his buggies stand twice the wear of those buggies bought abroad, and which cost nearly as much.

—Friend Mays, of the Auburn Courier, is spoken of as a candidate for the De Kalb county clerkship, subject to the voice of the coming democratic convention in that county. As Tom has done much to build up his party, and possesses the necessary qualifications, we think the De Kalb Democracy could do no better than to confer upon him the nomination.—Syracuse Gazette.

—The Rev. Geo. O. Curtis, pastor of the African M. E. Church, has gone to Auburn to give a sacred concert. He bore a letter of introduction from Billy Stewart to Tom Mays.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

George has not presented his little Rebus from Billy yet. Perhaps its all the better.

For Sale.

The undersigned having had very bad health for some time past, desires to sell out his Hardware and Tinware establishment, which he offers at reasonable rates. Possession given immediately. Inquire of Julius Bomsey.

—Mr. Burdette, the humorous writer of the Burlington Hawkeye, will lecture here on Monday evening, March 25th, on the subject of "The Rise and Fall of the Moustache." He is said to keep his audience in a roar with his wit and humor, and as the admission is only 50 cents, all should hear him.

—The town Marshal requests us to say that town taxes must be paid by the first of April, as from that date a penalty will be added. It is hoped that all will avoid such an additional expense, and come forward by that time and meet the demand upon them.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian Society will give a Maple Sugar social on next Friday evening, at the residence of Mrs. J. Barclay. Mite 15 cents. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Mrs. J. E. Rose, Pres.

—We regret to learn that the woolen mills at Rome City, were entirely destroyed by fire last Friday week. The loss is estimated at $24,000. Capt. Fisher was a third partner, and the loss will fall heavily upon him.

—One of our farmer friends sends us the following geographical question to which he desires an answer through Courier: "Where is it that night is as long in June as in November?"

—Lost—A pointer dog. Has on a brass collar, with lock; liver colored ears, spots on and near hips. A liberal reward given for his return.

F. D. Ryan.

—We will print tickets for the township elections at $1 for each township or precinct. Send in a copy of the ticket nominated, and write the names very plain.

St. John and New Era Items.

—Mud is drying.

—Rain on last Sunday afternoon.

—Wes is our man for J. of P. at the democrat meeting Saturday.

—The young men here play ball on Sunday when the weather is pleasent.

—Charley has got a new girl in the person of Post's hired woman. Be careful and not get the mitten Chas.

—Dan Terry and C. Rugman went fishing Sunday forenoon. Dan came home with half a dozen, and a—he, he, he, but Charley got nary a one.

—Our enterprising section boss is fast getting his line of the road in firstrate condition, now that the weather is favorable.

—We learn that Mr. Wm. Reek has purchased the sawmill at New Era of Mr. Work, and arrived with his family from Angola Tuesday, and we hope he will make things lively in that dead and alive place.

—Wes Work gave Tommy Stigans, the blacksmith on his farm his walking papers last Monday, for the reason that Tommy was a little too loud with his mouth about the women, and Tom, nothing daunted, packs up his duds and dusts off for sunny Kansas, under the impression that he is a much abused man. Call again, Tommy, dear.

—Notwithstanding the bad roads, quite a good number of persons were in attendance at the forenoon meeting, last Sunday in the Chapel.

—The reporter, with several others, paid a vist to Butler Center last Friday, that being the last day of Mr. Coder's school. We steped over to J. P. Wyants, and was invited to dinner. Not being of the praising sort, we went at the many good things, which Mrs. J. P. and her accomplished daughters placed before us, without a word, and when we thought the inner man had enough, we just tilted back our chairs, picked our grinders, wiped our chops, and thought what a good thing it was to have friends who would feed us so liberally. Then repaired to the school house, where Merica made a very funny speech with his finger on one side of his probosus.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health, but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct cause of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

—Nobody should go to church, or public meeting, hacking away and disturbing the preacher or orator with their cough. Use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup at once; it only costs 25 cents a bottle at Davenport's.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1878.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

TURKEY'S DISMEMBERMENT.

THE PRELIMINARY TERMS OF PEACE.

The treaty contains twenty-nine articles. The opening articles relate to Montenegro, Servia, and Bulgaria. The indemnity is fixed at 1,410,000,000 rubles, but 1,100,000,000 are covered by territorial cessions. Nothing is fixed concerning the terms and period of payment of the 310,000,000. No guarantee is stipulated, nor is there mention of Egyptian or Bulgarian tribute or of the Turkish fleet. The treaty simply states that Russia and Turkey shall agree subsequently about the payment.

Pirot remains Bulgarian.

Servia includes Sienitza, Novi-Bazar, and Vrania.

Montenegro includes Antivari, Spiza, Podgoritza, and Nicsics.

All the Bulgarian fortresses are to be razed and the Turkish troops withdrawn.

A military road will be established for the Ottoman posts and the telegraph, and the passage of troops, which, however, must not make any considerable halt while passing through the country. Mussulmans may return to Bulgaria. Any property of Mussulmans, who have not returned, which they leave undisposed, will be sold after two years for the benefit of a widows' and orphans' fund.

The arrears of taxes in Bosnia and Herzegovina are to be remitted. The revenue, until 1880, is to be applied to the indemnity for sufferers by the insurrection, and to provide for local needs. Austrian and Russian commissioners will arbitrate in all disputed claims.

The navigation of the straits is declared free for merchant vessels during peace or war.

Six divisions of Russian infantry and two of cavalry will occupy Bulgaria until the formation of the Bulgarian militia, the strength of which shall be fixed later by Russia and Turkey. The Russian army of occupation will preserve communications both through Roumania and the Black sea. The expenses of the Russian occupation are to be borne by Bulgaria.

Roumania is authorized to make her demand for indemnity direct to the Porte, and make a direct treaty. No indemnity is stipulated for Servia or Montenegro.

Russian, Turkish, and Bulgarian commissioners will determine the Bulgarian tribute.

The reform programme of the Constantinople conference will be applied to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

An organization similar to that granted to Crete in 1868 is stipulated for Thessaly and Epirus. No mention is made of Greece or Crete.

Batoum, Ardahan, Kars and Bayazid are ceded to Russia. Erzeroum and Trebizond are not mentioned, except that the Russians may embark at Trebizond on their return home.

Asiatic Turkey is to be evacuated in six months. The evacuation of European Turkey is to begin immediately, and be completed within three months.

The European Danube Commission retains its former rights. The Porte undertakes the expense of re-establishing navigation on the Danube and indemnifying private losses, the amounts of which are to be deducted by the Danube Commission from the sums it owes the Porte.

Russia receives the Dobrudscha, to exchange it for Bessarabia.

The question of the Turko-Persian frontier shall be speedily settled.

THE EAST.

STIMULATED by the success of the Princeton students, a large party of young men from Yale College attempted to haze the Count Johannes while the latter was performing in a New Haven theater. Eight of them were so successful as to spend the rest of the night in jail.

P. S. LEACH's shoe shop at Brocton, Mass., was burned last week. Loss, $150,000; insurance, $125,000. Four hundred persons are thrown out of employment.

THE business portion of the village of Spartansburg, Pa., has been burned. Loss, $100,000....At Rowell's point, Pa., a few days ago, the trestle platform used in building a new iron bridge over the Potomac at Rowell's bend gave way, precipitating thirteen men at work into the river, a distance of fifty feet. Three men were killed outright, and the remainder seriously injured.

THE WEST.

IN pursuance of a joint resolution which passed both houses of the Ohio Legislature, a national salute was fired at Columbus, on March 4, in honor of the final passage of the Silver bill....Two Missouri murderers were hung on Friday, March 1—John W. Daniels at Warrensburg, and Richard Green at Kansas City.

REPORTS from the Upper Missouri river country represent that three couriers from Gen. Miles have been killed by some of the runaway savages from Red Cloud agency, and there is something of a scare at Buford. It is also reported that Sitting Bull has visited a Yankton camp, near the boundary, for the purpose of trying to buy provisions for his people. He said there was no buffaloes across the line, and that the Sioux in Canada are starving.

EX-SENATOR BEN WADE died at his home in Jefferson, Ohio, March 2, at the advanced age of 78 years. Mr. Wade left an estate valued at $80,000, and made no will.

A SAN FRANCISCO telegram says the loss by the great flood in the Sacramento valley will reach at least $800,000.

THE finances of the city of San Francisco are in a sad plight. The treasury is empty, and the city is prohibited, by legislative enactment, from borrowing any money.

THERE is stored in Chicago elevators 1,320,011 bushels of wheat; 354,064 bushels of corn; 241,674 bushels of oats; 168,205 bushels of rye, and 684,955 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 2,774,909 bushels, against 8,513,853 bushels at this period last year.

THE annual national convention of the cheese, butter and egg men has just been held in Chicago. The meeting was largely attended by delegates from all parts of the East and West....J. R. Bartnolow, a well-to-do citizen of St. Louis, was shot and probably fatally wounded by his young son, because he refused the youngster permission to go out and witness the Mardi Gras festivities.

THE SOUTH.

CORN-PLANTING is progressing in Texas, and the wheat fields present a grand appearance. Good reports from the growing wheat come from all the sections heard from....There was a quadruple execution at Marion, Ala., on Friday, March 1. All four of the criminals were colored men, and all died protesting their innocence....There was the usual blow-out at New Orleans, Memphis, and other Southern cities on Mardi Gras day, March 5.

A TERRIBLE tornado recently swept through Casey county, Ky., carrying death and destruction wherever it was felt. The whole of the family of Vincent Wesley, consisting of himself, wife, two grown daughters and boy named Sloan, nephew, and William Taylor, a neighbor stopping at his house, were killed outright. Mrs. Wesley's body was blown 400 yards. Her clothing was entirely stripped off. The two daughters were carried fifty yards, and were found locked in each other's arms. The father and nephew were fearfully mangled, and all must have been killed by the first force of the tempest. In the vicinity of Mount Olive, Mrs. Morgan, wife of John W. Morgan, was killed, and the dwelling and outhouses of F. Floyd were completely swept away, and the timbers scattered in every direction.

THE town of Hot Springs, Ark., the well-known resort for invalids, has been almost entirely destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at about $250,000.

A FINANCIAL panic seized upon Louisville, Ky., last week, and the Newcomb-Buchanan distillery, the largest in the country; Harvey & Katts, the heaviest shoe dealers in the city, and J. A. Zanone & Son, liquor dealers, suspended.

THE Steamer City of Chester, was burned at the Memphis wharf the other day. Loss, $40,000. Two persons lost their lives by the disaster.

GENERAL.

There were forty-four failures in Chicago during the same period, with liabilities aggregating $2,391,963.

GEN. GRANT has arrived in Constantinople. He was just in time to witness the closing scenes in the great military spectacle whereat all Europe has gazed for nearly a year past.

CAPT. WILLIAM O. HARRISON, who was a passenger on the ill-fated steamer Metropolis, has been arrested at Philadelphia on a charge of robbing the dead after they were thrown by the waves upon the Currituck beach. Harrison was agent of the firm that sent out the cargo of human freight.

WASHINGTON.

DR. LINDERMAN, the Director of the Mints, has made all arrangements for running the coin mills to their full capacity on the new silver dollar, in connection with which gold only will for some time be coined. It is thought by the middle of April the coinage of the silver dollar will be at the rate of $3,500,000 per month. The supply of fractional silver coins at the mint and different treasury offices is sufficient to meet any demand likely to arise for several months to come....The Senate Finance Committee last week considered the bill to repeal the Resumption act, and postponed the subject. Some predict that the Committee will take no final action for one month. The committeemen indicate a desire to ascertain the effect of the Silver law before taking action on the resumption question.

THE following is the public-debt statement for March 1:

Six per cent. bonds	$746,665,860
Five per cent. bonds	703,266,650
Four and half per cent. bonds	200,000,000

THE House Committee on Public Buildings has agreed to recommend an appropriation of $245,300 for the construction of a building suitable for a National Museum in Washington. The plan of the building adopted by the committee is similar in character to that erected for the National Exposition, and will cover two acres, everything to be on one floor.

THE President has made the following appointments: Consuls—George C. Tanner, of South Carolina, at Verviers and Liege; Marshall H. Twitchell, of Louisiana, at Kingston, Canada; Charles Bartlett, of Maine, at Guadaloupe. Miscellaneous—Albert G. Porter, of Indiana, First Comptroller of the Treasury; Edward S. J. Nealy, Collector of Customs at Bath, Me.; James E. Simpson, of Iowa, Collector of Internal Revenue, Third District of Iowa; Edward H. Morrison, of New Jersey, Register of the Land Office at Boise City, Idaho; Commodore Edward F. Nichols, to be Rear Admiral of the Navy; Thomas C. H. Smith, of Ohio, Paymaster of the Army; Alexander C. Botkin, of Wisconsin, United States Marshal for the Territory of Montana.

THE President, in conversation with some gentlemen on the Silver bill, the other day, stated that he hoped that the expectations of its friends will be realized, and that his own opinions as to its effect might prove to be erroneous....McCulloch, Superintendent of Government Buildings at San Francisco, having been discovered in fraudulent transactions, has been removed by the President....The House Postoffice Committee has agreed to recommend the adoption of the double-stamp return postal-card. The purpose of this is to permit an answer to be returned on a postal-card.

THE President has nominated Alexander Reed Postmaster at Toledo, Ohio; also, the following Consuls: Charles H. Bronscomb, of Missouri, at Chenkiang; Erastus D. Webster, of New York, at Toronto; Henry C. Marston, of Illinois, at Port Louis; also, John McNeil, of Missouri, Indian Inspector, and Wilbur F. Lunt, for United States Attorney of Maine.

FOREIGN NEWS.

BY the accession of half a dozen Orleanists from the conservative side of the French Senate, the Republicans are likely to secure control of that body without waiting for the next elections....A Vienna dispatch asserts that Austria needs very little in the way of special preparation for war. "For the last seven years," the dispatch says, "preparations have been going on, and, since last year, when the possibility of such a measure arose, the plans have been worked out to the very smallest detail."....Among the other blessings derived by Roumania from the making of that country the Russian base of operations against the Turks, is the infection of all the railway rolling stock of the country with the poison of typhus fever. The pestilence is said to be epidemic in the Russian camps, and the Roumanians insist that the army should return to Russia by sea, instead of marching back through the principality.

RUSSIA offered a sop to Austria by suggesting that she has no objection to the latter occupying Bosnia and Herzegovina....The Prince of Battenburg looms up as the prospective sovereign of Bulgaria. He is a nephew of the Czar, and is about to marry a daughter of the Emperor's sister, the Grand Duchess Maria Nicolaevna.

A MINISTERIAL crisis has occurred at Quebec, involving the resignation of the Premier and the formation of a new Ministry by the leader of the opposition....Pope Pecci seems to have reconsidered his first intention to continue in the "prisoner-of-the-Vatican" business. Late reports say he intends to disband the Swiss Guards and other armed people heretofore retained in the pontifical palace, and to reside mostly at Castle Gandolfo, a pretty village fourteen miles from Rome, situated on a high volcanic peak....It is announced in Vienna that, according to trustworthy advices from various quarters, a part of the Russian army will enter Constantinople shortly, whether the treaty is signed or not....From various sources the information is conveyed in the cable dispatches of the signing of the treaty of peace by Russia and Turkey on the 3d inst. The fact was announced by the Grand Duke Nicholas to his soldiers on the occasion of a grand review at San Stephano, and the receipt of the intelligence in St. Petersburg was the occasion of great rejoicing....Pope Leo XIII. was crowned in the Sistine Chapel March 3d. The ceremony commenced at 9:30 in the morning, and terminated at 1:30 in the afternoon. Cardinals, prelates, and diplomatists accredited to the Vatican, and other persons were present. The Pope was afterward carried to his apartments, blessing the spectators on the way. A few houses were illuminated at night.

BY proclamation of the Spanish authorities in Cuba all slaves who have served in the ranks of the insurgents in any capacity are to be given their freedom upon applying to the proper authorities. Another proclamation announces that Cuba will hereafter have a representation in the Spanish Cortes on equal terms with Porto Rico, according to the population of the island....A London dispatch of the 6th inst. says: "Little has been learned about the terms of peace. The money indemnity has been reduced to 10,000,000 roubles, and, although Kars, Bayazid and Batoum are ceded to Russia, Erzeroum and the greater portion of Armenia will remain under Turkish rule. No Turkish war ships are ceded to Russia, nor will the Egyptian tribute be required to pay the indemnity."....The Grand Duke Nicholas has sent the following dispatch to the Russian Emperor: "I do myself the honor of congratulating your Majesty upon the conclusion of peace. God has vouchsafed to us the happiness of accomplishing the holy work begun by your Majesty, and, on the anniversary of the enfranchisement of the serfs your Majesty has delivered the Christians from the Mussulman yoke."

THE Mark Lane Express of the 7th inst., in a review of the British grain trade, says: "The peace prospects, the fairly-abundant granaried stocks, and heavy anticipated arrivals both from America and Southern Russia, have combined to reduce the wheat trade to a lamentable state of depression."

THE insurrection in Thessaly and other Greek provinces of Turkey is spreading, and the Turkish soldiers are re-enacting the Bulgarian atrocities in the disturbed districts, wherever they find opportunity.

THE Czar and the Sultan have cordially shaken hands across the bloody chasm, as witness the following graphic correspondence: Sultan to Czar—"On the occasion of the anniversary of your Majesty's accession to the throne, I offer you my congratulations, with the desire of renewing our friendly relations." Czar to Sultan—"I thank your Majesty your for congratulations, which I received simultaneously with the news of the signature of peace. I perceive in this coincidence a presage of good and lasting relations between us."

ADVICES received at Washington from Cuba fully confirm the reports of the complete collapse of the rebellion in that unfortunate island. ....The Grand Lodge of Freemasons of England, Lord Carnarvon presiding, unanimously passed a resolution refusing to recognize as a Freemason any person initiated in a lodge where the belief in God is denied or ignored. This refers to the action of the Grand Orient of France, which recently eliminated the article expressing belief in God from its ritual....The Cabinet of the new Pope is announced as follows: Cardinal Franchi, Secretary of State; Cardinal Simeoni, Prefect of the Propaganda; Cardinal Morichini, Camerlengo, and Cardinal Bartolini, President of the Congregation of Rites.

CABLE dispatches of the 8th are to the effect that the conference would certainly meet at Berlin, and that Prince Bismarck would probably preside. Lord Derby delivered a speech in Parliament, in which he took a despondent view of the situation. He admitted that the treaties of 1856 and 1871 had virtually ceased to exist, and were only binding until the powers could ratify a new system.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, March 1.—SENATE.—Not in session. HOUSE.—Mr. Shelley introduced a bill to aid the Great Southern Railroad Company to construct a line of railways in Georgia and Florida. Referred. ....Mr. McCook, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase the site of and attach to the Vicksburg National Cemetery the Grant-Pemberton monument. Referred....Mr. Crapo, from the same committee, reported back the bill allowing Lieut. B. F. Tozier, U. S. N., to accept a gold medal from the President of the French republic. Passed....Several bills of a private nature were passed.

MONDAY, March 4.—SENATE.—Vice-President Wheeler occupied the chair for the first time in several days......A bill supplemental to the law remonetizing silver was introduced by Mr. Cockrill, of Missouri. It provides for the deposit of silver bullion or bars with the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States, and for the issue to such depositors of certificates in denominations of not less than $20, to be receivable for duties and all forms of public taxes, and to be payable on demand by the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurers in silver dollars or United States notes...... Mr. Bruce introduced a bill to authorize the payment of bounties to the heirs of soldiers who were enlisted as slaves. Referred...Mr. Davis, of Illinois, called up the Senate bill to prevent abuses in respect to mileage of District Attorneys of the United States, and spoke in explanation thereof....Several private bills were passed....The Senate, in executive session, confirmed Bayard Taylor as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Germany; John Baker, of Illinois, Minister Resident at Venezuela, and William C. Goodloe, of Kentucky, Minister Resident at Belgium.

HOUSE.—The House concurred in the Senate amendments to the bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of 1812 and their widows. Mr. Joyce, of Vermont, wanted a clause inserted excluding from its benefits any one who had participated in the rebellion. The bill was passed by 217 yeas to 21 nays....The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Frye, for the exchange of silver coins of the United States for United States notes; by Mr. Ward, reducing the number of customs officers, and regulating their compensation; by Mr. Vance, authorizing Circuit and District Judges to fine and imprison at discretion in cases of conviction of illicit distillation, in lieu of punishment now required; by Mr. Sayler, providing for the classification of mail matter and fixing postage rates; by Mr. Pollard, appropriating $469,000 for deficiencies in the Interior Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; by Mr. Ittner (by request), to repeal the law imposing a tax on medicines or medical preparations; by Mr. Stone, for a water-route to facilitate transportation between Lakes Michigan and Erie; by Mr. Gibson, providing for a commission to supervise the construction of works to improve the navigation of the Mississippi river; by Mr. Williams, of Michigan, to establish a board of fish commissioners, to regulate and protect fisheries on the lakes; by Mr. Potter, to regulate immigration; also, to authorize bondholders and other creditors of railroad corporations to elect receivers in suits in equity pending in the United States courts....Mr. Bright offered a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the House whether he has authorized the sale of any bonds for outstanding legal-tender notes at par, adding the current New York premium on gold and the commission for selling, or whether he has authorized the sale of such bonds for legal-tender notes on any other terms than above stated; and, if so, the number and amount of the proceeds of such bonds, and who were employed as agents to dispose of them. Adopted.

TUESDAY, March 5.—SENATE.—Mr. Thurman introduced a bill to prohibit members of Congress from becoming sureties on certain bonds. Referred....Mr. Spencer, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely on the Senate bill extending the time for presenting claims for collecting, drilling, or organizing volunteers for the war of the Rebellion, and it was indefinitely postponed... Mr. Beck delivered a long argument in support of his resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury not to purchase any bonds for the sinking fund during the next fiscal year. He maintained that by an erroneous method of bookkeeping an excess of $37,000,000 has been carried to the credit of the fund. He blamed Senators Morrill and Dawes for this, and insisted that, in the depressed condition of the industries, no more money should be appropriated for this purpose. The resolution was referred to the Finance Committee. Mr. Morrill spoke in reply to Mr. Beck, after which the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Mr. Marsh offered a resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to take steps looking to the collection of the $28,000,000 indebtedness due the United States from the Central and Union Pacific Railroad Companies....The Fortification bill, appropriating $275,000, was passed....Judge Kelley delivered a two hours' speech on finance. It was designed as a reply to Gen. Garfield's November speech on silver. Judge Kelley's review of Garfield's speech was caustic. He said it was devoid of logic, and was a mere rhapsody, and was welcomed by the bullionist press as an answer to the silver argument, and was distributed through the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and thus possessed a semi-official character....Mr. Riddle, from the Committee on Territories, reported back adversely the bill to establish the Territory of Pembina. Laid on the table....The House, in committee of the whole, discussed the bills authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; making appropriations for detecting trespass on public lands, and for bringing into the market public lands in certain States.

WEDNESDAY, March 6.—SENATE.—The Senate bill to authorize the Worthington and Sioux Falls Railroad Company to extend its road into the Territory of Dakota to the village of Sioux Falls was taken up, discussed and passed....Mr. Chaffee, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a substitute for the Senate bill authorizing citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes. Placed on the calendar.... [illegible] reported, with an amendment, the Senate bill defining the manner in which certain land-scrip may be assigned and located or applied by actual settlers, and providing for the issue of patents in the name of the locator or his legal representative. Placed on the calendar....After a lengthy debate, the Senate passed the bill authorizing the issue of bonds in small denominations, running fifty years, and bearing 4 per cent. interest.

HOUSE.—The House passed the Fortification bill and the bill authorizing the erection of a Government building at Kansas City, Mo....A message was received from the President vetoing the bill authorizing a special term of the United States Court in Mississippi to try the timber depredators. The document was very brief, and stated, in substance, that not enough time was allowed by the bill to allow the Government to prepare its case, and that there were no funds on hand to pay the expense of an extra session of the court. The bill and message were referred to the Judiciary Committee....The House spent a large share of the day in committee of the whole on the Deficiency Appropriation bill, the time being principally consumed by Mr. Garfield in a set speech in reply to Mr. Kelley's speech, delivered on Tuesday.

THURSDAY, March 7.—SENATE.—The Senate discussed the bill relating to reopening the court-martial case of ex-Surgeon General Hammond without reaching a vote....Mr. Sargent called up his joint resolution in regard to Chinese immigration, and made a long speech thereon....Mr. Cockrell presented a bill to provide for the organization of a Mississippi River Improvement Commission, and for the improvement of navigation on that river.

HOUSE.—The House Committee on Accounts brought forward the Democratic caucus resolution authorizing the appointment of a number of experts to work in connection with the several investigating committees. A spirited discussion ensued, but the resolution was passed—130 to 104.

The Hon. B. F. Wade, of Ohio.

Benjamin Franklin Wade was born in Springfield, Mass., October 27, 1800. He worked as a farmer or laborer in summer and school-teacher in winter, till 1826, when he began to study law in Ohio, and in 1828 he was admitted to the bar in Ashtabula county, where he has ever since resided. In 1835 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of that county, and in 1837 to the State Senate, to which he was twice re-elected. In 1847 he was chosen President Judge of the Third Judicial District of the State. In 1851 he was elected United States Senator, and re-elected in 1857 and 1863. In the Senate Mr. Wade was a steady opponent of all measures favoring slavery. In 1852 he voted, with only five other Senators, to repeal the Fugitive Slave law. He also spoke and voted against the bill to abrogate the Missouri compromise; against the Lecompton constitution for Kansas, in 1858; against appropriating $30,000,000 for the acquisition of Cuba, and against all the compromises between the North and South proposed after Mr. Lincoln's election in 1860. The Homestead bill he advocated for years, and it was in his charge when it was finally passed by the Senate in 1862. From the outbreak of the civil war, in 1861, Mr. Wade labored incessantly for a more vigorous policy; was Chairman of the joint Committee on the Conduct of the War, and urged the enactment of a law to confiscate all the property of leading secessionists and emancipate their slaves. As Chairman of the Territorial Committee, he reported a bill, in 1862, abolishing slavery in all the Territories of the Government, and prohibiting it in any that might afterward be acquired. After the assassination of President Lincoln, in 1865, he became President pro tempore of the Senate and acting Vice President of the United States, and in March, 1867, he was elected President of the Senate. In 1871 he was one of the commission sent to San Domingo to report upon its proposed annexation to the United States, a scheme of which he approved.—American Cyclopedia.

An Outlaw's Death.

William Tracey, who had his leg crushed by a locomotive while trying to escape from Officer Green, on Wednesday morning, died in the Ninety-ninth Street Hospital yesterday. An hour before his death he was conscious. Dr. Burnett asked him whether he had a mother or any relative that he wished to send word to.

Tracey replied: "I have no mother, but I have a brother. Tell him I was hurt while trying to get on a train."

Dr. Burnett then asked him whether he could get anything for him.

"Yes," Tracey answered. "Get me an eighteen-inch jimmy. The police took mine from me. I should like to die with one in my hand."

Dr. Burnett then kindly but firmly said: "Tracey, you are about to die. Hadn't you better make your peace with God and with men, and tell who were your associates?"

Tracey's eyes flashed fire as he nerved himself suddenly, and replied: "The world will never know that from me."

A few minutes later he became unconscious.—New York Sun.

A CORRESPONDENT asks, "What is the best method of feeding cattle in winter?" We don't exactly know. One man might prefer to take the ox in his lap and feed him with a spoon. Others would bring him into the dining-room and let him sit at the table with the old folks. Tastes differ in matters of this kind.

A BILL has been offered in the California Senate prohibiting any person from disposing of more than one square mile of land, 640 acres, by will. This object is to break up the immense grain and cattle ranches held in that State by a few proprietors, and secure their subdivision into smaller farms.

THE holly tree is discovered to be a native of California, the only difference between the American and European species being that the former has pale green leaves with green berries, while the leaves of the latter are dark and glossy and its berries red.

MESSRS. SIMON CAMERON and Montgomery Blair are now the only survivors of President Lincoln's original Cabinet.

WESTMINSTER.

A Visit to the Grand Old Abbey.

(Charles W. Squires, in St. Nicholas for March.)

Most people have heard of the grand old Abbey of Westminster, in London, and many would be glad to visit this famous historical place. I had often been there in my thoughts and dreams, and had often wished that I might really walk through its quiet aisles and chapels, when, at last, I should make a trip to Europe. And my wish was granted.

It was on a November morning—one of those dark, gloomy mornings peculiar to London—that I started from my lodgings to walk to the Abbey.

After a little walk, I came in sight of Westminster bridge and the houses of Parliament, and then, on my right, I noticed the two tall towers of the Abbey, so I quickened my steps until I had gained the entrance door. What a change from the busy, crowded streets to this old sepulcher, and its relics of the dead! It almost made me shudder, for the interior of the building was dark and gloomy, and I saw many cold, white figures towering high above me. The original Abbey was built many, many years ago, and has been restored from time to time by the succeeding Kings and Queens of England, until we find it in its present condition, safe and sound, and one of the greatest objects of interest in London.

Westminster Abbey may certainly be called a tomb, for we could spend a whole day in simply counting its monuments. There were so many of these that I hardly knew which to look at first, but I thought it best to follow my own inclinations, and so, instead of procuring a guide (men with long gowns, who take visitors around and point out the objects of greatest interest), I roamed about at my will. The first monument that attracted my attention was the venerable shrine of Edward the Confessor, in the chapel of St. Edward, once the glory of the Abbey, but which has been much defaced by persons who were desirous of obtaining a bit of stone from this famous tomb. In this chapel I saw also the old coronation chairs, in which all the reigning sovereigns of England, since Edward I., have been crowned. They are queer, old-fashioned chairs, made of wood, and not very comfortable, I imagine. The older of the two chairs was built to inclose the stone (which they call Jacob's pillar) brought from Scotland by Edward, and placed in this chapel. Many other interesting tombs are to be seen here, and the floor of the chapel is more than 600 years old!

I next visited the chapel of Islip, built by the old Abbot of Islip, who dedicated it to St. John the Baptist. One very interesting monument there was to the memory of Gen. Wolfe, who fell, you remember, at the battle of Quebec. His monument is a very beautiful piece of art. It represents him falling into the arms of one of his own soldiers, who is pointing to Glory, which comes in the shape of an angel from the clouds, holding a wreath with which to crown the hero. A Highland sergeant looks sorrowfully on the dying warrior, while two lions sleep at his feet. The inscription reads as follows: "To the memory of James Wolfe, Major General and Commander-in-Chief of the British land forces on an expedition against Quebec, who, after surmounting, by ability and valor, all obstacles of art and nature, was slain in the moment of victory, on the 13th of September, 1759, the King and Parliament dedicate this monument."

I now walked on to the north transept, and the first monument I noticed was one erected to Sir Robert Peel, the great orator and statesman. I seated myself on an old stone bench to rest, and, looking around, saw a magnificent statue of the great William Pitt, who, you may remember, was also a great statesman, and accomplished more for the glory and prosperity of England than any other statesman who ever lived. In this transept there is a beautiful window, which represents our Savior, the twelve apostles, and four evangelists. As I was sitting quietly in this secluded spot, looking up at the window, strains of solemn music reached my ear, which sounded as if they came from one of the gloomy vaults around me. I walked on to discover, if possible, whence this music came, and I saw, in the nave of the Abbey, the Dean of Westminster conducting a service, assisted by his choir boys. I seated myself until the ceremonies were over, and I thought it was a very odd place to hold church—among so many graves.

After the Dean and his choir boys had disappeared I commenced my walk again, and saw many fine old monuments. One of these was in memory of Sir Isaac Newton, and I am sure I need not tell you who he was. Prominent among the monuments in this part of the Abbey is that to Major Andre, the fine young officer who was executed during our Revolutionary war.

I next visited the south transept, better known as the "Poet's Corner," which I think is the most interesting part of Westminster. A hundred, and more, monuments to the memory of great men can be seen here, but I can only tell you of a few of the most important. The one I thought most of is erected to the memory of William Shakspeare, although his bones repose far away, in the little church of Stratford-on-Avon. Then I saw the tombs of David Garrick, the great actor and delineator of Shakspeare's characters; George Frederick Handel, the eminent composer, the author of that beautiful anthem, "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth;" the great Milton; rare old Ben Jonson; Edmund Spenser, author of the "Faery Queene;" and those of Southey, Dryden, Addison, Gray, Campbell, and other well well-known English poets.

Then, among the names of the dead of our own day, I saw those of Dickens, Bulwer, Macaulay, and Dr. Livingstone. Kings, Queens, statesmen, soldiers, clergymen, authors and poets here have equal station. Some may lie under richer tombs than others, but all rest beneath the vaulted roof of Westminster Abbey, the place of highest honor that England can offer her departed sons.

Timber Seizures—Lamar's Victory.

Lamar, of Mississippi, gained quite a victory in the United States Senate the other day. The House bill providing for an extra session of the United States Court in the Southern District of Mississippi had been reported adversely by the Committee on Judiciary. This report was pretty unanimous, being sustained by the Republican members of the committee as well as by Senators Davis and Thurman, yet Lamar succeeded in rallying to his support a majority of the Senate, and passed the bill over the report by six majority. The bill excited no little debate. Its main purpose is to try the timber-depredation cases.

The Postal Savings Bill.

The bill for a national savings scheme agreed upon by the House Banking and Currency Committee provides for deposits at every money-order postoffice in the country of sums not less than 25 cents nor more than $5 in any one week, which shall be entered upon a pass-book; whenever the amount reaches the sum of $10, the depositor may demand a postal-order on the United States treasury, free of charge. These postal-orders are made transferable on indorsement, but it is provided that there shall not be more than five indorsements on any one order. These orders themselves do not draw interest, but they are exchangeable on demand for "Postal-Savings bonds" in sums of $10 and multiples thereof, which shall draw 3.65 per cent. interest for the term of three years, but no longer. Pending the three years, these bonds may be exchanged on the demand of the holder at the United States treasury or any sub-treasury for United States notes in an amount representing the principal and accrued interest, and they can also be exchanged at any time for the 4-per-cent. refunding bonds of the United States.

National-Bank Redemption.

The following is a statement of the operations of the national-bank redemption agency for the month of February, and the eight months ending Feb. 28, as compared with the corresponding periods last year:

National-Bank Notes Disposed of.	Month.	Eight Months.
Notes fit for circulation assorted and returned to banks of issue	$ 11,248,400	$ 103,372,200
Notes unfit for circulation assorted and delivered to Comptroller of Currency for destruction and replacement with new notes	3,731,500	31,986,200
Notes of failed, liquidating and reducing banks deposited in treasury	608,100	7,210,750
Totals for 1878	$ 15,588,000	$ 142,569,150
Totals for 1877	18,978,200	147,378,000
Decrease	$ 3,390,200	$ 4,808,850

The Young King of Spain.

A correspondent of the Paris Figaro, who, with several other Frenchmen, recently had an audience of the King of Spain, states that the King is small in size, and that what there is of his nascent beard and mustache is black. His cheeks have a fine color, and his nose is somewhat prominent. Like Napoleon III., he inclines his head in speaking. The young Queen, standing by his side in a gray silk robe, smiled in unison with her husband's affable remarks.

GEN. ROBERT TOOMBS says that tea-growing in Georgia is not a new thing—that for the last forty years "tea-trees" have been growing there. They were planted by Dr. L'Ace, who failed in his tea-culture only because he did not understand the treatment of the leaves. The General holds that, when Americans understand the manipulation of the leaves as well as the Chinese do, the former will produce as good, if not better tea than do the latter.

SOME French fishermen near Cape Agde, France, lately had a dogfish entangled in their net, which, after dragging their boat about during the entire night at the rate of twelve miles an hour, was finally captured and brought to land. It measured over sixteen feet in length, and weighed 2,500 pounds. Its enormous stomach contained the head, feet, and several other portions of a mule, as well as two half-digested tunnyfish.

THE Japanese railroads earn a great deal, but their expenses seem strangely high, considering the cheapness of labor and the facility of reaching ports. The line from Yokohama to Tokio, eighteen miles, earned, in 1875, about $24,000 a mile, and spent $19,800. That between Kotoe to Osaka earned $12,000, and spent $12,500.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

THERE are a great many reports reaching us from all over the country, and even from Canada, that the warm weather of December started the buds—and the Colorado beetles—and that the cold snap following it is likely to do a great deal of damage to next year's fruit.

DRESSING HOGS.—English experience in dressing well-fed hogs is follows: The per cent. of pork from a hog, the live weight of which is above 550 pounds, 87 to 88; a hog live weight 500 to 550, 84 to 86 per cent. of pork; 350 to 400, 81 to 82 per cent.; 200 to 300, 78 to 80 per cent.; under 200 pounds, 75 to 77 per cent.

LOOK out for the Hessian fly. It is dormant now, but its card may be seen in the yellow color of the fall season wheat. Anything that will disturb the fly or strengthen the plant is of use. When the ground is soft, it may be well to roll the wheat, or to sow five bushels of salt to the acre or fifty bushels of unleached ash.

SOMETHING FOR RATS AND MICE.—Several correspondents write to announce the complete extirpation of rats and mice from their cow-stalls and piggeries since the adoption of this simple plan: a mixture of two parts of well-bruised common squills and three parts of finely-chopped bacon is made into a stiff mass, with as much meal as may be required, and then baked into small cakes, which are put down for the rats to eat.—English Standard.

DRAINING A HOLLOW.—To drain a depression in a field where a clayey or hard pan subsoil prevents the sinking of rain water, and the lay of the land is unfavorable for ordinary methods of drainage, first dig a hole, as if for a well, through the impervious stratum at the bottom of the hollow, fill it up to the brim with refuse stones, remove the excavated earth so as to allow the surface water free access to the pit, and standing water will never injure the grass or grain crop in that part of the field.

HON. C. E. WHITING, of Monona county, Iowa, says, and truly, that he is very positive that his experience teaches him that, with wide timber belts around his fields, the balance of the lands will produce more grass, more corn, or more wheat than the whole land would without the wind belts. And as his belts increase in height he finds an increased visible benefit to his crops. And he finds in his large experience that our cultivated forest trees year after year grow right along with immense rapidity in blissful ignorance of the reason why they should not grow.—Prairie Farmer.

MR. JAMES BURNELL, of Pacheco, has adopted for several years a method of sowing wheat which has never been described in the Patent Office, but which we have heard has been practiced and advocated by some of our farmers. He fastens a common sack of seed in front of him, on horseback, attaches his feet to guide reins and uses both hands in throwing the grain broadcast, right and left, in such quantity as suits him. Being elevated from the ground the seed obtains a wide spread. He says he can sow twenty acres a day without much fatigue in this way.—Pacific Rural Press.

IT is not in November or December that our shrubs and flowers want our protecting care; we merely apply it then as a matter of convenience, but now—February till April. Tender nursing cannot be commended, as we may be likely to kill with kindness. Providing a little mulching of leaves, litter, manure, sedge-grass, earth or ashes has been applied over the roots, a few hemlock, spruce, or other evergreen twigs or branches placed right over the plants, greatly preserve them from injury. In the absence of evergreen branches, any twiggy branches will prove useful, as will also thinly-made umbrella-shaped straw thatches.—Moore's Rural.

SELECTING SEED CORN.—I have been improving my corn by selecting the first ears that get ripe, and this is my seventh year since I began this practice, always planting the largest and best-developed ears. For the last seven years I have rejected the tips and butts of the ears, shelling off all grains that are not well developed. To-day I have as good, sound, well-developed ears as any man can raise, and filled to the very tip—so much so that there is no room for another grain. I have also made my corn much earlier by gathering the first ears that get ripe. The reason why I reject the tip grains is this—they are not so well developed and will not come up so strong and make so rank a growth.—Letter to Ohio Farmer.

About the House.

OYSTER STUFFING.—Oysters for stuffing turkey should be bearded and chopped fine; a little mace should be added.

UNIVERSITY NIGHT-CAP.—Take half a tumblerful of tea, with a wine-glassful of milk and sugar to taste, to which add a wine-glassful of brandy; beat one egg, and mix.

CLARET-CUP. — Six table-spoonfuls sherry, two table-spoonfuls brandy, one ounce and a half sugar, a few shreds lemon peel; to these add one bottle claret and one bottle soda water. Keep in a cool place, and only open before drinking.

ALBANY PUNCH.—One wine-glassful brandy, half wine-glassful Jamaica rum, a table-spoonful arrack, quarter of a lemon, a table-spoonful sugar, then fill the tumbler with crushed ice and water, mix thoroughly, and drink through a straw.

SMOKY CHIMNEYS. — Trouble with smoky chimneys caused by their being used for two or more stoves may be averted in most cases by inserting vertically in the flue a piece of sheet iron so as to divide the flue in the center for about two feet above the point where each pipe enters, and turning the bottom of the sheet iron under the pipe so as to shut it completely off from the part of the flue below it.—Springfield Union.

HOW A WATER PIPE MAY BE CLEANED.—A correspondent of Forest and Stream tells of a novel method employed to cleanse a two-inch water pipe which had become choked with mud. A string was passed through a hole punched in the tail of a small eel, which was straightway put into the pipe. An occasional jerk reminded the eel that it was incumbent on him to advance, which he did, arriving at the lower end of the pipe with the string. A bunch of rags was tied to the string, and thus the pipe was cleansed.

CHOCOLATE CAKE.—One cupful of best butter, and two cupfuls of sugar, beaten to a cream; one cupful of sweet milk, three and one-half cupfuls of sifted flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, sifted in the flour; one-half teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in a very little hot water, the whites of four eggs well beaten and the yelks of six; make a frosting with the whites of two eggs, one and one-half cupfuls of powdered sugar, six tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate, one teaspoonful of vanilla; frost when the cake is warm.

ROUND VS. SQUARE CHEESES.—We have wondered, and it seems that somebody else has wondered, too, why cheeses should always be made round. We have seen a square cheese, one foot long and four inches high and wide, weighing ten pounds. This is just the cheese for family use. It weighs just about enough, and the consumer can begin at one end and cut off a slice as thick as is required. No fresh surface is exposed except the end where the cutting has begun; this can easily be covered so that flies cannot get at it, and meanwhile the cheese will not dry up.—Rural New Yorker.

Spring Styles.

Fresh importations of spring millinery arrive daily, and confirm the rumored revival of Havana and mastic gray shades. There is a great variety in these sober tints, and the names most prominent on the list of colors are mode, drab, silver, beige, clair de lune, Havana, tan, wood, mastic, and finally ashes-of-roses, which is revived in precisely the pinkish-drab hue formerly known under this name.

One of the special novelties to relieve quiet colors is gold and silver ribbon. This is an inch or more in width, is thinner and more flexible than the metal braids, and is used as bows, or as loops forming parts of bows that are partly of satin rib bon, or else to tie bouquets of flowers. Satin is above everything the material for trimming, both in ribbons and cut bias from the piece.

Fringed ribbons are shown as novelties. These have an inch-wide stripe down the middle of satin, silk, or watered surface, with a fringe of the same width on each side. Omber ribbons have a shaded satin stripe in the middle. Jardiniere ribbons have the fringe of many colors, while the stripe in the middle is of solid color.

Very little gros grain is shown, but this is a standard article that the best milliners are not willing to give up. Old-fashioned pin-dotted silks, with tiny raised spots, are revived, and there are trimming silks with the inevitable rough threads like those of bourette. Soft satin brocades are shown in small figures of two colors, or else in two tones of one color, and are as flexible in quality as the twilled silks so long used for trimming.

The beaded ornaments are most varied. Pearl galloons are made up of four or five rows of beads for binding the brim or resting flatly on the coronet, and there are pearl fringes to match, pearl comb-shaped ornaments for bow on the crown, and balls of pearl on rods for brooches.

A most natural effect is given to the pale green foliage so largely imported, by making these leaves of oil-silk instead of muslin, and not putting wire down the middle. A great deal of green rubber "tubing," as it is technically called, is used to tie in clusters and hang like grasses, or to string pearl beads upon in most incongruous fashion as fringe.

The yellow Tuscan braids are chosen by the most expensive Parisian milliners to trim as models of spring styles; these will rival the nicest French chip. A novelty is gray chip alternating with silver braid on the whole bonnet.—Harper's Bazar.

Starving Chinese.

The latest news of the awful famine desolating the northern provinces of China is brought by the steamer Oceana, which recently arrived at San Francisco from Hong Kong:

The extremely cold weather that has prevailed has had a fatal effect on the refugees, many of whom have been frozen to death, while thousands are suffering from insufficient accommodations and lack of food, which cannot be supplied in quantities to meet the demand.

Charles Budd, of the China Inland Mission, at Machung, who has recently visited the province of Shensi, writes a heartrending account of the suffering he has witnessed. The Government's effort to supply food and assistance is to a great extent nullified by the dishonesty of officials. Children are sold by hundreds by their starving parents.

In the large cities of Houching and Puching risings have occurred among the people rendered desperate by seeing their wives and children starving before their faces, and many other outbreaks are reported. In Houching the people beheaded a Mandarin for speculating on their necessities. Cold has been unusually severe throughout the country for several weeks. A terrible disaster occurred at the Tienstin Rouge House, in which the famine-stricken refugees from the northern provinces had assembled. The building took fire, and of nearly 3,000 people in the building only about 100 escaped.

THE extraordinary statement is made that Fedor Vassilef, a peasant of Moscow, had, in 1872, at the age of 75, eighty-seven children by two wives. His first wife bore him quadruplets four times, triplets three times, and twins sixteen times. His second wife, on eight occasions, presented him with eighteen children. Eighty-three of Vassilef's family were alive in 1872. These facts, it is said, can be easily verified by records in Moscow, where the Vassilef's are well known.

DANCING-MASTERS seldom have any money, but they're always taking steps to raise some.

A GREENBACK CURRENCY.

Gen. Butler Defines and Describes the Kind of Money the People Want.

[From his Recent Speech in Congress.]

Mr. Butler declared himself for the full restoration of silver to the coinage of the country, and that every debt of the United States now existing which could be paid by the silver dollar now proposed was by the very terms of the law under which the debt was contracted to be paid by silver dollars of the same weight and fineness. In regard to the point of dishonesty toward public or private creditors, he asked whether it was immoral, dishonest or wrong to provide by law that the debtor shall pay back back all he received with interest in discharge of a money debt. The same dollar which pays the poor man's debt should equally cancel the rich man's demand. Both should stand before the law alike, and right and justice be done at the hands of Congress, in spite of Executive recommendation or Executive power, whether in the shape of a veto or otherwise.

Mr. Butler denied that $60,000,000 of bonds, or anything like that amount, had been returned from Europe, but wished, for the financial and business prosperity of the country, it were true. He wished Europe would send back every bond of ours it holds, and the lower the price at which they sell here the better. If he could hear our 6-per-cent. bonds were coming back at 50 cents on the dollar, to be exchanged for our merchandise, our gold, or our silver, he should look upon it as the brightest and happiest financial fact the country ever knew. He wanted to see both silver and wheat sent abroad to pay our debts, and bring the balance of trade in our favor.

He saw neither wisdom nor statesmanship in locking our silver up in vaults. He reprobated the withdrawal of the paper fractional currency and substitution for it of subsidiary silver coin, saying that the people were to be taxed the enormous sum represented by the 5 per cent. compound interest on $50,000,000 for thirty years, and that, if the Secretary of the Treasury who framed that measure had ever sat down and made the calculation, and then foolishly cast that enormous burden on the people, he ought to be hanged to the nearest lamp-post for malice toward all mankind. If he had not done so, he ought to be hanged at all events for getting into an office which he could not fill.

Mr. Butler concluded as follows: We want the greenback for our currency, and mean to have it. But I do not desire that greenback currency should be made to serve the country as it has done—vilified, insulted, depreciated by act of Government itself, being refused not only to be received for all debts due the Government, not even paid for all demands due from the Government. The American system of finance which will obtain in the near future, and I hope at once—which I desire—is:

1. A dollar that shall have at all times a certain fixed and stable value below which it cannot go.

2. I demand the dollar shall be issued by Government alone in the exercise of its high prerogative and constitutional power, and that that power shall not be delegated to any corporation or individual any more than Charles II. ought to have delegated his prerogative of stamping gold coin for the benefit of his paramours as a monopoly.

3. I want that dollar stamped on some convenient and cheap material of the least possible intrinsic value, so that neither the wear nor its destruction will be any loss to the Government issuing it.

4. I also desire the dollar to be made of such material for the purpose that it shall never be exported or desirable to carry out of the country. Framing an American system of finance, I do not propose to adapt it to the wants of any other nation, and especially the Chinese, who are nearly one-quarter of the world.

5. I desire that the dollar so issued shall never be redeemed. I see no more reason why the unit of the measure of value should be redeemed or redeemable than that the yard-stick with which I measure my cloth, or the quart with which I measure my milk, shall be redeemed.

6. For convenience only I propose that the dollar so issued shall be quite equal or a little better than the present value of the average gold dollar of the world, not to be changed or changeable. If the gold dollar grows lower in value or grows higher, not to be obliged to conform itself in value in any regard to the dollar of any other nation of the world, keeping itself always stable and fixed, so that when the property of the country adjusts itself to it as a measure of value it shall remain a fixed standard forever. But if this is ever changed, it shall change equally and alike for creditor and debtor, not as the dollar based upon supposed gold, whose changes have always given the creditor the advantage.

To give the greenback currency thus desired a fixed and stable value, I would make it fundable at all times at a sufficient number of places, convenient to the people, in coupon or registered bonds of $50 and multiples thereof up to $10,000, bearing interest at 3.65 per cent., payable semi-annually, which bonds should be reconvertible into currency at the pleasure of the holder at every public depository. Thus I would have a currency better than a gold currency, unalterable in value, because founded upon wealth, power and property, together with all the gold and silver of the country, to keep it at a steady measure of value, to which all the property would soon accommodate itself, and ultimately the whole national debt would be brought home from abroad and funded into this national bond. This would give to America a non-exportable currency, better than any other, capable at all times of being invested at home at an equal rate of interest with the gold of the world, which is now in the best Government securities invested at an average of 3 per cent. only.

Let the Bond be Fulfilled.

John Sherman rules that, as he has sold seventy million dollars' worth of bonds for gold, they must be paid in gold, no matter what the bonds themselves say they are payable in. The contract for payment is a specific contract, and is plainly expressed on every bond. What a man buys his bonds with has nothing, in law, to do with what he agrees to receive in payment. John Sherman did not apply his present rule to the five-twenty bonds. They were made payable in "lawful money," and were bought with greenbacks, "lawful money." John Sherman's present rule would make them payable in greenbacks, even though the bonds said they should be payable in coin, for the Government sold them for greenbacks. They must be paid in money of the same kind of money for which they were sold, says the Secretary. The following tabular statement of the issue of bonds sold for greenbacks, and the gold value received for them, is in point:

	Bonds Issued.	Gold Value Received.
1862	$60,982,450	$44,630,549
1863	160,987,550	101,880,864
1864	381,292,250	159,227,669
1865	279,746,150	205,274,000
1866	124,914,400	89,391,775
1867	421,469,550	303,218,806
1868	425,443,800	312,126,322
Total	$1,874,836,150	$1,248,465,828

Here we have the amount of the robbery committed by the Coin act of March, 1869, in which Sherman aided and abetted. It is $626,370,322. The interest on the bonds was paid in gold. That is, the purchaser of the bond for $40, $50, or $60 could draw about 10 per cent. interest in lawful money on $100, and his bonds were exempt from taxation beside. It is high time for the people to say to the bondholder that he shall now have no more than is nominated in the bond. "Not a drop of blood." There shall be no repitetion of such robbery.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Veto.

We have been informed from day to day by the wise men in the East that the veto would come. The veto did come, was solemnly read, and the President heard something drop. Had he been intent or anxious to know the wants of the people who elevated him to power—to aid instead of embarrass them—he could have heard the voice, for it has not been whispered in a corner. And he will have in the future abundant opportunity to hear and understand it. The President speaks of "bad faith," and that the "standard of value should not be changed without the consent of both parties to the contract." The truth is, the bad faith was shown when silver was demonetized. There is small demand for the sympathy of the Executive for the other party, whose interest he appears so anxious to protect, for they have grown rich and proud and imperious. While commerce has been consumed, labor prostrated, and every interest beggared day by day and month by month, wealth has flown to the coffers of a few capitalists who to-day raise the howl of bad faith and broken pledges, which the President of the United States magnifies, and attempts to dignify, by supporting with his veto. The President has but a small conception of the deep feeling which pervades the country upon this subject. And we wish to assure him, and the gold aristocracy he so ably represents, that they are not only contending against the feelings, but also against the earnest opinions of honest men, who keep their pledges, fight the battles of the country, and are the source of its honor and its wealth. The redress they ask is not in "bad faith" or broken pledges, but a restoration of their rights and the privilege of living, without forever being within sight of the auctioneer and the terrors of bankruptcy. Congress, which is nearer the people than the President, and are responsible for the law, have taken the burden from his shoulders. If he had any desire to keep in sympathy with the people, he would have been wise to make no such test. The right to exercise the veto at any time is a doubtful prerogative. Upon a measure of this character, with a nation groaning under its burdens, it is an act showing cold blood, want of sympathy, justice or wisdom.

By this action the President has widened the breach between himself and the people, and struck a most disorganizing blow at the party that placed him in power. What the ultimate result may be is uncertain. For years the people had urged their complaints upon the authorities at Washington only to be ignored or jeered at. They became angered—well-nigh desperate. With stagnation in business, bankruptcy all about them, and financial embarrassment in almost every household—with the possibility of bread riots in the midst of plenty, they went into the silver fight determined to make their influence felt. The bitterness thrown into the contest by the gold-bugs has had no tendency to assuage their intense feeling, but rather to intensify and embitter it. Elated with victory, and assured of power, the popular tide may run far beyond what was at first dreamed of, and the bitter and unreasoning opponents of silver may find too late that having sown the wind the whirlwind will follow after. —Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Deadwood Turnout.

A traveler in Deadwood says that he saw such a picturesque turnout as this: "The half-breed horses in harness were shaggy, unkempt fellows; and the long-haired saddle pony, hitched to the rear of the wagon by a striped horse-hair lariat, tugged and pulled, now this way and now that, as though the experience was a new one to him. Upon the wagon was a pile of elk, deer and antelope; while from on top, and frowning down upon you was the ugly mug of a grizzly." The driver "sat with careless ease and grace, using Bruin's broadside for a seat; one leg crossing the other; a shapely little moccasined foot resting upon the side of the wagon box; one gloved hand holding the lines, and the other caressing the polished barrel of a revolver." This attractive person was a young woman of the following description: "Rather small of size, with an exquisitely rounded and beautiful figure, showing to advantage in the soft, ornamented buckskin suit. The face was one hard to describe; it might belong to a well-developed beardless youth, or in other garments and places to a comely lass of 20 years. In the finely-rounded outlines, ripe red lips and dimpled chin lurked a suspicion of femininity which was heightened by the big brown eyes and the long lashes which swept the cheeks, which were as brown as a scout's." She said she was from Chicago, and had settled with her father near Deadwood.

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

Speech of Ex-Gov. Hendricks Before the Indiana Democratic Convention.

One of the Louisiana criminals has been tried and convicted. The President and John Sherman say he should not have been tried. Why not? His guilt and that of others is shown by the verdict. It is a high crime against the nation, and threatening the stability of free institutions. What are the relations between the President and Mr. Sherman and the accused that authorize or permit an effort on their part to influence judicial proceedings in a State court? After a long and terrible contest it is settled that State elections and State Legislatures must be free from military influence and control; so, also, it must be understood that the President and his Cabinet cannot, directly or indirectly, interfere with judicial proceedings under State authority. The State courts must be [illegible] and independent of Federal control, except where the constitution and laws give the Federal judiciary an appellate supervision. It is to be regretted that the acts developed upon the trial are of such a character as to create anxiety on the part of the President and any of his Cabinet, but they cannot avoid the effect upon the public mind of an exhibition of that authority, and of unseemly denunciation of the State authorities. Whilst it is true that the title of Mr. Hayes to the office of President, and of Mr. Wheeler to the office of Vice President, has been settled under the solemn forms of law, and whilst it is our duty, in my judgment, to recognize the title because it is in the interest of the public stability and tranquility to do so, it is none the less true that an imperative duty demands that fitting punishment should be visited upon the public criminals through whose flagitious crime that judgment was obtained. Because a judgment is final and conclusive forms no reason why immunity should be secured to the criminal through whose perjury it was obtained. If this is true of a simple property judgment rendered in a court of law, much more is it true of a monstrous crime against the election sovereignty of a nation. The very fact that it was successful furnishes the strongest reason why the condign punishment of the perpetrators should cover it with perpetual infamy, and manifest to all future conspirators against the liberties of the nation the danger of attempting its repetition.

Since the inauguration of President Hayes I have regarded repeal as hopeless. He was pledged to resumption. If John Sherman, at the head of the treasury, holds the position, he will enforce the strictest and hardest execution of the law, and it is understood that any bill to repeal the clause will now be vetoed. I have heretofore said that, in my belief, the Resumption law has been the source of the greatest calamity to the business interests and property of the country. It has had the effect of causing men to hoard greenbacks and the banks to withhold and withdraw their circulation in the fear of being crushed by a forced redemption in gold. A favorable foreign trade has promoted a return to specie payment, and, if balances shall continue in favor, I expect to see our paper at par with gold at an early day. Will the restoration of silver money mitigate the evils of contraction caused by the Resumption law? That is now the hope of the business men of Indiana. It is not as cheap money that the people demand its restoration, but as a legal-tender coin contemplated by the constitution. When restored it will become again a standard and measure of value. Before its demonetization, silver was at par with gold, and, when restored, I think, will rise again to the same level. I need hardly say to you that the value of any class or description of property greatly depends upon the important uses to which it may be applied. Silver was money. They stripped it of its most important use, and now say that it is worth 8 per cent. less than before, and, therefore, it cannot be good money. Is that a fair argument? As a material for the manufacture of ware, silver will have only the values which that use can give it, but when stamped with the quality of money, and made legal tender for the payment of all classes of indebtedness, it becomes the active agent of trade and commerce, measures values and discharges debts, and in such use becomes correspondingly more important to society and more valuable. Were gold stripped of the quality of money, what would be the effect upon its value? I do not believe the pennyweight of gold in the beautiful wine-cup is as useful to society nor as valuable as the same weight of gold in the stamped coin which does its busy work in the channels of trade, and the demonetization of gold would demonstrate that fact.

I have heretofore said that silver has become an important product of this country, and recognize it as a money-medium of exchange. I cannot see why we should not utilize our large product of that metal to the greatest extent that may be found practicable. Its value as money to this country is too great to be thrown away. Should experience prove that because of the increased production of silver there will be a permanent and important difference between silver and gold, Congress is clothed with ample power to provide the proper and adequate remedy.

It is objected to the restriction of silver money that it will be in bad faith toward the public creditors. If I thought that possible I would not favor restriction, however important to our interests I might esteem it. My judgment is so entirely satisfied that I have no anxiety upon that question. The question is settled by the fair reading of the Public Credit act of 1869, and the Refunding act of 1870. At the date of the former act it was lawful to pay the 5-20 bonds in treasury notes, but it was contended that, because of the circumstances attending the creation of the debt, it would not be proper to so construe the laws, and that payment ought not to be made in paper. To remove the doubt and settle all controversy the act was passed. It pledged the faith of the United States to payment in coin. I opposed the measure in the Senate, and said its effect would be to make the law to read that the debt shall be paid in coin. The bill passed and became a law. Thereupon the debt became payable only in coin; not in gold coin alone, but in silver coin as well, for the silver dollar was then a part of the coin of the country, honored in law and commerce as gold. Next came the law of July 14, 1870, to refund the national debt. That act provided for the issue of new bonds to the amount of $1,500,000,000, bearing 4, 4½ and 5 per cent. interest. The bonds so to be used were to be exchanged for the outstanding 5-20 bonds, par for par, or sold for coin, and the proceeds were to be used in redeeming the 5-20 bonds. In the first section of the law it was provided that the new bonds should be made redeemable in coin at present standard value. The law, gentlemen, had no uncertain meaning. The new bonds were to be substituted for all the outstanding 5-20 bonds. They were to be sold for coin, and it was to be made a part of their language that they shall be redeemable in coin of the present standard value. My views on this subject were recently considered of sufficient importance by a distinguished citizen of New York to call for a review and answer by himself. He had unquestionably given the phraseology of the laws relating to the bonds a closer study than I had, for it was in the line of his business and of his profits. I had examined these laws with no professional or business purpose, but only as a citizen interested in the financial policy of the Government. He found it useful to his argument to show, if possible, that the law under which the public debt was being refunded required the bonds to be paid in gold. He used this language: "Yet I am supported by the opinion of illustrious lawyers in the land, that gold payments of the debt are required and assured by the Refunding act of 1870 itself, which, indeed, mentions 'coin' in its first section, but then in the fifth section, to carry out the act, excludes silver, and specifically commands the Secretary of the Treasury to receive only gold coin as the coin of deposit and payment." I am sure it will astonish you, after hearing this passage read, to learn that the fifth section has nothing whatever to do with the provisions and sales of the new bonds. It provides for this and no more: That the Secretary of the Treasury might for two years receive gold on deposit, and issue gold certificates bearing a low rate of interest, and that the deposit might be withdrawn at any time after thirty days upon ten days' notice, and that 25 per cent. should be retained in the treasury to pay the certificates and residue used to redeem the 5-20 bonds. I was criticised by this gentleman for using the words "gold" and "coin" as synonymous in a public speech, yet to maintain his argument he asks that it be believed that coin and gold coin are loosely used in the same sense in different sections of one of the most important laws of the United States. Gold certificates were to issue only upon gold deposits, but in the second section the bonds were to sell for coin, and in the first section they were to be redeemable in "coin of the present standard value." The solemn assurance given by that law to the public creditor was, that the bonds issued under it should be redeemable in gold and silver of the weight and fineness then fixed by law.

Upon this subject I have no new opinions to express. In my letter accepting the St. Louis nomination for Vice President I said, "Gold and silver are the real standard of value;" and, indeed, I would rejoice if our supply of the precious metals were sufficient for the wants of our trade and commerce; but we all know that it is insufficient, and we also have a [illegible] the policy of a forced resumption of specie payments based upon contraction by withdrawing the treasury notes from circulation. The treasury note has been a safe currency, and the people have had confidence in it, and have not asked for its redemption while it is a safe currency. It is also a cheap currency, in the sense that it does not represent an interest-bearing obligation of the Government. In that respect and in the respect that it is a legal tender it is a better currency than the national-bank note. Because of these views I have urged the repeal not only of the Resumption clause, but also of the provisions that sought to substitute banknotes for outstanding treasury notes.

No higher duty rests on the legislators of this country than the prompt and final settlement of the financial questions upon a right and permanent basis. From the farm, and the shop, and the market-place there comes the earnest appeal for a final decision that as far as may be finance may be taken from politics, so that under a stable adjustment confidence and prosperity may return to every interest.

A Fighting Mouse.

Mr. W. Kirkpatrick, of Anna, Ill., keeps quite a large number of snakes, which he captured in various parts of the country, among them a number of rattlesnakes. One day he determined to try how a mouse diet would agree with his serpentine pets, and placed a lively mouse in one of his boxes, containing three rattlesnakes. To his surprise he found, on visiting the boxes after a little while, that the mouse had attacked and killed one of the rattlesnakes, and had actually begun to eat it, the flesh being entirely gone from one side of the snake's head and neck, and the bones exposed. The two remaining rattlesnakes evidenced by their movements the terror which they felt toward their little enemy, whose every move caused them to display intense fear.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East Indian missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthama, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for general debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. The receipt will be sent free of charge, to all who desire it, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Address with stamp naming this paper, Dr. J. C. Stone, 44 North Ninth Street, Philadelphia Pa.

Positively the Best.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound is the very best compound ever prepared, advertised, or sold by any person, or under any name or under any name whatever, for the immediate relief and permanent cure of coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough, bronchitis, asthama, and all diseases of a consumptive type. It will thorouhly eradicate these alarming symptoms in one half of the time required to do so by other medicine. It is purely vegetable, and contains not a particle of opium or other dangerous drug. It never fails. Every bottle guaranteed to perform exactly as represented.

Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup is perfectly safe. Extremely palatable. No physic required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

A Gentle hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is no wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing consumption, hemorrhages, pneumania, severe coughs, croup or any diseases of the throat or lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and villiage on this continent. Sameple bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

NO PEOPLE IN THE WORLD

suffer as much with Neuralgia or Rheumatic complaints as Americans, and no nation is so prolific in remedies to cure, yet we come in contact every day with scores who are suffering without having found the cure they have sought for. To those who have used

Lawson's Curative

we need only to say that it is compounded with the same scientific skill and care as heretofore, and maintains the deserved reputation which it has acquired by the wonderful cures it has performed. To those who have never tested the CURATIVE we urge a trial of its virtues for the diseases named below. !

Eminent and Skillful Physicians use the CURATIVE largely in their practice, and prominent clergymen and editors recommend it from a knowledge of its effects.

Rheumatism, Diphtheria,
Dyspepsia, Sciatica,
Neuralgia, Toothache,
Pleurisy, Sore Throat,
Swollen Joints, Chilblains,
Headache, Sprains,

From our own correspondent.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTH DAY, "BIG BLUNDERS," FASHIONS,

&c. &c.

NEW YORK March 8th, '78.

I shall begin my letter this time as far back as Washington's birth day—a quiet holiday but still some show of patriotism. Not for many years had Washington's birth day been celebrated in New York in so limp, so dolorous a fashion as it was this year. The day was a good illustration of the power which is exercised over mankind by that mighty, though apparently so trivial agency, the weather. Though there is no doubt that the observance of this somewhat great national holiday is sadly falling into desuetude every year, there would have been still some show of festivity and jollification had the day only been ordinarily fair. But when it rains all day long on every shivering wretch who stray out of doors, then indeed must there be an amount of patriotism, to infuse spirit and glory into such a day. Indeed it was a limp celebration, limp like the flapping umbrellas, which were beaten about by sudden gusts of wind, looking in sympathy with the few flags that hung their cold, shivering stars and stripes—limp like the people, who either dismally and disconsolately looked out of the windows and realized that they had better spend their holiday indoors, or when out, ran about frantically to get to the nearest shelter, where to dry their dripping clothes.

We were inspired with enough courage to take us to visit the lodging house for homeless boys on Rivington street, where an entertainment was given. This house is a branch of the children's aid society, and under very good management. It was a typical gathering of New York street Arabs. Few of them boasted the possession of a whole coat, and the majority were without any coat whatever. There were little bits of fellows, not over eight years old, and to see how they revelled in dancing singing and gymnastics was a treat in itself. There was comic songs by some of the boys; one performed some remarkable gymnastic feats, one of which consisted in brushing the hair on the back of his head with the sole of his foot; one made a very enthusiastic temperance speech on "All Tipsy But Me;" one little fellow sang "Ole Black Joe," and the boys aided him with a rousing chorus. A few evenings after this we had the pleasure of hearing Rev. DeWitt Talmadge on "Big Blunders." We started for the Tabernacle early in hopes of getting a good seat and found the house, which holds near six thousand, already well filled. The church however is built amphitheatral, so that all the seats are good, and you may consider yourself fortunate to get any without being choice. The man who has never made a mistake, said the lecturer, has not yet been born. If he had been born he would have died right away. The difference between success and non-success in life is whether or not we take advantage of the mistakes already made. The first blunder was born in Paradise, and the race has been prolific in blunders, personal, domestic, social, financial, political, ecclesiastical and national. Where is the man who never made a blunder? Generally by the age of thirty a man has decided upon his occupation. It is not so much what you do, if you only do it—how fortunate to be endowed with the great magnificent attribute of stick-to-it-iveness. Jack of all trades is master of none. Better have one great idea, than five hundred little ones. The second blunder Mr. Talmadge reverted to, was the indulgence of bad temper. Good humor will sell more goods. Nothing made a man more ludicrous as to lose his temper. Growl, Spitfire and Brothers would do but a poor business, while Merriman and Warmgrasp would make their fortune. Mr. Talmadge here entered into a humorous description of the troubles caused by slander and tattling discussions at sewing-societies and tea-fights, giving the male portion of the audience their dose too in regard to gossip. The next blunder was the sacrifice of ones business to amusement. He believes in outdoor exercise, and that it would improve morals and theology. He did not believe in the style of Christianity that would make a man's face a counter on which to measure religion by the yard, but too much amusement was ruinous. The fifth blunder was the formation of unfit marriages. "I shall have to stick to my notes now," said the lecturer—the audience appreciated the point, and answered in a roar of laughter. His advice to any one who had made a mistake of this kind, was to keep up their courage, and whistle most of the time, or in the words of the 14 verse of 16 chapter of Nice-demus, to "Grin and Bear it." There was no excuse for a man making a mistake in getting married, there was no excuse in him picking up a piece of flint and putting it so near his heart, when the world was so full of the real diamonds. (Applause.) The sixth and last blunder, was a life without enthusiasm, without which no man ever succeeded. The closing advice of the Brooklyn pastor was: Choose some one great occupation and God will give you success.

The Brooklyn Navy Yard next claims our attention, and a most interesting place it is. We experienced the disadvantage of being strangers in a strange place—and walked about two miles round the high stonewall which encloses it, before finding the gate where visitors are admitted. Here we were met by a stately looking sentinel in uniform, and carrying his gun. He directed us to an office near by, where we obtained "a pass," and went on our way rejoicing. We had gone but a short distance before we stopped with one accord, to exclaim—as ladies will—at sight of a full grown ship in the dry dock; said dry dock being about one hundred feet deep, and four hundred long, in which was a ship being repaired. But I despair of giving you any idea of the size and shape, much less the machinery for propelling one of these great vessels. The cost of this one being one million, cost of repairs, two hundred thousand. This yard seems to be a world of itself, or one grand curiosity shop. First we went on board the school ship, where we found four hundred apprentice boys, in training for the Navy, their training consists not only in learning to sail a ship, but to wash, cook, mend, make beds, &c., and very successful they are in the art of housewifery. We never saw a cleaner kitchen floor or bread box. Their wardrobes, or trunks, consisted of leather bags, which were piled away on shelves, and numbered. Their beds are swung to hooks on the ceiling. The officers, however, have small rooms and nicely furnished. We were attended in our visit by a captain, who showed us many curiosities from other countries, among which was water from China, which has been in the vessel eight years, and of which we drank with as much relish as if it was right from an American spring. We next went on board "A man of War," and saw the huge guns ranged all along the side, ready to send a shell or ball through the window into the enemies quarters. These ships are three and four stories high, and from two to three hundred feet long. Here we were invited a few steps further on, with the promise of being introduced to Satan, Lucifer, and Moloch. We went with a little fear and trembling, but were quite relieved to find they were only large shell guns, wicked looking indeed, but perfectly harmless in times of peace. Now one glimpse inside the beautiful Lyceum building, and we will away. This museum is one of the largest in this country, and contains every kind of curiosity from Neptune's punch bowl, and Egyptian Mummies, to stuffed animals, birds, &c. Time forbids us visiting the large machine shops, cooper, shops and building houses, but I will say, when you visit New York, don't fail to spend a day in the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Now that spring has come, you see fashion plates every where, and these beautiful days the streets are crowded, and shopping is the order of the day. We joined them yesterday, and made an interesting tour through the retail dry goods palaces. Saw the ready made suits at Stewart's, some of them new spring styles, and made of two kinds, either silk with novelty, or silk with cloth, silk and velvet &c. The most popular colors being, dark green prune, plum, stone, and black. Now we enter the street again. What we have aimed at, and all we have been able to obtain in our superficial glance has been a few of the more prominent phases of the street, all the episodes of a walk on Broadway could not possibly be dscribed in the space to which one article is limited. There are the show windows, which make a complete international exposition of industries, and it would be difficult indeed to think of anything that could not be bought on Broadway. If by any chance the rest of the city should be demolished, Broadway could supply the survivors with every luxury and necessary, from dinners at Delmonico's, to monkeys, from cashmere shalls to kitchen furniture, from silk stockings to refined lard. Taking the curious exhibits only, what a variety there are! Here is a little oyster saloon with two windows, one window is filled with moist dark green moss, upon which a stock of live frogs have flattened themselves. Underneath the sign of "Fried Frog's Legs," and just inside the shop, a glowing range and frying pan are ready to finish the business for the captives. In the other window several groups of lobsters have been made, by a few touches of paint, to resemble card and dinner parties, with such designs we wonder why it is not oftener used in this lying world. Around another window a crowd are watching a bulbous head child, who is demonstrating the action of a patent swing, called the "Baby Walker." Next door an athletic salesman is exhibiting an adjustable chair, and a little lower down the street the attraction is a hive of uncomfortable looking bees, which are sailing in and out among the crowd and making honey for a summer drink, disposed by their owners at 5 cents a glass. Here a toy shop window has been converted into a minature lake, upon which tiny steamboats are puffing about, and there a little girl is fingering a piano like machine, which obviates the use of a pen in writing. Then comes the hair dressers window, with a life sized head combed in the latest twist, finished on top with three or four puffs and scallops or frizzes round the face. Another has the hair in a long slim net at the back, but still finished on the top with puffs. Next is a fashionable millinery shop, where the new spring styles are out, the most popular being a small, light frame, consisting of a band on top and one behind, leaving the hair out in the back. The frame is covered only with flowers and leaves, a lace curtain finishes the edges, something altogether new and already very popular. But here we are at Macy's, we have to go inside of this large establishment to see, as he has no window decorations. Here you find everything and it seems everybody, everything from a cooking stove or lemon squeeser to ear rings and gold tooth-picks, also refreshments. The clerks, cash boys and girls are all dressed in uniform, gray cloth braided with red. One noticable feature of Macy's goods is, that every article is marked at an odd figure, for instance, what you find elsewhere for 50 cents, they will have for 49 cent, and a $10 dollar stove will be marked $9.99, picture frames 99 cents and so on through the whole, according to the old saying, "A penny saved is two pence gained." Macy's is the place to go. The new dress goods are beautiful. Summer Camel's hair, almost as thin as grenadine, and smoothly woven in straight threads, is sure to be popular. Really handsome goods are sold at fifty and seventy-five cents per yard, and will combine nicely with silk. Among the novelties in silk, we find the "Jasper" silk, which are glossy, with here and there several colors combined, small specks and spots of brightest colors. Cashmeres are always stylish. New trimmings in fringes and galloon are beautiful. Polonaise are still worn, but overskirts with vest front and cutaway jacket long behind are most stylish. Kilt plaited skirts, with jacket or blouse waist, no over skirt, but wide sash are trying to come in, but not very popular.

THLIDIC.

Brick Pomeroy has at last done one thing that meets with the cordial approbation of the Argus. He has formally left the Democratic party. If he had done so years ago the party would have one less demagogue, shyster and fraud in its ranks, and it would have enjoyed a proportionately greater amount of respect from all honest men. Brick goes to the Nationals and hopes that his paper will become their leading organ.—LaPorte Argus.

We fully agree with our contemporary's general estimate of the notorious Brick, but the statement he has joined the "Nationals," is not quite correct. It is true, Brick attended the Toledo convention, but when he found that he could not be its highcockolorum, he turned his back upon the new born party and is now clamorous for a pure and unadulterated Greenback party which favors the immediate withdrawal of the Government Bonds and the issue of an unlimited amount of irredeemable greenbacks. And he wants it distinctly understood that of such a party he must be the recognized leader and that every member must be a subscriber to his blatherskite organ.—Ligonier Banner.

To all of which we freely, cheerfully and feelingly subscribe.

A MODERN COQUETTE.

BY CONSTANCE STERLING.

Don't toss them all about so, Sue,
 You know they're very dear to me;
Of course that ring is known to you;
 'Tis the one I had from Harry Lee.

Engagement? Yes, of course, you goose!
 I wore that ring three years ago.
I know I played him fast and loose,
 And—that bud is from poor Charley Snow.

He gave it to me at the ball,
 I sighed, he said some foolish things.
I didn't care for him at all—
 But, Sue, how well he plays and sings?

And all the girls were crazy—there!
 Pull out that little blue rosette;
It's tied with Joseph Stacey's hair
 Poor boy! he wasn't in our set.

I know I acted like a dunce,
 I met him twice in the park;
He kissed me, mind you, only once,
 And then it happened to be dark.

Poor Joe, he went to India, since
 I was quite ill with vague regret,
He wrote to ask me for my hand,
 And said he never should forget.

That picture is of Willie Lane,
 I met him at the Sulphur Springs.
I'll never see him, Sue, again,
 Ah, flirting often sorrow brings.

That locket was from Ned O'Hare,
 Dear me, but didn't he look blue
When I told him I didn't care
 For him! You should have seen him, Sue.

That book was from poor Harry Hays,
 I shouldn't keep it, Sue, of course,
For it makes me brood o'er those sad days,
 And fills my heart with vain remorse.

That bracelet and that pretty book
 Were both from handsome Philip Roe,
I was then engaged to Lawrence Cook,
 And had to tell poor Philip "No."

That photo? Which one do you mean?
 This one of Stacey? O, that other;
Sue, your jealousy turns you green,
 Why, girl, the man is like my brother.

She's gone! I suppose she's in deep despair.
 Goodness! how she slammed the door!
Well, let her go, I do not care;
 I'll only flirt with George the more.

Her lover! well, what of that?
 He gave his picture just in fun,
If she bows I mean to "cut her flat."
 I really can't see what I've done.

CONCERNING A CERTAIN PRODIGAL.

BY CAPT. HENRY KING.

The first time I encountered the late Noah Babbitt, journeyman printer, he struck me, as they say on the frontier, for a loan of two dollars. It was in the sanctum of the Commonwealth newspaper at Topeka. He had drifted in from his habitual wanderings only the day before, and been put on as a "sub," with the customary promise of "regular cases" as soon as a vacancy should occur. This particular night he was not at work; and after the last of the loafers had gone, and while I sat running my pencil over a delayed proof hurriedly, and vexed with the heat and the buzzing of insects about the lamp-shade—it was a feverish August night, I remember, with not air enough to disturb the exchanges lying loosely in the open window—he tapped me familiarly on the shoulder and said:

"Cap., that leader of yours yesterday on the labor question was an awful good thing; you sounded the key-note, and I want to congratulate you."

Thereupon we shook hands with extravagant warmth, though with a reservation of mutual distrust, I think, and then we fell to talking on a variety of topics, ranging from pauperism to the doctrine of the atonement, in that candid, positive and encyclopedic, but picturesque and superficial, style common to newspaper offices the world over. So much did the fellow interest me, that, weary as I was with the night's work, I found myself, after two hours, still patiently listening to him, as the town clock struck 4 in the morning. In spite of my first instinctive misgivings, he made me like him. He seemed so frank and self-confident, so observant, so quick-witted, and so heroically contented; and then, did he not fill every lull in the conversation with a flattering reference to my editorials? Ah, right well he knew, the calculating wretch, that he, too, had sounded a key-note with that introductory congratulation! But it was not until after we had finished our talk, and I was ready to leave him, that he asked me—I hardly know how, it was done so dexterously—to favor him with a "couple of dollars, till Saturday." Of course he got it, though I needed not to be told that with the borrowing printer "till Saturday" is a measure of time that spans eternity; and then he walked with me, arm-in-arm, to the Old Crow saloon, where he would not permit me to avoid joining him in a glass of ale, and, as I turned to go, I saw him hand my $2 bill over the bar with an air of complacency that really touched me like a personal kindness.

After this we were frequently together, and came to be quite cordial, not to say confidential, in our relations. Every night, almost, when I was waiting for the cabalistic "30" that ended the telegraphic news report, or after the final proofs had been corrected and the compositors had "pasted their strings," he would come slipping into my room with that soft, considerate tread peculiar to printers, when entering an editorial sanctum, and we would talk there all alone as at our first meeting, or, if the weather was pleasant, would go forth into the night and walk the broad, smooth streets till the moon went down. My friend was a confirmed "bannerite," as the printers term it—a careless, shiftless, strolling vagabond, here to-day and there to-morrow, without home or kindred, and treating life as a farce full of amusing checks and balances, with death closing it all, at last, in a kind of unguessed conundrum. He had walked thousands of miles over the country. He always walked when he traveled. "I get sea-sick on the cars," he said to me once with a grim smile; and then he added, slowly and in a shrinking tone, "makes my feet sore to ride, too." During the previous year he had "made the tour of Canada," as he phrased it; thence to Boston, New York, Charleston, New Orleans, and up the Mississippi to St. Louis, and then across Illinois and Iowa, and finally to Topeka. He had not worked over a week in any one place, nor rode a mile on the whole journey. "A hankerin' for scenery," was the reason he gave me for this extended ramble. And surely he had not been blind to the shifting delights of sky and sea and the towering forest which had opened out before him in unrolling picture. Nor had he failed, vagabond-like, to note the peculiar and varying types of the different peoples among whom his travels had led him; for he had a keen insight, and detected a flaw of a foible of character as if it had been a bourgeois letter in a line of nonpareil. He was better than a book to me, since he read himself and turned his own leaves; and I grew to look forward all the day to his coming nightly visit with impatient eagerness. No doubt he lied to me many times and scandalously, for he was mortal and not wholly without egotism; but he did it, when he deemed it advisable, in such a large, overcoming, cliff-like way, that it was almost as good as the truth. Where there is so much to interest, says some generous philosopher, there must yet be something to pardon.

Why the boys in the office called him "Old Noah" I could never quite make out. Perhaps it was because he had traveled so far and seen so much that his life seemed to them to have been projected forward, somehow, faster and farther than the years counted. Or, it may have been that his supreme indifference to all the alert and urging elements of every-day life gave to him, in their estimation, something of the leaning and waiting spirit of one aged before his time. Certainly he bore no physical signs of being an old man. He stood erect, lacking even the depression of chest that is characteristic of his craft; his eyes were full, clear and steady; and the slight touch of silver in his whiskers made his face stronger rather than weaker. He could not have been more than 40; he might easily have passed for 35. The oldest thing about him was his costume. That was always and conspicuously in the pathetic second childhood of decay, and always, too, out of harmony with the prevailing weather, thus appearing to have been left over from the preceding season. The summer that I saw so much of him he wore a heavy, dingy beaver-cloth coat, usually buttoned to the chin with clerical exactness—too often, I apprehend, only to hide the want of a shirt; and he declared to me with every indication of truth that a pair of brown cotton overalls had served to temper the bitter Illinois wind to his shuddering frame through the previous winter.

"The peacock is a pretty bird," he remarked to me once, casually discoursing upon this matter of apparel, "but it doesn't count; with all its gaudy feathers, it can't sing worth a cent. It looks well, but its music is the most abominable noise I ever heard, and I have boarded in a house where they kept a melodeon," he added, with a conclusive toss of the head.

Like most printers, "Old Noah" was a good deal of a cynic, though his cynicism was so closely woofed with a subduing sincerity that it was very difficult, frequently quite impossible, to tell where the one left off and the other began. As I have said, he looked upon life as a play, and he was fond of reciting Shakspeare's "Seven Ages" in support of this idea. "It's all right," he would argue, "as long as you don't care. That's the whole secret. Ignorance is bliss, oftener than we think. It's knowing too much that bothers people, and if you're bothered you can't enjoy the show, don't you see? It isn't altogether unlikely, let me tell you, that a well-behaved dog, asleep in the sun and sure of a bone for his dinner, isn't better off than we are, with all our wisdom, and all our doubts." And yet he reverenced wisdom, I am sure, and respected all honest opinions, and I think that, away down in his heart, lurked a quiet faith in the saving power of virtue; but I doubt if he believed very much in the naked moral strength of human nature. I know he once sorely tried my patience in that regard. I was telling him how George Insley, known to us both as a hardened specimen of the printer-toper, had taken the pledge and was manfully keeping it; and after I had finished, with the assurance that Insley had not tasted liquor for nearly six months (he subsequently shot himself, poor fellow!), he dropped his head a moment, and then, looking up with an incredulous smile, said quietly:

"There was some truth in those 'Arabian Nights' stories, then, after all?"

Singularly enough, too, his skepticism was confined to his own sex; singularly, I say, for he was a man, you know, and not a woman. "It was Eve that the snake had to charm and betray," he was accustomed to put it; "Adam fell as a matter of course." This was a little sophistic, to be sure, as much of his logic was apt to be, but the sentiment of it was so knightly that it readily won him credit among his critical fellow-printers, even at the expense of some disloyalty to their own personal sense of masculine superiority.

He had been in love, once in his life, this tattered prodigal, and the venture had not been what could be called a complete success. He told me all about it, of his own accord, one restful night as we sat on the bridge at the foot of Kansas avenue, listening to the quiver of the cottonwood foliage, and watching the river slowly gather the shadows to its tawny bosom. He was religiously sober that night, for a wonder, and I felt that it must have been some subtle witchcraft of the atmosphere, rather than the few so-so remarks we had just been exchanging about Phil Reade's marriage with the winsome little singer, Minnie Beals, that so suddenly drew his eyes away from the water and out into the vague perspective beyond the opposite shore, and sent his thoughts backward with a bound, as it were, to the rich days when every sky was blue to him and every sound a rapture of harmony.

"She was a good, solemn girl," he began, "and I think her intentions were honorable all the time. I know, now, that she was not handsome, for her eyes were crossed slightly, and her cheekbones were high, and her chin had a retiring turn—the face didn't 'justify,' you understand—and her hair inclined to redness; but she was as beautiful to me, then, as a flower, and I loved her very dearly. I was holding the 'ad' cases on the Quincy Herald, in Illinois, at the time, and saving some money every week. I was expecting to be a man of family, you know. I had fixed in my own mind what kind of a house we would have, where we would buy our groceries, how the children would look and what we would name them (there were to be other things that I'm afraid a hundred of now. But it was all very real to me then, I tell you. Not that I ever spoke to Isabel—pretty name, wasn't it?—about such matters. Oh, no. We were a very sensible pair of lovers, I can assure you, and our courtship was painfully correct. There was none of the 'you bright orb' nonsense about us. We weren't a bit spooney. We didn't turn the light down, nor hold each other's hands, nor say 'darling.' Not any. Once, only once, I put my arm around her waist, and might have kissed her, may be, but she looked squarely into my face, and said, 'You forget,' and that was all there was of it. I used to wish, sometimes, that she would be a little more demonstrative—one gets tired of mere words, you know, in 'takes' of that kind—but, perhaps—perhaps it was better as it was."

He paused and pressed his hands to his forehead, as if he feared the sweet memory would slip away from him in his talk; and I sat waiting for him to proceed, busying myself meanwhile with thoughts of a certain June-cheeked Juliet to whom I had myself played Romeo, and whose half-forgotten image his idyl had strangely restored to me there in the pensive starlight.

"Well," he continued, directly, "we were very happy—too happy, Cap—too happy. If there hadn't been quite so much of it, it would have lasted longer, probably. The truth is, I was so happy that I had to do something to tone it down—to loosen the quoins, you might say—and I took to drinking like a fish. I couldn't have helped it to save my life. Perhaps if she had acted a little warmer toward me, and I could have caressed and kissed her—been a little more ambrosial, you understand—it would have made a difference with me. But I don't know—I don't know."

He relapsed into silence again, and there was only the dull fretting of the waters about the pier beneath us to disturb the stillness until, after several minutes, he resumed—rapidly, now, and with apparent anxiety to have done with the subject:

"She bore with it month after month, as patiently as a nun; but she couldn't stand it always, of course, and so she told me, at last, not in anger, nor bluntly, but with firmness, and yet sadly, I thought, that the time had come for us to part. It would have choked me to speak, even if speaking could have done any good, which it couldn't; so I simply took her hand a moment—it trembled, calm as she was—and, bowing, went away."

He paused once more, and I was upon the point of rising, supposing he had said all he desired to say, but he motioned me to remain, and went on talking. "After that I lay sick a long time—eight weeks they told me—with some infernal sort of fever, and the money I had saved went to the doctors. I pulled through, of course. 'Men have died, from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.' I don't know how it was, but when I got up again my brain seemed to be kind of incoherent—'pied,' you might say and I couldn't get steady work, and finally they began to whisper around about sending me to Jacksonville—that's where the crazy asylum is, you know. Then I braced up, and the first dark night I jumped the town without saying a blessed word to anybody, and since then—well, you know the rest, or a good deal of it. But you didn't know—you would never have guessed if I hadn't told you—that it was too much happiness made me what I am?"

With this last paradox, he turned partially aside, and I noticed that he was fumbling about his clothes as if in search of something—tobacco, I presumed. Presently he drew out from some inscrutable hiding-place an old creased and rumpled leather pocket-book, and took from it a faded sprig of cedar, and, handing it to me, said, with that glassy, cynical smile I had seen so often: "There's rosemary, that's for remembrance. Pray you, love, remember." Then he told me Isabel had given it to him once, standing by the gate, and that he had carried it through all the long years as a memento of her. When I reached it back to him, he put it away again in the wrinkled old pocket book as tenderly as if it had been a tress of hair from the head of a dead baby, and then, "I wonder if she ever thinks of me?" he said, quite seriously, and we walked leisurely up the long street together, neither of us speaking a word more until we came to the corner where we had to separate, and there we merely said "good-night," and parted.

I did not see him again for some time, and when, at length, he made me another visit, in the afternoon of a mellow October day, he informed me that he was about to leave the town. "Our planet is dropping into its annual shadow," he said, with mock gravity, "and I must hie me away to fresh fields and pastures new. I want to commune with Nature, you understand; to touch the earth, like Antæus; to eat haws, and smell the fall wheat; to mingle with the quails, and blue-jays, and woodpeckers, and all that sort of thing. Be good to yourself, Cap. Don't work too hard, and beware of the enemy which men put in their mouths to steal away their brains. By-by." And, before I had time to answer, he was out of my sight and shuffling down the stairs, leaving me in a mood that was nearer sadness than I would have cared to confess, and which, I fear, gave a downcast tinge to the Commonwealth's editorials for several mornings afterward.

He returned in about two weeks, strange to say, and he solemnly asserted that he had only been "looking for a homestead." He was jaded, footsore, and, as usual, a little shabbier than usual as to clothing. He had read, he said, in some real-estate paper, of a locality out in primeval Kansas where corn grew wild, and live stock waxed fat on the mere superabundance of ozone, and every quarter-section had been neatly fenced with stone by the geological convulsions of past ages; and he had been hunting for it, intending to enter a homestead in it and become a gentle shepherd. He couldn't find it, though; and now he wanted a few days' work "to replenish his depleted exchequer." But most of all, he said, he wanted to see the man who wrote those things he read in that paper.

The foreman found work for him in the job-room; but the next Saturday he left again, without even the formality of saying good-by to me. We heard of him, in a few days, cracking jokes with Noble Prentis of the Junction Union; then working a week for Milt Reynolds of the Parsons Sun; then in the calaboose at Fort Scott, and Web Wilder of the Monitor paying fines for him to keep him out of the chain-gang; and from Fort Scott he swung around, about the middle of December, to Topeka.

"Just glided in to pay my respects," he remarked, "and to tell you I'm off for the sunny South. I like your Kansas fellows ever so much, but I want to see the magnolias."

That was all he said. An hour later, happening to look from my window, I saw him moving briskly down the street, which was also the State road, and, waving his hand to me, he disappeared.

He came back again, with the grass and the birds, the following spring. He had been to Galveston, he explained, and had worked his way north through Arkansas and the Indian Territory. Somehow the trip seemed to have disappointed him. He talked gloomily about it, when I could get him to talk of it at all, and the very thought of it appeared to cloud his spirits like the haunting of some miserable dream. Perhaps the trouble was deeper than my shallow vision discerned; perhaps it came from within, and not from without at all. Sometimes I thought so; but, knowing him as I did, the absurdity of the thing would creep in to upset such notions. And finally, when he came to me one night, with the old familiar quizzical expression in his countenance, and told me he wanted to talk to me about writing an obituary for him when he should die, I felt sure that he was recovering himself and would soon touch his natural poise again.

"I hope you appreciate the honor I confer upon you," said he, "in selecting you to give me my final send-off. It's because I like your style; and I want you to tell just the barefooted facts about me—'nothing extenuate, nor aught set down in malice.' Don't speak of me as a 'brilliant, but erratic' fellow, for that will simply mean that I was an awful liar. Don't say of me, 'He had his faults, as who of us has not,' because that is merely a polite way of telling that the deceased was a drunken sot. And if I die of the jim-jams, as I probably shall, don't say it was apoplexy, or paralysis, but call it jim-jams, plain and simple; I'll feel better about it if you do. I suppose there are a few good things you can say of me. Say 'em as kindly as possible, please. And chuck in a little Shakspeare—if you can think of something to suit. Of course you can't say anything about where I've gone; we can't any of us figure much on that, you know,—everything's so mixed and uncertain over there. Genesis closes, you recollect, with a coffin."

Having thus bespoken my services, and indicated his preferences as to how the delicate task should be performed, he retired, humming to himself the breezy chorus of an old drinking song; and I thought but little, and that only in a ludicrous vein, of his singular request, until, some days afterward, they came and told me he was missing. Nobody knew when, or how, or why, he had departed. Evidently he had stolen off in the night, not wishing to speak of his plans, if he had any, for we learned on inquiry that he had even omitted to settle with his too indulgent landlady. But in his composing-stick, lying upon his case, he had left a line of type, which spelled these words: "Gone West, to grow up with the country."

I never saw him any more, and never heard from him until I chanced one day upon a fugitive notice of his death. He was discovered, the paper said, frozen stiff and stark, in the February snow and ice of a Minnesota prairie. Very oddly, it was a young lady who found him—some accidental Isabel, perhaps—and they took him into the nearest town on a wood-sled, the Coroner and a few others, and then, I suppose, they dug a hole for him in the numb earth and put him away.

Alas, you poor, queer, dead-and-gone prodigal, where be your gibes now? Was it fate, or but your folly, that beckoned you to an end so pitifully desolate? Did you meet death as you had confronted life, with that unflinching eye and that placid, masterful smile? And did they find, I wonder, in some whimsical recess of your ragged garments, a poverty-stricken old leather pocket-book, and a little sprig of faded cedar?

Here I might stop, content to let silence do the rest. But, recalling his injunction to "chuck in a little Shakspeare," and remembering, also, his skepticism and his waywardness, I deem it only meet and fair to add in his behalf that carefully charitable petition which the great monarch of thought puts into the King's mouth at the death-bed of Beaufort:

"Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!"

The Sovereigns of Christendom.

There are, at the present moment, thirty-six reigning sovereigns in Christendom, from the Queen of England, to whom 237,000,000 of human beings owe allegiance, to the Prince of Monaco, whom 5,742 subjects acknowledge as their liege lord. Of these Princes, ten are nominally Roman Catholic, namely, the Emperors of Austria and Brazil, the Kings of Italy, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Bavaria, Saxony, the Princes of Lichtenstein and Monaco. Of the remaining twenty-six, two belong to the Greek Church, though the Czar and the King of the Hellenes belong to different branches of it. The other twenty-four are Protestants, sixteen being called Lutherans, four (including the German Emperor) belonging to the "Evangelical" confession, three to the "reformed" church, and one being the "supreme head on earth" of the Church of England, but the vast majority of Queen Victoria's subjects (139,000,000) are neither Protestants nor Catholics, but Hindoos, while the Mohammedans, 40,000,000 in number, are themselves more numerous than the Protestants of all denominations in the empire.

Mrs. Lincoln.

It is a sad fact that Mrs. Abraham Lincoln, the widow of the late President Lincoln, is leading a secluded life in an interior town in France, and declines to return to America lest she may again be placed in a lunatic asylum. It is said that in France she still indulges, to a moderate extent, in her propensity for buying things for which she has no use, and filling closets with articles wholly unnecessary.—New York Star.

INTER-STATE COMMERCE.

The Bill to Regulate Inter-State Commerce and Prohibit Unjust Discrimination—Report of the House Committee.

The bill reported by the Committee on Commerce of the lower house of Congress for the regulation of inter-State commerce, and to prevent unjust discrimination as to freights, charges, and facilities by railroads and other common carriers, is accompanied by an elaborate report in favor of its passage. The report says among other things:

"When we consider the magnitude of the commerce of the United States, and the direct interest which the whole of our 45,000,000 people have in it, the broad extent of our country as compared with other commercial countries, and that its internal commerce carried by railroads alone is estimated at about $16,000,000,000 in value, while it is supposed our whole internal commerce amounts to not less than $25,000,000,000 in value, and when it is remembered that this commerce is carried on over 75,000 miles of railroad, and by steamboats and other vessels on our rivers, lakes, bays, and canals over a length of navigable waters probably exceeding half the length of all our railroads, the importance of the interest intended to be fostered and protected by this bill may be realized, and any measure which will materially benefit this vast commerce will not fail to be sensibly felt in relieving the country from its present financial and industrial embarrassments. The most of this commerce is now carried by railroads and other corporations, each having, to some extent at least, a monopoly of the carrying business over its particular route, but in most, though not in all instances, the evils which might result from these monopolies are mitigated by competing lines of communication. Each of these corporations, when not restrained by legislative authority, can discriminate in freight rates and charges in favor of and against whom they please, and may in this way benefit some persons and places, while they injure relatively other persons and places, as may suit their interests or inclinations. This, in fact, has been so often done with results so injurious to many as to call for the passage of some law to prohibit and punish such discriminations. One of the objects of the bill is to give an intelligible definition of what is to be considered inter-State freights and commerce; that is to say, property carried by railroads or other common carriers, which would include steamboats and all other water craft, when wholly or partly carried by such railroads or other common carriers as part of one continuous carriage from or to any foreign nation or country, from or into any State, or States, or Territory, or Territories of the United States, or in or through two or more States or Territories of the United States, or from within one State or Territory of the United States into or through one or more other States or Territories of the United States, and in order that the provisions of the act shall not be evaded or defeated it is provided that it shall be unlawful for such common carriers to make any combination, connection, contract, arrangement, or schedule, or to cause any delay in carriage, or to do any other act or thing with intent to prevent any such carriage from being one substantially continuous carriage; and it is provided that as to such carriages of property the freight rates, facilities and charges shall be equal to all shippers; and it is also provided that no more shall be charged for such inter-State or through freights than is charged for freight in any State through which they are passing, having reference to identity of time and similarity of freights and services, and that equal facilities shall be allowed to each. The bill also provides that as to such inter-State freights no more shall be charged for their carriage for a shorter than for a longer distance. In the competition of railroads especially, a practice is very general of charging very low rates for through freight on long roads and between remote centers of trade. These charges are often so low as to be unremunerative, and the competition for such freight is one of the fruitful causes of what has been called the railroad wars, which have often proved so injurious, not to say disastrous, both to the competing railroads and the commercial interests of the communities involved in them. The bill has for its object the correction of great and manifest abuses, and the prevention of unjust discriminations of common carriers against shippers who are entitled to equality of terms. It imposes no unjust or even inconvenient burdens on such common carriers. It does not attempt to regulate and fix a maximum or minimum of rates of freight and charges, or to deal in matters of detail as to transportation. The bill requires, among other things, that all persons or corporations engaged in business as common carriers shall keep posted in at least five places in every depot or station in every city or village, having a population of 1,000, through or to which thier lines may run, a detailed schedule of tariff rates, which schedule shall not be changed without five days' notice. The prohibitions against carrying freight at less than schedule rates are not to apply to Government business, or to the transportation of articles for public fairs or charitable purposes.

The committee quote authority to show that Congress has the power to enact such a law as they propose, and argue that, as Congress only can furnish the remedy for the evils cited, the time has come when this duty should be performed.

Japan.

A correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin maintains that, notwithstanding all the apparent reforms effected within the past few years in the empire of Japan, there is no genuine change in the character of the Government or of the people. "The Government," he says, "was always a cruel despotism, nor has its nature changed because it has changed hands. The liberal men who control the Mikado to-day may fall before the sharp knife of the assassin to-morrow, as others have done before them. The haughty samurai, so recently disarmed and thrown upon their own resources, are the same intrepid men, ready as ever to strike a blow for their lost prerogatives or to commit hari-kari."

WE don't believe in miracles; but the other day a deaf mute was given a hearing by a police magistrate.

"AN' sure, it's aisy enough to build a chimley," said O'Rourke; "ye howld one brick up, an' just slip another one under it."

JUST before Alphonso took to himself a Queen, one of his courtiers wanted to make Alph-a-bet that he was A-B-C-cher of her heart.

JOAQUIN MILLER is writing a play with a cannibal for a hero. It is to be hoped that he will fully enter into his subject.—Lowell Courier.

AN old salt, sitting on a wharf the other day, very soberly remarked, "I began the world with nothing, and I have held my own ever since."

THE best way to prevent apples from rotting is to put them in a warm, dry cellar, and let a family of fifteen children have free access to them every day.

UPRIGHT legislator—"What, sir! You take me for one who can be bribed? You insult my sense of honor; but, in case I were such a man, how much would you give me?"

VERY few men get all the good gifts of this life. When the Prince of Wales makes a speech he talks through his nose and thumbs the lapels of his coat just the same as a common man.—Breakfast Table.

WHAT a beautiful example of simplicity in dress is shown some followers of the fashion by that domestic animal, the cat, which rises in the morning, washes its face with its right hand, gives its tail three jerks, and is ready dressed for the day!

HE was so drunk that he could not walk, could scarcely move, and hardly articulate. A friend of his came up and upbraided him. "If I were in your place," said his friend, "I'd go out in the woods and hang myself." "If (hic) you were (hic) in my place, how (hic) the deuce (hic) would you get to (hic) the woods?" was the squelching inquiry.

THEY were sitting together, and he was arduously thinking what to say when finally he burst out in this manner: "In this land of noble achievements and undying glory, why is it that women do not come more to the front and climb the ladder of fame?" "I suppose," said she, biting her apron-string, "it's on account of their pull-backs."

SIGNS OF SPRING.

Potato bugs are budding out,
 We see the hoppers' fitful gleam,
And now the coy and toothsome trout
 Cavorts within his native stream;
And now the bluebird chants a lay—
 And robins twitter in the trees—
The bullfrog's murmurs, all the day,
 Come floating on the balmy breeze;
The ground-hog issues from his hole,
 And bruggers on the corn, poor thing—
These omens to the poet's soul
 Are harbingers of early spring.

MISS ALICE WALTON, of Muscatine, Iowa, collected over a thousand specimens of butterflies last year. As Alice turns over the leaves of her scrap-book and feasts her eyes upon the fruits of her industry, how much more happy and serene the fleet-footed lass will feel than if she had squandered her time in pounding the piano, wearing out some young man's coat-sleeve and gorging herself with ice-cream at his expense till poverty stepped in and crushed all hope of matrimony.—Breakfast Table.

SUNDAY READING.

The Consecrated Will.

Laid on Thine altar, oh! my Lord divine,
Accept my gift this day, for Jesus' sake;
I have no jewels to adorn Thy shrine,
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make—
But here I bring, within my trembling hand,
This will of mine—a thing that seemeth small,
But only Thou, dear Lord, canst understand
How, when I yield Thee this, I yield mine all.

Hidden therein, Thy searching eye can see
Struggles of passion, visions of delight;
All that I am, or love, or fain would be,
Deep love, fond hope, or longings infinite.
It hath been wet with tears and dimmed with sighs,
Clenched in my grasp till beauty it hath none;
Now from Thy footstool, where it vanquished lies,
The prayer ascendeth, "May Thy will be done."

Take it, oh Father! ere my courage fail,
And merge it so in Thine own will, that e'en
If in some desperate hour my cries prevail,
And Thou giv'st back my gift, it may have been
So changed, so purified, so fair have grown,
I may not know or feel it as my own;
So one with Thine, so filled with peace divine,
But gaining back my will may find it Thine.

Time—Eternity.

To man, time is for sowing seed, while eternity is for reaping the harvest. An inch of time is given us here to decide whether we shall spend our eternity in endless weeping, or in supernal bliss. A pious life, however short, is followed by an eternity of joy. A wicked life, however long, is followed by an unending existence in every part of which a man wishes that he had never been born. No man ever had an adequate conception of the variety and brevity of our earthly life. No man ever had an adequate conception of the vastness and grandeur of a happy eternity. If I only knew how a man lived, I could easily tell how he died.—S. S. Times.

"A Lamp to My Feet."

This is what David called the Bible. Not a light up in the sky, like the sun—which shines on everybody, whether they want it or not—but a light that we must take in our hands, and trim, and carry with us wherever we go; a light for everyday life, and that we must be always throwing upon the steps of that life. We can't get enough Bible on the Sabbath to last all the week, or enough in the morning to last all the day. No; we must take it with us—in our memories and in our hearts—wherever we go. We must apply its principles to every new emergency. We must obey its precepts at all times. Thus only can we ever "walk in the light," and find our path shining more and more unto the perfect day.

He "Calleth for Thee."

When Jesus had come from "beyond the Jordan" to Bethany, "glad" for the sake of his disciples that he was not present at the death of his friend, so that he might wake him out of sleep in their presence, and when he had come into the suburbs of the village and near to the grave, Martha sent to the contemplative Mary, still sitting among her friends "in the house," saying, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." And at once the question arises in our minds, Why? Why was it that Jesus did not hasten on and raise the dead man, and then lead him to the house, a grand surprise to the sorrowing sister?

We think that we know the reason. It was not the custom of the Lord Jesus—it would not have been consonant with the grand purpose of his mission to earth—to do his great deeds in secret. He must have witnesses; and when practicable, and just so far as practicable, human agencies must co-operate with the divine power. At all events, the works of Jesus were not to be done in secret, not unknown to those most interested in them. Lazarus could not be raised from the dead while "Mary sat still in the house."—Herald and Presbyter.

Stand By Your Colors.

When you join a church, you should calculate to stand by your colors. What is a soldier good for who drops out of the ranks, or skulks, or runs, the moment the cause is in peril? What is a church member worth who becomes invisible just when his services could be of some value? If you are in a large church where workers are abundant, you may without harm keep modestly in the background; but, in case the ranks are thin, your response should ring out at every roll-call. As a Christian soldier, you have enlisted for the war; how can you settle it in the court of conscience that you are delinquent in the breach? What good opinion can you have of yourself, if, when in a large church, you press your way to the front ranks and seek promotion, and then when your lot falls among small people, who really need your help, you keep your letter in your pocket or pass it over to some other denomination which happens to be larger or more popular than your own? That course is a sad commentary on your religion. But we fear it is a true history of many a sham professor. If they are not deserters from the ranks, they are shirks and pretenders, and, as such, a source of positive weakness to any body to which they belong.—Zion's Herald.

The Psalms of David.

Among all compositions these alone deserve the name of sacred lyrics. These alone contain a poetry that meets the spiritual nature in all its moods and all its wants, which strengthens virtue with glorious exhortations, gives angelic eloquence to prayer, and almost rises to the seraph's joy in praise. In distress and fear they breathe the low sad murmur of complaint; in penitence they groan with the agony of the troubled soul. They have a gentle music for the peace of faith; in adoration they ascend to the glory of creation and the majesty of God. For assemblies or for solitude, for all that gladdens and all that grieves, for our heaviness and despair, for our remorse and our redemption, we find in these divine harmonies the loud or the low expression. Great has been their power in the world. They resounded amidst the courts of the tabernacle; they floated through the lofty and solemn spaces of the temple. They were sung with glory in the halls of Zion; they were sung with sorrow by the streams of Babel. And when Israel had passed away, the harp of David was still awakened in the church of Christ. In all the eras and ages of that church, from the hymn which first was whispered in an upper chamber until its anthems filled the earth, the inspiration of the royal prophet has enraptured its devotions and ennobled its rituals. And that has been not alone in the august cathedral or the rustic chapel. Chorused by the winds of heaven, they have swelled through God's own temple of the sky and stars; they have rolled over the broad desert of Asia in the matins and vespers of 10,000 hermits; they have run through the deep valleys of the Alps in the sobbing voices of the forlorn Waldenses; through the steeps and caves of the Scottish Covenanters; through the woods and caves of primitive America in the heroic hallelujahs of the early Pilgrims.—Scottish American.
